MACARTHUR HUNTS JAPAN'S STOLEN WEALTH

Three Youths Held On Charges Over Leaside Robbery

Three Men Are Charged With Frisking of Club

Toronto, Oct. 1 (CP)—Three 20-year-old youths, arrested in Bowmanville, Ontario, Saturday night, appeared in County Court today and were remanded until Oct. 9 on charges arising from a $12,000 armed holdup of a Royal Bank branch in suburban Leaside last Sept. 26.

The three, who attempted to avoid capture at Bowmanville, were John Little, Montreal; Walter Mishko, Buffalo, N.Y., and Victor Wazany, Brampton, Ont. Bail was refused.

The charge was that the three, "along with persons unknown, and armed with revolvers and tommy guns" robbed the Leaside bank.

Police have recovered some of the money taken in the robbery. It was reported they found $1,000 but this was not confirmed.

Others Charged in Club Robbery

Developments in the holdup of 75 men at the Atlas Club in Toronto, Saturday also came today, when three men were charged in police court with armed robbery and remanded to Oct. 9.

The three were Samuel Deniluck, 34; Steven Motozuik, 27, and Gordon Turner, 22. They were arrested during the weekend in raids on some houses. Three other men are sought.

The gang of masked bandits who held up the Social Club escaped with more than $2,000 in cash and jewelry. In the raids on the houses police said they found two revolvers, 12 watches, 20 wallets and a number of black masks.

Police said that Doniluck when arrested was out on $5,000 bail on a charge of shooting with intent at a police officer at Barrie, 55 miles north of here, and with having offensive weapons in his possession.

The trio charged in connection with the Leaside bank robbery were stopped in Bowmanville Saturday night by Police Chief Sidney Venton and Provincial Constable Gordon Broughton. One shoved a sub-machine gun at Chief Venton and the officer twisted it out of his grasp. The car sped away but the police headed it off and made the arrests.

Mayors Call For Dissolution Of Wartime Housing

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Oct. 1 — (CP) — The annual conference of the Ontario Association of Mayors and Reeves ended here Saturday after Mayor George Inglis of Niagara Falls, Ont., was re-elected President of the organization.

Dissolution of Wartime Housing Limited so that more materials could be obtained for municipal housing projects was called for by three mayors at the closing session.

James Hamilton of Peterboro, R. K. Serviss of Galt, and J. P. Ryan of Brantford expressed unanimous condemnation of the project, which they said the Federal Government was reviving after a period of inactivity.

"Cost of building a wartime house and a more permanent building is approximately the same," Mayor Hamilton said. "Municipalities should be able to utilize the labor and manpower going into these projects to meet local needs."

Mayor Serviss said homes built by Wartime Housing in his city had filled a temporary need but "now we don't know what to do with them."

Mayor Ryan suggested the Association lodge a protest with federal authorities concerning the revival of the project.

Action by the Provincial Government in the establishment of junior technical colleges to which graduates of vocational schools could go, was called for by Reeve Ann Shipley of Teck Township who submitted a brief for presentation to the Royal Commission on Education.

"No educational facilities now exist where boys graduating from technical schools may receive further training," Reeve Shipley declared. "They do not possess the necessary qualifications to enter university engineering courses and, since the apprenticeship system has never been well organized in Canada, there is no provision for technical graduates to receive advanced instruction.

"There is an increasing need in industry for skilled technicians and I suggest this association recommend the establishment of junior technical colleges on a level less than that of college graduation."

She urged the appointment of a full-time supervisor of education in Northern Ontario.

Canadian Meat Firms Face Wage Increase Demand

Winnipeg, Oct. 1 (CP) — Possibility of a nation-wide strike in Canadian meat-packing plants was seen here today as the United Packinghouse Workers of America (C.I.O.) District No. 10, decided to ask for a 30 per cent increase in wages with a 40-hour week to be part of a master agreement with Canada Packers, Swift Canadian Company and Burns and Company.

Representatives of 12,000 Canadian packing plant employees from Moncton, N.B., to Vancouver reached this decision Sunday night after a weekend conference.

Present wage rates range from 59 cents an hour for union laborers to 96 cents an hour for top rate butchers. The men now work a 48-hour week compared with 54 hours in 1939.

Fred Dowling, Canadian director of the U.P.W.A. who announced the decision, said he hoped to get these demands by peaceful negotiations, "but if the packers force us to go the limit there will be a national strike."

Immediate action will be taken by Burns and Company employees in five Western Canada plants.

Mr. Dowling was instructed to write the company requesting a meeting between management and union to discuss a master agreement, which would replace the one now in effect in all union shops across the Dominion when it expires November 1—one month hence.

If the company refuses to meet the union within 18 days a strike vote will be taken in Burns plants in Winnipeg, Regina, Prince Albert, Edmonton and Vancouver

Mr. Dowling said there would be no compromise on the demands if the union was forced to take strike action.

German War Prisoners Still Feel After-Effects Of Nazi Defeat

By GERRY LOUGHEED
(C. P. Staff Writer)

Gravenhurst, Ont. Oct. 1 (CP)—German prisoners-of-war at Internment Camp 20 here today still strongly felt the after-effects of a Nazi defeat.

Since VE-Day, Canadian army officials said Saturday when reporters visited the camp for the first time, the prisoners' money from Germany has been "very materially cut." Consequently they can afford to buy few Canadian cigarettes which they prefer to the German variety and attend only two motion picture shows a week which are paid for by their canteen fund. Previously they had as many as five shows a week given in their dining hall.

Other things have changed too. The camp's commandant, Lt.-Col. C. P. Lavigne of Montreal, said discipline has been stricter than before Germany's defeat.

Camp policy is based on Geneva convention rules for treatment of war prisoners and the Germans had been treated "a bit too well" for fear reprisals to Canadian prisoners "would be affected," the colonel said.

Now that fear has disappeared and the men are being made to "toe the line" in every respect, he added.

Spokesman for the camp, composed mainly of 350 Nazi officers is a proud lieutenant-colonel with service in two wars in the German army. He was captured in 1941 in the North African campaign and still wears an "Afrika" armband on his full uniform.

The camp, 110 miles north of Toronto and within Gravenhurst's town limits on Lake Muskoka, previously was known as Calydor Sanitarium, a private institution. It was taken over by the Dominion government in July, 1940.

The camp enclosure is built on a rock formation and a army official said a prisoner "would have to be a hard rock miner" to escape through the two high fences. Since December, 1944, when the present commandant assumed direction, two prisoners have attempted escape but were captured before they were able to pass through the outer barbed wire fence. Regular probing of the ground for any tunnels is carried out.

The Veterans Guard of Canada which guards the camp has been told to "shoot and shoot to kill" if prisoners attempted to get through the wire which they are not allowed to touch. In the escape attempts last Winter, groups of other prisoners standing in the way prevented guards from firing.

A large majority of the prisoners speak English, Col. Lavigne said, "although a great number profess not to."

COUNCIL MAKES EFFORT TO REACH FINAL AGREEMENT

Molotov Insists Only Big 3 Should Sign Peace Pacts With Axis Satellites

London, Oct. 1 — (AP) — The Council of Foreign Ministers, still seeking a foundation for Europe's peace structure, made a last-minute effort to reach agreement today after the Soviet Union reportedly refused to sign conference documents unless her Balkan Treaty demands were met.

Delegates remained in session until after 1 a. m. debating the same subject which has been argued for more than a week—Foreign Commissar Molotov's insistence that only Britain, the U. S. S. R. and the United States be allowed to design the peace pacts with Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary. On China's suggestion the council agreed to meet again later in the day.

The Russians based their insistent demands on the Potsdam decision that only countries which signed an armistice with the defeated Axis satellites be permitted to write peace treaties with those countries. China and France, both members of the Five Nations Council, were not armistice signatories.

More informal talks between the Soviet Union, Britain and the United States seemed likely before tonight. There was speculation that the Russians might agree to sign conference documents to present an appearance of agreement even if an accord was not reached on the Balkans.

Informed sources gave these reasons for failure of the ministry to agree on major peace problems:

1. Lack of preparation and advance exchanges of views.
2. The fact that three of the ministers — James F. Byrnes of the United States, Ernest Bevin of Britain and Wang Shih-Chieh of China — are new appointees.
3. What was described as Soviet sensitivity over publicity which pictured the United States in a more powerful economic and military position.

PREDICTS MUCH UNEMPLOYMENT

Washington, Oct. 1 —(AP)— Reconversion Director John W. Snyder said today there may be 8,000,000 unemployed in the United States by next spring with "high unemployment" persisting through 1946.

He made this prediction in a 46-page report to the President and Congress. It was his fourth report.

Mr. Snyder's forecast was based on the contention that jobgiving will be unable to keep pace with a prospective million-a-month demobilization.

But he was "firmly optimistic" about the future, provided the country works as a team.

Ile de France Will Dock With H. & P. E. Regt. Soon After Four Today

Halifax, Oct. 1 (CP) — As hundreds of Maritime veterans of the Canadian 1st. Division were welcomed back to their homes and families, and thousands more speeded across Canada for welcome home celebrations, Halifax prepared today to greet further units of the famed "Red Patch Devils."

More than 6,000 from the division arrived Saturday aboard the Nieuw Amsterdam, which brought 7,744 service personnel and passengers, and more than 7,000 are expected on the Ile de France, which will dock some time after 4 p.m., E.D.T. today.

Complete units returning Saturday were the Carleton and York Regiment, the 48th. Highlanders, the Royal 22nd. Regiment, the Royal Canadian Regiment, the Saskatoon Light Infantry Support Battalion, and nearly a score of engineer, artillery and Army Service Corps support units.

On the Ile De France are the West Nova Scotia Regiment, the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, the Seaforth Highlanders, and the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, as well as other support units.

PRIME MINISTER SAILS FOR BRITAIN ON QUEEN MARY

Spends Two Hours With President Truman at the White House

New York, Oct. 1 (CP)—Canada's increasing important role in international affairs was sharply accented today as Prime Minister Mackenzie King prepared to sail for the United Kingdom on an extended trip that will give him valuable first-hand information concerning war-torn Europe.

Little more than forty hours after he left Ottawa, Saturday afternoon, the Prime Minister was to sail on the British liner Queen Mary, making her sixth eastward Atlantic crossing since the end of the war in Europe. With the Prime Minister aboard the giant vessel will be Norman Robertson, under-secretary for External Affairs.

Mr. King's departure came after a crowded weekend in which he flew to Washington—a flight that several times was declared "off" because of bad weather—late Saturday and spent a crowded Sunday in the United States capital. In a busy day he spent two hours with President Truman at the White House and squeezed in a number of visits elsewhere in the city, leaving late in the day by train for New York.

Canadian - American affairs largely dominated the Prime Minister's schedule in Washington. Before him in London as he accepts an invitation from Prime Minister Attlee lie problems chiefly concerning Anglo-Canadian and Commonwealth affairs which, of necessity are bound up with Ottawa-Washington policy.

Nature Undisclosed.

The nature of Mr. King's program in London is undisclosed but many matters are outstanding that call for handling by heads of states, notably Canada's financial interest in the prosperity of Britain, her best customer. This is tied in with Britain's war-created debts to her Commonwealth partners and other countries of the Sterling-area bloc estimated at from $14,000,000,000 to $16,000,000,000.

In addition to conferring with members of the new British Labor Cabinet, Mr. King will see leaders of other European governments. He also will visit the continental soil on which Canadian troops fought during the war and will inspect Canadian embassies and legations.

Speculation concerning the topics of conversation between President Truman and the Prime Minister Sunday ranged from discussions of Canadian-American foreign policy to the future of the atomic bomb, in the development of which Canada played a considerable part. To all questions Mr King smilingly replied to reporters: "You will have to ask the President".

39 Are Killed In Train Wreck

Bourne End, Hertfordshire, England, Oct. 1 (CP)—Rescue workers expressed fear today that bodies of additional victims may be buried in the wreckage of the Scottish Express which cracked up 30 miles outside London yesterday with known casualties of 39 dead and 94 injured.

One of the dead was a Canadian serviceman whose name is being withheld pending notification of next-of-kin.

The Express was nearing the end of its 450-mile overnight run from Perth, Scotland, when the locomotive jumped a switch and plunged over a 20-foot embankment, dragging six passenger coaches with it.

2ND TRANSPORT TAKES UP RUN TO GIRDLE EARTH

Flight Slightly Behind Schedule, Party Expects to Arrive in Time

Karachi, India, Sept. 30 (Delayed) (AP) — A new plane took over the globester run today with the round-the-world flight slightly behind schedule and "The Hump" ahead.

The second of the four Douglas Skymaster transports which will be employed in this first regular earth-girdling service, the new craft was readied to depart from Karachi at 6.15 p.m. Greenwich time (12.15 a.m. E.S.T. today) on a 1,485-mile daylight hop to Calcutta.

A three-hour stop, longest since leaving Washington last Friday, was arranged for Karachi, where the globester landed after a 1,356-mile flight from Abadin, Iran.

Transport command officers among the seven men and one man making the entire world-circling flight—the globester is handling other passengers between intermediate points—are confident the party will be in Washington by Thursday.

Miles flown—8,883.

Miles to [illegible] around the world—14,254.

Barefoot, Hungry Race Grim Winter, Building Shelter

By LARRY ALLEN

Ostroleka, Poland, Oct. 1—(AP) —Legions of barefooted and hungry persons in Northeastern Poland grimly face the coming winter as they work to build temporary structures for themselves in a war-stripped land.

Already bitterly cold winds from Russia are sweeping the region east and north of Warsaw where the Germans in their retreat destroyed buildings of all types.

The land is filled with dead and the dying. Near the former East Prussian frontier many men, women and children whose lives could be saved by operations must die because the Germans looted all medical equipment.

What one sees in Northeastern Poland is typical of the entire country. Many of the people are living under some of the most primitive conditions known to man.

Poland's health and medical services have broken down but the 6,000 doctors the country has left out of a pre-war total of 13,000 are struggling valiantly to control disease. They fear the winter will bring epidemics.

Social Afternoon Is Called Off

Quebec, Oct. 1 — (CP)—More than 100 delegates of the Canadian Daily Newspapers' Association left Quebec Saturday at the end of their convention here.

The last two items on the meeting's agenda, golf competitions and a joint luncheon at the Royal Quebec Golf Club, were cancelled because of inclement weather and the delegates instead attended the showing of a picture by the National Film Board on the handling of newsprint.

JAVA OCCUPATION EXPANDED BY BRITISH TROOPS

Dutch Govt. Protests Commander Allowing Indonesian Nationals To Control Country

Batavia, Oct. 1 (CP) — Indonesians who had threatened violent resistance against Dutch landings watched quietly yesterday as British troops expanded their occupation in the name of the Allied high command.

A Netherlands government spokesman termed the situation "potentially explosive." He told a press conference that complete independence for the Indonesians would be worked out—but Indonesian leaders reiterated that the Dutch East Indies already have become the free "republics of Indonesia."

British forces began landing on Saturday with Lt.-Gen. Sir Philip Christison, Allied commander for The Netherlands East Indies occupation. They moved into public buildings yesterday, with Japanese moving out ahead of them. Indonesian employees remained as the Seaforth Highlanders took over the radio Batavia building, but there were no demonstrations.

C. H. Vanderplas, senior representative of The Netherlands government in Java, told a press conference yesterday that The Netherlands East Indies would achieve "complete independence, but an independence not based upon violence or terrorism."

He said the Dutch planned to install Indonesians in positions of responsibility. He proceeded to eject the Japanese mayor of Batavia and replace him with Deputy Mayor Soewejo, an Indonesian Nationalist.

Soe Karno and Dr. Mohamad Batta, who claim the titles of president and vice-president, insisted however that their independent "republics of Indonesia" already exist.

Lt.-Gen. Sir Philip Christison, commander of the Allied forces in The Netherlands East Indies, said today Dr Hubertus J. Van Mook, lieutenant governor of The Netherlands East Indies, is expected in Batavia in a few days and expressed hope Dr. Van Mook would be able to make a statement on behalf of the Dutch government which would satisfy the Nationalists.

Mohamad Jsim, Batavia's police chief, told correspondents that order would be maintained in Java as long as there was Allied occupation but warned of trouble if the Dutch tried to rule alone later.

Pointing to The Netherlands flag flying between the British and American flags outside Allied headquarters, he said: "That flag is only safe out of respect for the American flag and the Union Jack."

Dutch Govt. Protests

London, Oct. 1. (CP)— The Dutch government protested today that the British General who is Allied commander in The Netherlands East Indies was allowing the Indonesian Nationalist Soecarno—"a puppet in the hands of the Japanese"—to rule practically all the rich island of Java.

Financial Combine In Japan Smashed; 21 Banks Seized

Bank of Japan Closed By Order Allied Command

By RUSSELL BRINES

Tokyo, Oct. 1 — (AP) —Allied occupation authorities today begin a quest for untold millions of dollars in gold, silver and currency which Japan was believed to have wrested from the lands it overran in its try for world domination.

The search paralleled other probes into Imperialistic war-financing, made possible through Gen. MacArthur's secret seizure today of 21 government-controlled financial institutions in Tokyo and six other large cities, and the ousting of their officials.

The Bank of Japan, the country's largest financial institution, one-quarter owned by the Japanese Imperial Household, was closed by an order of the Allied command.

It will be open tomorrow, said Col. R. P. Kramer, Gen. MacArthur's economic and scientific chief, "if the Japanese provide full co-operation" in locating the assets of the seized institutions which had office space in the Bank of Japan building.

Bank officers pleaded last night that they had had insufficient time to produce the requested assets and records. They had received instructions from the finance ministry earlier, however, to have the requested materials on hand by last night.

Allied troops on guard around the bank assured depositors, many of them women sobbing in fear that they might lose their life savings, that their funds were safe.

The hunt for the missing funds that once belonged to the Philippines, China and other nations began with a conference of Col. Kramer and Viscount Keizo Shibusawa, Governor of the Bank of Japan, and other leading Japanese financial figures.

The Japanese denied that the Bank of Japan held any foreign money, denied any knowledge of a possible hiding place, and maintained they had no control over financial activities of field military commanders.

The bankers gave Col. Kramer an estimate of the gold reserves of the Bank of Japan, which they said was Japan's total reserve except for small amounts earmarked for shipment to Indo-China and Siam, but the figure was not disclosed immediately.

Col. Kramer previously had announced that the finance ministry estimated Japan's gold reserve at $125,000,000.

Owned 25 Per Cent Interest

The bankers denied knowledge of full details of Imperial Household funds or where the Imperial gold deposits might be located, but they disclosed that the household owned approximately 25 per cent interest in the Bank of Japan, and the Japanese government owned a 55 per cent interest.

Meanwhile, the newspaper Asahi reported that Kenji Kodama, former head of the Central China Development Company, one of the firms ordered closed, had been appointed new president of the Central Liaison Office, the Japanese agency that receives and passes on to the proper department the directives of the Allied Command.

Col. Ken R. Dyke, head of Gen. MacArthur's civil information and education section, announced an investigation of Shintoims. He explained "We aren't trying to interfere with anyone's religion, but we are going to be certain it isn't used as a tool for militarists. The government has poured a lot of money into Shinto during the war."

Other Developments

There were these other developments:

Shigenori Togo, foreign minister at the time for the outbreak of war in the Pacific, who was scheduled to surrender yesterday, suffered another heart attack at his home.

Togo and Hideki Tojo, former war premier who botched a suicide attempt, are scheduled to be jailed soon as suspected war criminals. Tojo is recovering rapidly in hospital.

The newspaper Mainichi reported that Kiyoshi Miki, professor and philosopher, died in prison Wednesday and that other Japanese political prisoners, arrested six months ago without explanation, still were in jail.

Lt.-Gen. Toyama formally surrendered the 51,000 troops of his 58th Japanese army on Cheju Island, in the East China Sea south of Korea.

The 1st U. S. Marine Division—veterans of Guadalcanal and Okinawa — landed at Tientsin in Northern China to help the Chinese disarm 250,000 unconquered Japanese troops.

Six Fatalities In East Ontario

(By C.P.)

Six fatalities were reported in Eastern Canada during the weekend. Two persons died from the effects of falls, a war veteran was killed in an auto-train collision, a woman died from the effects of burns, a man succumbed to what a coroner said was the effects of drinking wood alcohol, and a baby died after swallowing a pin.

Near Niagara Falls, Ont., Cpl. Frederick Wilson, 45, Toronto, a veteran of two wars, was killed Saturday night and two youths were severely injured when a freight train struck the car in which they were riding.

Death of Claude Stewart Ringer, 50, of Toronto, was attributed by a coroner to drinking wood alcohol. Ringer was found dead in his room.

Believed to have swallowed a pin, two-year-old Marie Lise Bloise died Sunday in a Montreal hospital.

Samuel Martin, 53, died in hospital in Montreal Saturday from injuries received when he and another man fell 26 feet from the scaffold on which they were working. They were repairing a tank when one end of the scaffold collapsed.

Charles Schreede, 76, of Toronto, who fell and broke his hip several days ago, died in a Toronto hospital.

At Dryden, Ont., Provincial Police prepared to start dragging Clay Lake for the body of Capt. T. R. McDonald, 28, of Vancouver. Discharged from active service, he had been missing since last Thursday. His capsized boat was found.

Annamites Who Remained Faithful To French Pay Heavily For Loyalty

By HAL BOYLE

Saigon, Oct. 1 (AP) — Annamite natives who have remained faithful to their French masters during Indo-China's rebellion are paying a terrible price for their loyalty.

A majority of the native workers fled from Saigon soon after the "Ear for Independence" began early this month.

A number of servants, however, remained loyal to French households, and these are the most frightened people in Indo-China. Some who tried to get to their quarters at night were killed. Homes of others were looted and burned.

Typical of these natives who decided to stay with the side that buttered their bread in the past is "Johnny," a kitchen roustabout in the Hotel Majestic, which quartered a number of British troops and a group of American correspondents.

Johnny is terribly gun-shy. Every time rifle or machine gun fire echoed in the hotel's bare, first-floor dining room, little Johnny would start up. He almost died of panic one night when Annamese cut the power lines and the lights went off in the city's central sector.

"What's the matter?" asked a British sergeant. "You afraid of your friends across the river?"

Johnny was completely honest. He nodded his head vigorously. He was fearful that if the Annamese fighters ever broke into the main part of the city they would cut his throat quicker than they would a Frenchman's.

The strike by most Annamese workers left the Continental Palace Hotel, Saigon's principal hostelry unstaffed. It was crowded with French refugees and internees and until a group of stranded Dutch prisoners of war volunteered to help run the hotel, the French guests had to clean their own rooms and wait on themselves.

The hotel is a centre of rumor and wild reports. Every morning brought new rumors of Annamese atrocities. A priest was reported murdered and several French families were reported to have been seized as hostages. At the town hall officials listed 171 French residents as missing.

TRUCK DAMAGES CAR

Considerable damage resulted to a motor owned by Mr. Paul Haggis, Dufferin Ave., when it was struck from behind by a Citizens Dairy truck on Dundas Street this morning.

Driven by George Haggis, the auto had been stopped to permit a passenger to get out of the car when the truck, driven by Dorian McAvoy, Corbyville, crashed into the left rear of the vehicle. He applied his brakes and skidded on the wet pavement crashing into the car ahead.

4.45 INCHES RAIN FELL IN SEPTEMBER

Farmers' complaints of a very wet September which has considerably held up corn cutting operations and late threshing, was borne out by the monthly weather statistics released today by officials of the Belleville Water Purification plant.

During September 4.45 inches of rain fell in the Belleville district, approximately twice the rainfall received during the same month last year. Last year during September 2.38 inches of rain fell. Rain storms this year apparently were heavier and lasted longer as precipitation fell on 17 days in each case.

Although the maximum temperature this year was slightly higher, 87 degrees, the mean temperature of 60.5 degrees was lower than the mean of last September when the average was 61 degrees. Minimum temperature during last month was 32 degrees, while last year the mercury dropped only to 35 degrees.

Thurlow and Tyendinaga Twps. Teachers Meet

On Thursday evening last the first meeting for the year 1945-46 of the Thurlow and Tyendinaga Township teachers met at S. S. No. 20, Thurlow.

The president, Mr. Claus, of Tyendinaga, called the meeting to order and after introductory remarks a number of the school's children sang two autumn songs and three of the girls, Marilyn McFee, Ann Putman and Pat Gerow, favored with dances which were well received.

The business meeting and reading of the minutes of the last meeting were then dispensed with.

Mr. Macklem, public school inspector, spoke briefly on a number of items of interest to the teachers.

The highlight of the evening was the guest speaker, Major Everett Fairman, who has just recently returned from overseas. His six years of army life in England, North Africa, Italy, Holland, France, gave him wealth of material to choose from and in his very capable manner portrayed his travels and experiences over there. The speaker was introduced by H. E. Darling and thanked by Mr. Claus.

After the adjournment a delicious lunch, provided by the teachers, was served.

Mrs. Redner and Mrs. Putman assisted in the preparation while Miss Burke, Miss Robinson, Mrs. Ryan and Mrs. Darling served.

The free-for-all provided considerable excitement. While there were but four horses, it was almost a double race in one, Black Prince and Lee Volo battling for first place, and finishing each time less than a length apart. Farther behind, Grattan Lee and Patsy Guy battled it out for third and fourth places, with Patsy Guy winning by half a length. Every heat was a race.

Two 24-Pounders and 8-Pound 'Lunge Hooked in Moira Lake By Ald. C. Clapp and R. Berry

Alderman C. R. Clapp has done it again. Possessing a beautiful cottage on Moira Lake, Alderman Clapp has fished extensively for 'lunge and each year comes up with a big one. This year proved no exception. Trolling along the south shore of the lower lake on Sunday with Ronald Berry, Foster Avenue a discharged veteran of this war, the pair hooked two twenty-four pounders and for good measure they added an eight-pounder. The big fish were almost identical, they weighed exactly the same within a couple of ounces, were the same length and girth.

The 'lunge were hooked firmly on each occasion and played for about forty-five minutes each, when they were deposited in the boat by gaff. Mr. Berry was the first angler to get hold of a big one. Going by a weed bed close to the big island in the centre of the lake, the big fellow struck and Ald. Clapp, who was handling the motor, steered for the deep water. Then the fun began. The fish see-sawed its way over a lot of water but was always under control. Finally he was completely tired and being brought to the boat surprised even Mr. Clapp with his size.

Going back over the same territory the Alderman had the pleasure of having a strike and this time the boat was turned over to Mr. Berry with Mr. Clapp going to work on the big fellow. He was towed down the lake towards the Clapp cottage so the watchers on the shore could get the thrill of seeing a big one landed. The 'lunge put up a stiff fight before coming to gaff. Not satisfied with this fine catch the pair again went over the same ground and an eight-pounder struck. This fellow did not take much coaxing to give up and the anglers then called it a day. The fish were put on a long pole and many amateur photographers had a field day snapping the fine catch. Mr. Clapp used Double Star spoons with one set of hooks on each.

A Marmora angler, whose name was not available, hooked a 22-pounder in the upper lake early in the afternoon. Some anglers from Philadelphia also had their quota of 'lunge from this popular lake.

IN MEMORIAM

BUSHLOW — In memory of a dear daughter and sister, Roselean, who died September 30th., 1941.

Blessed hope that in Jesus is given,
In our sorrow to cheer and sustain.
That soon with our Saviour in heaven
We shall meet with our loved ones again.
Days of sorrow still come o'er us,
Tears in silence often flow
For memory keeps you ever near us
Though you died four years ago.

Next-of-Kin of H. & P. E. Veterans Asked to Meet Under Name Letters

Special arrangements for the meeting of next-of-kin and returning veterans of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, expected to arrive here this week, were completed over the weekend by the District Reception Committee under Lt.-Col. B. C. Donnan and the Rotary Club of Belleville.

Large signs each carrying a letter of the alphabet will be erected starting at the corner of Pinnacle and Bridge Street East, and will be intervalled about eight feet apart.

In other words a large sign bearing the letter "A" will be placed at the corner. Eight feet south on Pinnacle Street will be placed a card bearing the letter "B". Eight feet farther south will be the letter "C" and so forth.

To facilitate the reunions, relatives of those returning, whose names start with the letter "A" should take up a position under the card bearing that letter. The "Browns" and others whose names start with "B" will congregate under that letter and so on.

The regiment will be advised of these arrangements before it begins the general parade and march-past through the city, so that the troops will know where to go as soon as they are dismissed after the brief ceremonies at the Armouries.

Next-of-kin are requested not to break through the lines of the roped-off enclosure at the Canadian National Railways station. The committee realizes that the troops and their relatives are anxious to be reunited, but respectfully ask that they wait the short time so the reunion can be complete at the points designated.

The Rotary Club under President Mac McLean, will undertake the job of erecting the signs. The Kiwanis and Kinsmen clubs who have generously offered their services, will be on duty in the Armouries during the reception period.

Shrine Club Makes Arrangements For Mass T. B. Survey in District

Sponsored by the Belleville and District Shrine Club which has made the project possible through the sales of Christmas Seals, in co-operation with the 18th National Campaign of the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, a mass T. B. survey of residents of the city and district will be held at the Kiwanis Centre Dundas Street from October 16 to October 19 both dates inclusive.

A complete staff of X-ray and other experts will be on hand at the centre at nine o'clock each morning during the dates of the survey, which is being offered entirely free to the residents of the city regardless of race, color or creed.

Medical men of the city have expressed the wish that every person over sixteen years of age who has not already had a chest examination will take advantage of the opportunity offered by the T.B. survey, inasmuch as it has the endorsement of the medical profession as a whole.

Application forms for the survey were mailed to every household in the city today, President D. L. Storey of the Belleville Shrine Club stated. Those who care to make a personal appointment for the confidential check-up may do so by telephoning 2980-2981 from 9 to 5 daily during the survey. These telephones have been installed for the convenience of the general public.

Equipment for the survey will be installed by the Ontario Department of Health, and it is the most modern available.

Applications for the survey will be confirmed by postcard and a certain time set. This is being done to ensure a steady flow of people at the clinic with a minimum of congestion of traffic.

Mayor Frank Follwell and other prominent citizens of the city are heartily in accord with the venture and it is hoped the greater majority of residents will take advantage of the offer.

Collegiate News

B.C.I.V.S. NEWS

Assembly.

Assembly opened this week with Mr. Bates reading the Bible lesson and leading in the Lord's Prayer.

Surprisingly the new hymn books didn't tend to make us much more enthusiastic. Mr. Maybee gave us a second chance to prove the powers of our lungs. With such a variety of hymns now to choose we no doubt will soon be doing credit to the music.

The Students Council presented itself in the form of George Laskaris (pardon me, George Manjuris) who gave out with dire predictions about what is likely to happen if you don't paste yourself or a reasonable facsimile on your student's card if you are desirous of reduced rates to local theatres. And it's no fair wearing your hair in pigtails or walking on your knees and demanding admittance for 18 cents.

Of the announcements made by Mr. Currie the request by Miss Dwyer concerning the Red Cross should perhaps receive special mention. Peace is won but the effects of a far reaching war have not diminished. There is still much to do for those of us who are able and willing. Miss Dwyer has been a most able worker and able leader throughout the years and will appreciate the help of any girls who care to give a little time.

Mr. Hill reported that Stamp Sales have not been up to par. Here again is another case of people accepting the peace too complacently. Canada still needs our extra quarters.

Before the presentation of the picture "String Choir" we enjoyed the playing of our band. Without it our Assemblies would be sadly lacking. I'm sure we all agree so perhaps a little quiet appreciation would not go far amiss. The picture itself proved extremely enlightening and well worth hearing for those of us who harbor high ideas about the noisiness of the muses.

And so on through the week.

GIRLS' SPORTS

Volley Ball:

In the girls' gym there is an air of intense preparation. The volley-ball season comes first and the girls seem all out to make it a good one.

Next Friday at 4 there will be the first meeting of the Volleyball officials. And then how about a lot of substantial cheering at the tournaments?

Badminton:

Carolyn Morden has proved to be 1945 champion. It could have been no easy task to defeat Phyllis Trusdale and Ruth Blatherwick so many congratulations should be coming her way.

Athletic Society:

Last Tuesday the gym class leaders met to nominate candidates for president, secretary, and treasurer. The elections for the executive will be held this week.

BOYS' SPORTS

Inter form rugby starts on Tuesday, Oct. 2nd at noon. Every team deserves the support of every member in their form, so how about coming out and cheering your boys to a victory. The schedule for this week is as follows Tuesday 10B vs 10CD, Wednesday 11C vs. 11G, Thursday 12B vs. 12DG, Friday 9A vs. 9B.

There will be two twelve man rugby teams this year, senior and junior. Both teams practise every night during the week and all those who are interested are advised to turn out as soon as possible.

Plans are also being laid for house league basketball which was a great success last year. This is open to ninth and tenth grades only.

Coming Events:

The organization meeting of the Elevator will be held sometime this week. This meeting is open to anyone interested in the magazine, be it in the literary or business field. So everyone from accountants show up at the library and help put out the best year book this school has ever had. Oh yes its exact date will be given in a later announcement.

And in the same vein we'd like to remind you of the tea-dance this Wednesday to raise money to put out the Elevator. Come one, come all and make this first tea-dance a howling success. In so doing you will ensure the success of the Elevator. Remember this, and remember the dance.

The script for "June Mad" arrived Thursday and rehearsals start in earnest on Monday. We realize that this notice is about 120 minutes late for the first practice (C'est la querre, or something). Those of you who didn't attend the first practice don't forget to show up for rehearsal number two.

Ad Libitum

Clothing Tips for Boys.

During the past five years it has been next to impossible to buy clothes of good quality as you probably know, so here are but a few hints on how to get the best in appearance out of your wartime wardrobe.

When pressing trousers and slacks it is best to use a very slightly dampened pressing cloth. If the slacks are pleated, press from the top toward the cuff making sure that the crease runs into the pleat. Press iron on various places such as the cuff, knee, and seat for an extra period of time.

Your gabardine and wool sport shirts look far better, especially if they are worn over slacks, if they are pressed also. When ironing these remember always to iron on the inside so as not to spoil the finish.

Ties last much longer if a V-shaped wedge made of celluloid or cardboard about twelve inches long and about three inches wide at the most is inserted in the large end and left for two or three days. You will find your ties pressed like new and wearable for a longer period.

Your sweaters should be folded back to front and kept in a drawer out of dust. You will find them unwrinkled when you wish to wear them again if this is done.

Lastly your shoes, of which you should have two pair when you are attending school all day. It is imperative to wear one pair no longer than two days. They should be shined and put on trees or forms of some type and rotated so as to wear each pair the same length of time.

This is time tested and fully guaranteed advice and any complaints may be taken to the editor.

Cuff Notes

The primary reason for the appearance of this column is to get the editor to take his trusty .45 away from my temple.

The Students' Council is away to a flying start by organizing an Elevator Tea Dance. This is unofficial but it should be quite a fling since it is the first dance of the new term. See you there.

The Dramatic Society has also reared up on its hind legs and roared into action with the script of "June Mad" in its talons. The performance is set for the middle of October or thereabouts. It is a swift comedy of the hectic life of the Woods family and their friends and goes into production sometime this week. One of cur old-line actors is back at school in the person of Phil Flagler who has been in the R.C.N.V.R. since leaving school. Glad to have you back, Phil.

Our own Sylvester has turned "traitor" and gone to Albert College, hence the lack of the "Sylvester Says" column. Bud's hard work on the railroad must have unbalanced him. No hard feelings, Bud, you just carry a club from now on.

As you all probably know the school paper is to resume publication. This is something that we have missed during the war years and probably will be a great boost to the old school spirit. That always crops up somewhere does it not? B. C. I. should have a cause for school spirit this year. The basketball and the tryonts for rugby look pretty good from here.

The Teen-Age Club is getting bigger and better. The crowds are more than packing ye olde gymnasium on Friday nights and President Bugsy Stewart has a wide leer on his face so things must be looking up.

(This conglomeration of nothing has probably made you all violently ill by now but cheer up and remember Thanksgiving is coming and somebody may mistake the Cuff Note Editor for a turkey! Bang!)

A RECOLLECTION

When I was wee; a little tot,
Wandering from my father's lot,
Down a street the way across,
The busy corner till I was lost.

Then I would cry when just in sight
There came to me my gallant knight
And by the hand he'd lead me to Another policeman dressed in blue.

Then in his charger he would roar
And whisk me to my very door.
Then by the gate he'd wink his eye,
Our favorite way to say good-bye.

PICTON

All Attendance Records Broken At County Fair

Picton, Oct. 1—Picton Fair of 1945 passed into history at midnight Saturday, having established records which will stand for a long time. Attendance the first afternoon the occasion of the "Welcome Home" the members of the 1st Battalion of Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment already home, and other Prince Edward County service personnel, was more than 12,000 at the fair grounds, while thousands more lined the gaily decorated streets of the town, applause and cheers greeting each passing group of vets. The second day of the fair saw rain fall until ten o'clock in the morning. The sun failed to penetrate the clouds, but four thousand persons passed into the grounds. Despite the chilly weather, all events were carried out, and hundreds braved the cold in the grandstand for the night performance.

Mile and One-Half Parade.

The first day parade was one and a half miles long and the greatest ever seen in Picton. At the "Welcome Home" dance in the armouries Friday night, more than 2,000 were present, with an equal number over-flowing the grandstand at the Fair grounds.

It is estimated that 18,000 persons attended the fair and the Welcome Home events, the largest on record here.

The fair itself set new records for entries. Secretary Mr. Jamieson reported 5,168 entries of all kinds. The huge central display building, called the Crystal Palace, was filled to over-flowing. An example of the entries was seen in the fact that there were 68 pies, 59 cakes and 310 cans of fruit. Quilts and bedspreads covered 52 feet of wall space. Flowers created a mass of color rarely seen this late in the season. The showing was especially remarkable when it is remembered that excepting horse classes, the exhibitors must be residents of Prince Edward County.

Every Prize Offered Claimed.

A check up of the prize list, reveals that every prize offered was claimed, and those at Picton are in most cases more generous and numerous than at the even larger fairs.

Success of the combined Welcome Home and fair could not have been achieved had not several thousand people come from outside the county points. Napanee, Kingston, Belleville and Trenton were each represented by hundreds and highways saw a steady stream of cars for hours.

R.S.M. Angus Duffy reported that 450 men who had served in the 1st Bn. of Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment were present, coming from a score of Ontario points. Cornwall, Peterborough, all parts of North Hastings, Toronto, Oshawa, Cobourg, Owen Sound, Napanee and other points were all well represented. A free bus brought three loads from Belleville. It was their first real get-together since 1939, and the scene of much hand-shaking and back-slapping. All service personnel received a reception that, as R.S.M. Ruffy stated, "Warmed their hearts, and made them realize, as they had often doubted, that those at home did appreciate their service and sacrifice."

Wounded Vets Parade.

Included in the parade were cars filled with wounded vets, two ambulance loads coming from Christie Street Hospital for the event. Under the care of the Red Cross they were "lost" by the local representatives, as comrades carried them off for the day.

From all sides, messages of thanks and congratulations are pouring in to the welcoming committee and the Fair Board on both the success of the Welcome and the Fair.

NAIVE ITALIANS

In A Dispatch From Rome To the Chicago News, Edwin A. Lahey Reveals Italy's Temper.)

Our Italian friends and co-belligerents have a remarkable detachment in the face of situations that might disturb the sensibilities of other people.

The opera last night was an open air performance, with the stage set amid the ruins of the Baths of Caracalla, and a bright Summer moon shone down upon the gay Italian audience.

The only sour note for me was this — the opera was "Aida," which deals with the conquest of Ethiopia (now known as Abyssinia). I doubt that a single one of the 6,000 or 7,000 Italians in the audience realized the grim inappropriateness of the theme. It was the conquest of Ethiopia in 1935 that started the Italians down the long road that led them to their present sorry plight.

As a matter of fact, I have yet to encounter an Italian who has a proper sense of shame for his contribution to the misery of the world.

They whine about being misled by Mussolini and brutally exploited by Hitler, but it appears never to occur to them that they betrayed their spiritual tradition, sold their souls for a plate of macaroni, and shouted ecstatically while a big meat-head stood on the balcony of the Palazzo Venezia with his chin over the railing, and promised to restore their ancient empire.

(Any high school boy studying Economics 1-A could have pointed out to his parents at the time that the Roman Empire was created in a period when an aggressor nation had no need for coal and oil.)

During a layover in Naples, a pleasant old man, who has been a guide for 50 years, took me and Harry W. Flannery of the Columbia Broadcasting System around the ruins of Pompeii. We asked him, as perhaps all tourists do, what he thought about Mussolini.

The old man, whose name was Joseph, launched into a tirade against the late dictator. And what do you suppose was his beef? In some vague manner, Mussolini had conducted the affairs of Italy so that the prices of bread, of wine and of macaroni were outrageously high, and the commodities hard to get. He had nothing else against Mussolini.

Joseph asked us, in addition to his modest fee, for a couple of cigarettes for his son. He said his son had been an aviator in the Spanish war. I wanted the courage to tell Joseph to tell his Fascist son to go without cigarettes, and to think of the women and children of Guernica while he suffered. But, like a softhearted sucker, I gave him the cigarettes.

For cold-weather protection you need high V.I. – low Pour Point!

Your car's engine and lubricating oil may be freezing cold when you start—yet up to temperatures of 200° or over when you've driven a few miles! Hence the importance of V.I., (Viscosity Index) which is a measurement of resistance to change in Viscosity due to change in temperature. Peerless, an exceptionally high V.I. oil, gives easy starting when your engine is cold plus safe protection when it's hot.

Pour Point is important, too! Oils less efficiently de-waxed than B-A Peerless actually solidify at low temperatures, making it hard to get the engine started and leaving metal surfaces unprotected until it has had time to warm up.

And with Peerless you add less between changes! That is the experience of motorists in all kinds of driving . . . "It goes further to save you money!"

This year get your fall change-over early and change to Peerless Motor Oil. It stays on the job longer and it does a better job because "It's Alloyed!"

Welcome Home!

Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment officers and men, veterans of the greatest and most expansive and devastating war in history, the Second World War, will be hailed with joy as they return with their unit to the old familiar places in this district, their homes and firesides.

This week they come back from the wars and will receive applause of a proud people, of parents and wives and children and friends with expressions of gratitude and thanksgiving and happiness as they reach Belleville for here will be paid tribute to the Regiment and its personnel whom the records of service honor and whom history will remember for what they did for mankind in the years 1939-45. The homecoming will be one of the great events of local history in the district represented by the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment because every element in the community, every section of the life of the people, will pay its meed of praise and glory to these veterans. The warmth and joy of the greetings by relatives and friends will be beyond the power of words to tell but they will be expressed as the human heart prompts both the returning brave and those who have waited their coming.

The regiment comes home rich in honors, in decorations awarded to members of the unit and in achievements. This was one of the military formations chosen to go to the Mediterranean to strike the first blow by Canadians in the invasion of Sicily and Italy as a result of which Italy was forced out of the war. The deeds of the officers and men of this regiment will ever live in memory and in the records and will be treasured in the hearts of the relatives and friends of those who carried the war into Sicily and Italy.

Numbers of the members of this historic regiment have been back home for some time and will join the regiment on its arrival here, and all will receive the acclamations of the throngs, who wish to do them honor. So those who have brought glory to Canada, to the name of their regiment and their district will themselves be receive with all the honors and praise that the people can shower upon them.

They are coming back to the communities where so many of them have their homes and where their names are household words, many of them the descendants of the earliest settlers in the district and they themselves will have their share in further developing and advancing their native communities and sections and the Dominion in their days to come.

Their deeds, written in battle honors, in awards and decorations and in the story of correspondents on the field of battle and in the great sequence of victories have stirred the souls of the people of Canada.

These youths are unassuming and are buoyant in spirit, they are coming home with an experience which will enrich their lives with the knowledge of duty for humanity well done. Citizen youths, before the war, they had after training been pitted against the highly trained enemy and have helped to tell the story of Axis defeat and collapse. They have been part of that great army which smashed Mussolini's army and Fascism itself and their efforts are also written in the triumph which came with the fall of Germany.

They are young, they are brave, they are noble, they are rich in resourcefulness. All these fine qualities they bring back with them to enrich whatever station in life they occupy and they wear their honors lightly. But the people will see that they have due reward and recognition in receiving the heartiest welcome a home-loving people and the lovers of freedom and men and women, proud of the proof that their sons are truly great, can extend to those they know and love so well. These young heroes will be taken to the hearts of the people in fact as they have been taken in spirit for they live in the hearts of their proud fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, of relatives and friends and of their countrymen.

In the rejoicing for the men who have returned, those gallant young men who laid down their lives for freedom will not be forgotten. They gave their lives that men and women and children might be free in all the world. Therefore they died not in vain but in the hour of glory surrendered their all for humanity. Than this there can be no greater glory and ages hence will reap the benediction and blessing of their brave deeds.

Many thousands will join in honoring the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, tendering them every tribute for what they did towards the Allied victory for their King, the Empire, their Country and their Home.

Others who have returned home or are yet to return in small groups or singly will see in this reception to the H. and P. E. Regiment the spirit with which all the men who have served are held in the hearts of the people of this district and every district. The occasion of the unit arrival of the district regiment has provided the opportunity for the mass demonstration to be held in honor of its personnel. The joy of welcoming returned men extends to all veterans and to all services, including the organizations of service women.

Such a day when the home and the home front greet with loud cheers and lusty hurrahs the conquering heroes from the war in Italy and in Germany in which they battled that Freedom might live will be an occasion of deep significance and a benediction for the returning young men and their homes and friends and for this country in the future years.

Welcome to your homes and communities, soldiers of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment!

Germany's 'Experiments in Murder'

(Collier's Magazine)

Martha Gelhorn radios from Paris of the murder experiments in the Dachu concentration camp. The Germans wished to see how long an aviator could go without oxygen, so they picked the strongest and healthiest prisoners and sent them up in a closed plane from which they pumped the oxygen. They killed 800 people in the experiment and discovered that no one can live above 36,000 feet altitude without oxygen. Naturally the mortality rate was 100 per cent.

Then there was also the water experiment in which the Germans put the prisoners in great vats of sea water up to their necks. They killed 600 people in discovering that the human body could resist for 2½ hours in water which is eight degrees below zero. Some men had to suffer this experiment three times—if they fainted before it was over. The Germans also tried a malaria experiment which was used on 11,000 Dachau prisoners in an attempt to find immunization for the German soldiers.

It is not known how many people died in this camp, in its 12 years of existence, from the many inhuman practices and experiments which went on there. We are not completely without guilt, for it took us 12 years to open the gates at Dachau. We were blind, and slow but we must know now that there can never be a real peace if such cruelty is permitted to continue in the world.

October

(The Country Gentleman)

"If I'm coming home, I hope it's in October," Jesse Sturdivant wrote home from the Pacific months ago. We hope he makes it. The trees along Plum Creek will be a glory of color. The leaves, beginning to fall, will carpet the banks and lay a slow-moving blanket on the water. The air will be filled with sharp, sweet smells—of wood smoke, of sorghum-making, of late apples and wild grapes. The haze that made the settlers call this time of year Indian Summer softens the mellow sunshine. The country over, October has a loveliness that is all its own, differing with each section but leaving its magic touch on all. "October in New England, and I am not there," wrote a Yankee poet, giving expression to the feeling of everyone who is away when it's October at home.

WEDDING TEARS

There was weeping at the wedding and I turned away my head.
I reached to take a prayer book from the stall.
I tried to find the passage by the parson being read,
But the printing on the pages was too small.

I knew I heard her saying: "For better or for worse,
In sickness and in health, till death do part."
For round about were many who have lived what brides rehearse
And knew life's "worse and better" all by heart.

I gave the prayer book over, since the page I couldn't find,
But I knew why certain eyes were filled with tears.
And the vows weren't hard to follow; they were stamped on many a mind
That had followed, and had kept them, down the years.

It's Always Hot in Mulching Time

(By John Gould in Christian Science Monitor)

One of the more dubious joys of farming is to come up from the hot field after a session with the orchard mulching, and find everybody else sitting under a maple tree sipping chilled fruit juices and complaining of the heat. "Won't you join us?" they chirp happily, as if nobody would ever think of that without being asked, and then they all sit and wait to see if somebody else won't be silly enough to go and get the pitcher filled this time.

There are times in the summer when the enthusiasm of the sun doesn't bother. Some jobs are fun in the rippling stifle of the sheltered meadow, and the hottest of days can be subdued by my asking myself, "Remember last February when it was so cold a piece chipped out of the axe?" Presto—I'm all set for another hour. But mulching is something not every farmer knows about, and I never get over thinking about all the others who just don't mulch and have no knowledge of what I'm doing.

We cut about 30 tons of hay that goes for mulching apple trees. It is mowed, raked, and hauled into the orchards in small loads. Instead of using a big rack and putting on a regular load, I use a small tipcart and throw on 5 or six bundles. This makes it easier to pitch off again, and the frequent rides back and forth between meadow and orchard refresh me. There are devices known as sweep-rakes, or locally as buck-rakes, that would be just what I need, but I haven't been able to locate the funds to buy one or one to buy. My present deepest desire is to own a buck-rake and sit on the seat and mulch by pressing a pedal, but until I get one I shall spend most of each August pitching by hand.

As the hay collects in the orchards, I spread it evenly in circles about each tree — pulling it away from the trunk to frustrate the mice who will presently move in and look around for some bark to bite, and making the edges smooth so the folks traveling on the Northeast Airlines will see that I am neat and orderly. My orchard, from the air, must look like a drying place for big doughnuts. The way I do it, I walk around each tree about 40 times.

Naturally, I don't care much about the condition of the hay as hay is generally made. If it sours on me — all right. If it dries up to a cinder — all right. If it is still green and wet — still all right. Its purpose is to rot into nutritive chemicals, to hold the moisture around the roots so apples will grow large and handsome, and even to save the early drops from bumping too hard so we can pick them up and sell them for seconds.

To my dairymen neighbors, the whole condition of my hay is deplorable. As they see it, I've washed the whole harvest. It hangs around in sunshine and shower until the must and mildew sticks up a foot. Then, worse still, I carefully work amongst it and labor diligently to throw it under the trees, and there isn't a pint of milk in the entire batch. And when others have finished up, except for the rowan, and have the big hay doors buttoned shut, I am still haying. When the wind is down, and the Balm o' Gilead hangs motionless in the sun, and the dog has crept under the woodpile, I am circling my trees around and around and people hate to look at me. I look all fuzzy to them, because the heat shimmers up between me and them and the sweat is running down in their eyes. It is fruit-juice weather, and people get up before dawn to can beans so the stove will cool off before the sun comes up. As I see it, everybody sits under the maple trees and I am a solitary example of not only industry, but unquestionably of stupidity and worse.

On days like today I suddenly come to, not infrequently finding myself mumbling and carrying on, frothing and even gibbering—and I stick the fork up in the ground. The handle will vibrate in the sun and sound like a swarm of bees, and because the tractor seat is now well sunned and to sit on it would be folly and I should probably burn something behind me, I stagger out of the orchard into the relatively cool torridness of the shaded pasture lane and arrive staggering as from a desert to be asked, "Won't you join us?"

We have this hot spell every August. It spills over into September sometimes. Everybody around here sits it out, and wishes I'd sit with a glass of lemonade in my hand under the maple. It makes them hot to watch me. They begin, after a few days, to wonder how long the spell will continue. I, and I alone, know. It will continue until I finally get to that Northern Spy in the southwest corner. That is the last one, and I know that as I circle it I shall hear the barbed wire in the pasture fence singing in the hot sun like a soprano. That is the last one and when I've been around it and the edges are smooth I shall look up and see the wind is toying with the pines along Small's wall. Before I get to the house the wind will be northwest, and it will be cool and pleasant, and everybody will get up and go indoors, and it won't be hot again until mulching time next summer.

Pay Is Much Too Low

By W. L. C. IN WINDSOR STAR

A few weeks ago a recent article dealt with the standards desirable in the clergy. A number of readers have agreed on the thought that all pastors should have high intellectual and cultural attainments, but they wonder how such men can be attracted to the pulpits unless salaries are increased.

That brings back the age-old argument that the laborer is worthy of his hire.

It also emphasizes the point that most clergymen are not in their profession to make money. Many a pastor or priest could make a fortune in the commercial world, if he bent his efforts in that direction. Other clergymen could pile up fortunes in the law or engineering or medicine.

There are few pastors in Canada drawing more than $5,000 per year. And, as far as that goes, not so many are being paid that much. Salaries like that come only in the largest churches, where wealthy congregations give generously to the support of their religious institutions.

Many young graduates from the theological colleges have to go out and begin life at salaries of $1,200 to $1,500 per year, and a few do not even get that much to begin their work. As the average graduate is well along in his 20's or possibly crowding 30, he is thinking of getting married and setting up a home. To do that on a small salary is difficult.

There are so many pastors who go through life and never draw a salary in excess of $2,000 per year. Their work keeps them in smaller communities and consequently smaller churches. The quality of their efforts is high, but the monetary returns are low.

Coupled with the salary problem, there is necessity to dress pretty well. Congregations expect their minister to present a well-groomed appearance. They do not like him to be seen in public with shoes that are down at the heels or trousers that are frayed at the cuffs. He has to mingle with more highly paid people, yet he must keep up his tailored appearance as though he had an income equal to theirs.

The mininster's wife also has to dress in keeping with her husband. She must not be too showy, but she cannot be shabby. In all congregations the minister's wife is the target of the Mesdames Grundy, who are ever on the alert to find fault. It takes a reasonable income to provide enough nice clothes for the wife and family of the parsonage or manse.

There are many young men today who might think of going into the ministry, if they were given some assurance that they were not embarking on a life of semi-poverty.

One of the troubles is that some chaps with a gift of the gab find the ministry provides them with sufficient income to get along without too much work, and they follow the calling as a pleasant way to make a living. These men have not the burning desire to preach the Gospel, they have only the hope that they will get a soft charge that will see them through the years in a life of semi-laziness.

In assessing the tangible results of preaching, there is one channel that should not be forgotten. The rector or minister gets many gifts from his parishioners. These may range all the way from cash to vegetables.

There is one interesting case to illustrate this point. One clergyman had a shoe manufacturer in his congregation. The shoe man was a sermon taster of the old school and he was bitter in his criticisms. He would be so hot at times, he would shout out in church.

Whenever the shoe manufacturer was particularly bitter in his outspoken criticism of his pastor, he would repent. The next day the minister would get a pair of fine boots or shoes delivered at his home. And, if the shoe man figured the last outburst had not been long enough away to wear out a pair of shoes, then the shoes would be for one of the minister's family. It was one way of keeping the family in shoes.

At Christmas, many individuals in many congregations make sure there is a turkey for the pastor's Christmas dinner. It is just one of those things that happen, a turkey arrives at the door with a neat card of appreciation.

Wedding Fees

Wedding are another source of income for the pastor. If he lives in a city, he will have many marriages to perform. If he is in a country charge, he may not marry more than two or three couples in a year.

As wedding fees are voluntary it is difficult to estimate the income. Some weddings net the minister five dollars, while a few go as high as twenty-five dollars, but these are not often, —perhaps not even once in a lifetime.

However, some pastors have added from $500 to close to $1,000 per year from wedding fees. It is unwritten law in some denominations that the wedding fees always go to the minister's wife.

But on the general average salaries for pastors and preachers are low. There is only one way to get them higher. That is for the individual supporters of congregations to increase their givings.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

POSITIVELY NO WHEEDLING

Recently you stated that a little wine or beer is good for those of declining years. How about this temperate use of wine or beer when one has high blood pressure or a tendency in that direction?

(P.G.B.)

Answer: If anything ails you, beter have your physician's advice.

Now that we have disposed of your problem, sir, I shall repeat here precisely what I said about the use of wine or beer:

First let me say frankly that I am bitterly prejudiced against alcohol as liquor or beverage and if I had my way it would be available only on bona fide prescription by a reputable physician.

With that clearly understood I'd add that I believe life would be easier for a good many elderly persons to live, and those same elderly persons would be easier to live with, if they took some beer, ale or wine regularly every day.

No amount of wheedling will make me modify that by one jot or tittle. I leave it to you and/or your physician to decide whether you are elderly.

Declining years, you say.

Every individual grows, develops in the first twenty-five years of life. Having attained full development the man or woman remains at his or her acme or best for nearly another twenty-five years, let us hope. Not every one, but the ones who know how to live and live that way. So far, so good.

As a matter of fact it is doubtful if one remains at the acme as long as that. Life is not like that. Life is constant change. Either building, growth, development continues up to the age of eighteen, twenty-five, thirty, forty, or atrophy, decline, has in fact begun. We may kid ourselves or one another about keeping in fine fettle at this acme period of life, but all hooey aside we are dying slowly but surely dying from the moment we attain the acme. The unsentimental people of the Air Corps recognize this when they speak of a pilot of thirty or thirty-five years as the "old man."

How long you take to die is a question for you and/or your physician to discuss. Thanks to our national malnutrition (mineral and vitamin deficiencies) few of us are built in such a logical way as the Deacon's wonderful one-hoss shay. We are generally weak in the mouth — the teeth, the gums — and that is where we begin to die.

Dyeing

I have dyed my hair for years. Now some one says I would have better health if I didn't dye it. Have you any information on this, or a pamphlet on care of the hair? (Mrs. B. M.)

Answer — It is harmless, provided the dye itself is not poisonous. For booklet "The Hair and Scalp" send ten cents and stamped self addressed envelope.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

When the wind is in the East,
Then the fishes bite the least;
When the wind is in the West,
Then the fishes bite the best;
When the wind is in the North,
Then the fishes do come forth:
When the wind is in the South,
It blows bait in the fish's mouth.

Many people believe that fish will bite better when the wind is in certain directions.

The biting of fish is a complex subject and thus far no reliable rule that is generally applicable for different localities has been worked out on a scientific basis.

It is well known that fish bite more readily under certain weather conditions; but no satisfactory correlation of the conditions inducing such activity has ever been made.

The feeding habits of fish are influenced by many factors, such as the temperature and clearness of the water, the presence or absence of currents and other disturbances, the imminence of the spawning season, the supply of natural food available, and possibly the barometric pressure.

Winds influence the biting habits of fish by producing turbidness and thus affecting the visibility of the bait and by carrying large numbers of insects on which fish feed into the water, making food more plentiful.

Careful observers may be able to formulate a rough rule for a particular locality where a wind from a certain direction might be expected to produce certain water conditions.

Don Boyle Hurls Four-Hit Ball And Backed by Heavy Clouting Defeats Hamilton Charles 5 to 0

Game Played on Sunday in Small Park Outside Hamilton

Hamilton, Oct. 1 — With Boyle hurling four-hit ball and holding complete command of the game throughout, Belleville Juniors went one up in the Ontario Softball Association finals when they defeated Charles Juniors, Hamilton hopes, by a score of 5 to 0 in a weekend game here.

Rained out on Saturday, when the game was originally scheduled, and reluctant to allow Belleville to return home without the game because of the heavy expense to which the visitors were put by the necessity of coming here last Friday, the Hamilton youngsters secretly made arrangements with the visitors and took the game to an outside park yesterday where they decided the issue in major league style.

Support Not Good.

The Hamilton squad, cold after a three-weeks lay-off, failed to match the all-round excellence of the visitors. Zuk, who pitched for the losers, turned in a steady exhibition, but his support was anything but flawless, and while he struck out ten, he gave up ten hits, several of them in vital spots, and failed to win a toehold in the scoring column because of his rivals superb pitching.

Boyle let the Hamiltonians down with four hits, struck out nine and walked but one. Behind him, the Belleville team tallied single runs in the second and third, added two more in the eighth and notched their final counter in the ninth.

The winners opened the scoring in the second when Donovan singled, Wardhaugh walked and Boyle singled. In the third, when J. Wardhaugh doubled, Culkin produced the single to drive him in.

Fitzpatrick collected his second hit to open the eighth and when Donovan was safe on an error, they both scored when Spafford's hit to short was booted by Yorston, the Hamilton shortstop. In the ninth a single run came for the winners when Culkin singled and tallied as Bunton slashed a double. Culkin was the big batsman for the Belleville youngsters, with three safeties, while Fitzpatrick and Donovan collected two each. Defensively, H. Wardhaugh and Rollins were standouts, while Mackan and Del Col made brilliant fielding plays to rob opponents of certain hits.

Errors Excusable.

The cold weather and uncertain footing made errors almost unavoidable, and the Hamilton Juniors, idle for some time awaiting opponents, were never sure of themselves, but in spite of general conditions, the game was solidly played and augured well for the return game which will be played at Belleville next Saturday afternoon at three o'clock.

Judgment Reserved After Evidence Given On Dangerous Driving

Magistrate T. Y. Wills reserved judgment in city police court Saturday on a charge of dangerous driving against Donald Blaind 164 Church Street, who last May 1st was in charge of a motor vehicle which struck three girls as they were crossing Dundas Street near the hospital.

As result of the accident, Miss Grace Fudge, age 24, Yeomans Street, sustained fatal injuries later dying in Belleville hospital, while two other girls, Dorothy Seale, 195 Foster Ave., and Mabel Radcliffe, 164 Victoria Ave., were injured.

Witnesses of the accident, including Lyall Twiddy who at the time had been standing waiting for a city bus, and Bernard Parkhurst, passenger in the Blaind driven auto, were called by Assistant Crown Attorney Gordon Robertson, while one of the girls, who was injured was also called to the stand.

After evidence of witnesses called by the Crown was taken, Defence Counsel E. E. Follwell moved for dismissal of the case but this was denied by Magistrate Wills and Blaind was called to the stand in defence. Judgment in the case was reserved until some time this week.

"HAW HAW" MOVED

London, Oct. 1—(Reuters)—Following demonstrations against him by other prisoners, William Joyce, "Lord Haw Haw" of the German radio who last month was sentenced to death for high treason, has been transferred to Wandsworth prison pending hearing of his appeal.

Some 200 young prisoners whose ages range from 16 to 23 were housed in a building overlooking the exercise yard at Wormwood Scrubs. Whenever Joyce, whose appeal is expected to be heard in a fortnight or three weeks time, appeared at exercise he was greeted with cat calls, abuse and threats.

Mingled with the shouting, cries of "Heil Hitler" were heard and some of the youths threatened Joyce that they would "get him."

Guatemala—From Oxcarts to Planes

(From The Rotarian Magazine, Chicago)

Chewing gum far outdates the five-stick package. Centuries before the arrival of Columbus, the Mayan people of Guatemala liked to chew chicle, the hardened sap of the sapodilla tree.

Today that appetite, whetted by minty flavors and fruity fragrances, has circled the world. The wonder is that the industry it has created was possible before the airplane; for the black-green forest of Northern Guatemala, where the sapodilla tree grows in abundance, lacks railroads, and the highways are but foot trails. Today, most chicle comes out of the wilderness by air freight.

The northernmost of Central American republics, Guatemala is about the size of Pennsylvania — (45,000 square miles, with 3,285,000 inhabitants). It enriches the world in many ways, for its exports include coffee (70 percent of all shipping), bananas (20 million bunches a year), sugar, wood, cattle, gold, honey, hides, and, as mentioned, chicle.

Guatemala has one of the most important supplies of harvestable quinine in the Western Hemisphere; its mineral resources are availing development; yet greatest and most satisfying of its treasures is perhaps the rich tradition of an ancient culture which finds expression in everyday life.

Most of the nation is situated from 40,000 to 11,000 feet above sea level — where arose the seat of the Mayan empire, and centuries later the centre of Spanish power in Central America.

During the colonial times Guatemala included all territory now known as Central America as well as the Southern tip of Mexico.

The capital city, Guatemala, was established by Pedro de Alvarado in 1524, but the settlement was short lived. Rebuilt in 1542 on the site of Antigua, it was again lost to an earthquake in 1773. The present capital was started nearby in 1776.

The countries comprising the captain-generalcy of Guatemala were given independence from Spain in 1821, and after a short time as part of the Mexican Empire, they formed the Central American Federation. One by one they seceded, and Guatemala set up an independent government in 1839. Efforts have been made in recent years again to form a Central American Union. Guatemala and El Salvador are now making progress.

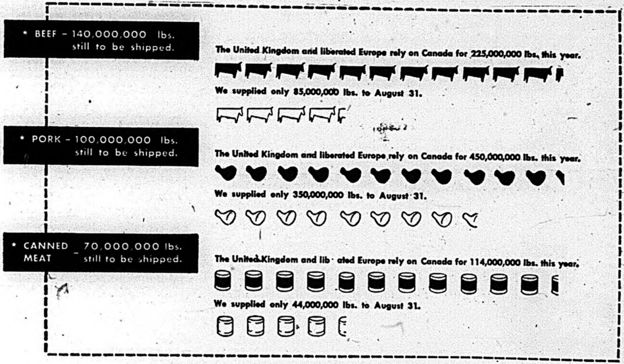
THE CHALLENGE OF AN EMPTY PLATE*



In most liberated European countries, there is a desperate shortage of meat.

As a great food-producing nation, Canada must, can — and will — help to meet the emergency.

The job will not be finished at the year's end. Food scarcities in Europe will continue until the next harvest.

* * *

This year, Europe is relying on Canada for a minimum of 789 million pounds of beef, pork and canned meat.

Up to the end of August, only 479 million pounds had been sent.

How soon can we bridge the gap?

Livestock marketings are normally at their heaviest in the last four months of the year.

If we are to help feed the hungry peoples of devastated Europe, this is the time to make our greatest effort.

* * *

To do our part, we must reduce our own consumption of meat and also assure that everyone in Canada gets a fair share.

That is why rationing is necessary.

MEAT RATIONING ADDS TO EVERYONE'S WORK.

The producer who slaughters, the retailer who sells, the consumer who buys and eats—they all play a vital part.

AS A CONSUMER, HERE IS HOW YOU CAN CO-OPERATE

1. Try to plan your meat purchases before leaving home by determining what cuts you intend to buy and their approximate weights.
2. Make sure you have enough valid coupons and tokens to cover your proposed purchases by referring to the Consumer Coupon Value Chart and the Coupon and Token Calculator. Copies may be obtained from your Local Ration Board or Ration Branch.
3. Know the dates your "M" coupons become valid.
4. Do not buy more meat than you really need.
5. Avoid shopping at rush hours.
6. Be patient. Remember — your butcher may have inexperienced help.

WEDDINGS

BRANT—HILL

Mohawk Reserve.—A lovely early Autumn wedding took place in Christ Church at three o'clock, Thursday afternoon, Sept. 27, when the Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Herbert Pringle, united in holy matrimony, Jean Winnifred, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Hill, Belleville; and Russell Edward, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Brant, Buffalo, N.Y., recently returned from five years' service overseas. To the strains of the Wedding March from Lohengrin, the winsome bride entered the church on the arm of her father who gave her in marriage. She wore a floor-length white crepe dress, made with sweetheart neckline, full length white tulle veil, with floral bandeau. Her only ornament was a necklace of pearls, the gift of the bridegroom. She was attended by her sister, Mrs. Phyllis Zachariah, as matron of honor, wearing turquoise blue crepe, with matching shoulder-length veil; and by Miss Helen Zachariah as bridesmaid. She wore a mauve and black printed crepe gown, with small matching hat. The bride's demure little sister, Donna, was the charming flower girl. She wore an eyelet embroidered frock of pale blue organdie, made on princess lines, with matching bandeau of satin baby ribbon. She carried a Colonial bouquet of multi-colored flowers. Messrs. Percy A. Barnhardt and Carman A. Foster attended the bridegroom. After the ceremony, sixty guests assembled at the home of the bride, where a bountiful wedding dinner was served. The dining room was attractively decorated with pink and white streamers, centred with wedding bells, and the living room with red, white and blue streamers. Mr. and Mrs. Brant will make their home in Buffalo.

66th Wedding Anniversary to Be A Quiet Event

Remembrances of sixty-six years of happily married life were recalled by Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Smith, 40 North Front Street, on occasion of their 66th wedding anniversary, which today they are celebrating in a quiet way.

Married in Kingston back in 1879, Mr. and Mrs. Smith have since made their home in the Bay of Quinte district, and for the past nine years have resided with their son and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Smith, North Front St.

Both natives of the Glenora Road district just east of Picton, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, ages 87 and 86 years respectively, were childhood sweethearts and attended the same public school. The bride of sixty-six years is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Brown, Glenora Road.

A carpenter and millwright by trade, Mr. Smith during his younger years worked at his trade throughout the Bay of Quinte district and for a time worked in canning factories in British Columbia. Formerly members of the Methodist Church, they now belong to the United Church of Canada. Both are today enjoying fairly good health, although Mrs. Smith suffers slightly from a heart condition. Mr. Smith is frequently seen about Belleville.

Trade of a millwright is more or less followed by one of his sons, Mr. Ralph Smith, works foremen at Stephens-Adamson for many years. Another son Harold Smith lives in Toronto, while a daughter, Mrs. George Mastin, the eldest of the family, lives at Gananoque. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Smith have lived with their son, Ralph at Rednersville and Belleville, for the past nine years.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith have received a cable of congratulations from Their Majesties, The King and Queen. Telegrams were also received from Mr. G. H. Stokes, M.P., and Mr. McGregor, M.P.

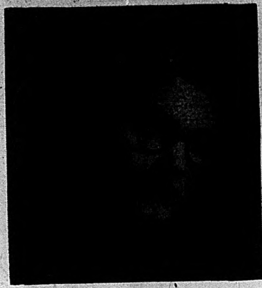
Trousseau Tea Very Enjoyable

On Friday afternoon, Mrs. W. T. Muir entertained at a delightful trousseau tea in honor of her daughter, Dorothy, bride-elect of October. Receiving the guests were Mrs. Muir, Miss D. Muir, and Mrs. H. Clarke, mother of the groom. Showing the trousseau in the afternoon were Mrs. Mary Ferguson and Mrs. Hugh Simpson. Miss Ruth Morgan, Miss Frances Cannon and Mrs. H. Simpson showed the trousseau in the evening. Miss Jean Muir, sister of the bride, and Miss Marie Embury looked after the bride's book.

At the tea table, Mrs. J. G. Hornsby and Mrs. W. Pepper poured tea in the afternoon and Miss Helen Blair and Miss Irene Muir poured in the evening. Mrs. R. Clarke and Mrs. R. Dougherty served.

The table was covered with a lace cloth, and held silver candelabra and a glass bowl of pink roses. The house was beautifully decorated with Autumn flowers.

Nearsighted? Farsighted? Vanity Can Ruin Vision



Choose frames that are becoming to your face in an attractive shade.

By HELEN FOLLETT

SURVEYS show that about fifty per cent of women who suffer from impaired eyesight are wearing specs. The other fifty per cent are suffering from vanity; they won't wear glasses because they fancy they will look older. They don't stop to consider what happens when vision is impaired and nothing is done about it.

Nervousness and headaches may result. Strain on the optic mechanism will show itself in the countenance. Wrinkles come creeping along because the eyelids are inclined to half close to protect the soul windows against light.

Eye Glasses

Eye glasses are worn so generally these days, worn by so many young persons, one thinks nothing about them. To some women they are becoming, impart an air of distinction.

The career girl, especially, should take good care of her eyes, as perfect sight is necessary to any job. She must have a keen mind, steady nerves, powers of concentration and accuracy if she is to do her work well.

These blessings will not be hers if her poor peepers are crying out for help. Eyestrain is not just a local trouble; it is reflected in mental and physical conditions.

Early Correction

It sometimes happens that if glasses are worn when impairment first starts, they will correct the weakness, can be discarded later. This is especially true of teen-age girls.

The short-sighted woman who refuses to use lenses, puts her self in danger. She stumbles over steps, makes awkward movements. She appears to be in a state of confusion, which does not make for poise or grace. She who is long-sighted must have the menu card read to her, and that's no treat to the best feller who wonders why in heck she doesn't wear glasses.

One has a wide choice of frames and lenses. Opticians have put their shoulders to the beauty wheel, are doing all they can to reconcile the cash customer to putting panes on her soul windows.

PINE GROVE W.I.

The September meeting of Pine Grove W.I., was held Thursday, September 27, at the home of Mrs. Fred Kingston, Oak Hill Lake, with an attendance of eleven members and four visitors.

The President was the presiding officer and opened the meeting with community singing.

In the absence of the Secretary, Mrs. F. Heasman, carried out her duties. A beautiful "Thank You" card was received by the Institute from Miss Bernice Hermon.

It was decided to invite the Chatterton, Uniondale, Wallbridge and River Valley branches to meet with the Institute in October, the meeting to be held in Marsh Hill Church in the evening.

It was moved and seconded the Institute make donations to the Community Chest Fund and the Central War Fund.

Mrs. C. Marisette, convener for the program, gave a paper on "Agriculture", which proved very interesting.

Mrs. Frederick conducted a contest and Mrs. Marisette gave a humorous reading.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem, after which refreshments and a social time were enjoyed by all.

PHILLIPSTON-ZION W.I.

Mrs. Clifford Ketcheson was hostess to a goodly number of members on Thursday afternoon, with Mrs. Robson presiding for the opening of the meeting.

The monthly sewing day will be combined with the regular meeting in October with a pot luck dinner.

Educational films available to the Institutes were discussed and other items of interests.

The motto "May we never be hasty but always generous" was ably dealt with by Mrs. Harry Ketcheson presenting the subject as it might be taken by the Christian Scientist as thought control, or by the psychologist as emotional control, or by the clergy as character inspiration.

Community singing led by Mrs. Roy Sills, song leader, was followed by a paper on "Citizenship", by the Convener, Mrs. Clifford Ray. Institute women were advised to accept duties and to study ways to help the cause of Democracy.

Current Events brought a lively discussion on meat rationing and labor strikes.

The National Anthem closed a very interesting and instructive meeting after which the hostess and conveners served refreshments.

Couple Honored On 35th Wedding Anniversary

A very pleasant evening was spent on September 27, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Kingston, of Wallbridge, when a number of friends and relatives gathered to honor Mr. and Mrs. Albert Kingston, of R.R. 3, Belleville, on the occasion of their 35th wedding anniversary. The dining room table was tastefully decorated with pink and white streamers and the gift table was centred by the three-tiered wedding cake.

The evening was spent in listening to music played by Mrs. John Kingston. Mr. Gow, of Plainfield, recited. A speech by Mr. Sam Nicholson was read, congratulating them on their anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. Kingston have three daughters, Margaret, Laura and Marion, and three sons, John, Kenneth and Harold, and also sixteen grandchildren, who were all able to be present. Mrs. Kingston's brother, Mr. William McMechan, Trenton, was also present.

The couple received many lovely gifts, including a 66-piece dinner set from the family. Mr. and Mrs. Kingston thanked everyone for the gifts. Afterwards dainty refreshments were served. Guests were present from Trenton, Belleville, Plainfield, and Wallbridge.

50th Anniversary Of Wedding Is Celebrated

On Friday, September 28, Mr. and Mrs. J. Culloden, Front St., celebrated the 50th anniversary of their wedding. About thirty guests were present as friends and relatives gathered to extend their congratulations. Mr. and Mrs. Culloden received many lovely presents. Cables were received from two sons overseas.

The evening was spent in games and dancing with Mr. George Gulliver playing his accordian. Mr. and Mrs. Culloden, dressed as a bride and groom, were led to the tea table where they cut the wedding cake. The customary toasts were given. Mrs. Culloden wore a lovely corsage of red roses, a gift of her husband.

Three generations were present at the anniversary celebration.

Fashion Flashes

MANY GIRLS prefer the well-cut untrimmed coat for winter wear, dressing it up with varied accessories such as a big shoulder-strap bag and flared cuff gloves of leopard-stenciled lapin.

Crowding out the ubiquitous silver fox jacket, so far as the smart woman is concerned, is the topper of natural lynx in all its deep-haired, creamy beauty. While it is especially smart with country clothes and over town tweeds, many women are wearing it with afternoon things especially since so many women wear silver fox with tweeds and sweaters.

A few designers are including starkly Edwardian fashions in their new collections. One house uses black jacquard satin for a dress made with modified leg-of-mutton sleeves, a tightly buttoned basque bodice with high neckline and a flaring skirt.

For the right type of wearer, one designer has turned out a dashing cape of royal blue woollen and lined it with inky black dyed Hudson seal. It has an extremely high petal collar and a very flared hemline.

"Never nicer" seems to be the consensus of opinion on the little black dress. Black crepe is used for a pretty number made with deep keyhole neckline and front-draped skirt. On one cuff a "bracelet" is embroidered in multicolored beads, jewel-tone stones and pearls.

Bright splashes of color appear in many school-age fashions, such as a black and white checked wool jumper which has bright red braid outlining slit pockets at the breastline. Shown with a bright red pullover sweater.

The Men's Wear Tailleur

By PRUNELLA WOOD

IN THE MIDST of all the more novel woollens for fall, the correct and classic skirt and jacket suit still rates a lot of the spotlight. It's an American uniform for the city dweller, not to mention the commutor, who finds it her best friend the year 'round in one weight or another.

Barbara Stanwyck of the movies here shows off her new, blue, men's wear worsted suit, which Edith Head of Warner studio designed for her. Please note that the jacket "sets" just as well on a sitting Barbara as it would were she standing. That's expert cutting and tailoring.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Wearing Sleeve-Band of Mourning

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I am a young soldier convalescing in a hospital, and soon to be discharged from service. Early this month my wife died in childbirth, and our baby also died. I would like to wear some token of respect for these loved ones.

Will you kindly tell me if this is proper, and if so what it would be during the remaining time of my service, and later on, with my civilian suits? Am I right in thinking that it would be some type of arm brassard?

S. H.

As long as you are wearing an Army uniform, it is against regulations for you to wear any symbol of mourning. But after you don civilian clothes, it will be entirely correct for you to wear as a symbol of mourning, a band of dull black cloth sewn on the left upper arm of your suit coats and overcoats. The practically standard width of this mourning band is three inches, and it can be attached to any color of civilian suits and overcoats. The customary period for wearing the mourning band is six months, but this depends, of course, on your wish. Although your suits may be for example of blue or gray, you should, while you are wearing the mourning band, wear black shoes ties, and socks; and your shirts and handkerchiefs should be all-white.

And Now a Ceremony Performed by a Minister

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My husband has just returned from overseas. While he was at camp before he left, we had a civil marriage performed there and none of our families or friends were present. Now we would like to be married by a minister. Is this proper, and permissible? We are both Protestants, but we are not affiliated with any church here where we now are living. If it is permissible for us to be married in church, how should we go about making the arrangements?

Miriam

Indeed it is proper and permissible for you and your husband to have this ceremony performed by a minister at any time now. Look up a minister of your denomination, and consult him as to a convenient time. Decide whether you wish to have the ceremony performed in his study, in your home, or in the church. You may, if you wish, invite a few guests, members of the two families, other relatives, intimate friends.

FASHION FLASHES

A BIG DASH of Scotch enlivens college-girl fashions. A charming party dress is of brightly plaided tissue wool with deep, scooped-out oval neckline, tiny gilt buttons on bodice, puffed sleeves and kidskin belt.

There's ease and comfort in the modified dolman sleeve which appears in blouses as well as coats and dresses. Brown wool jersey is used for a blouse with dolman sleeve and high, rounded neckline. Nice with a gray velveteen skirt made with a drawstring waistline.

Neatness and Appearance

Every Hair in place, Make-up Perfect, Jo Stafford Makes a Lovely Appearance

By HELEN FOLLETT

IF A GIRL is going to look chic and sassy, and that's precisely how she should look these days, she has to keep a weather eye on every detail of get-up. The beholder will spot a sartorial error in a glance, often overlooking good points, which seems a pity.

The scrambled coiffure is distinctly out of the picture. Straight hair seems to be the rage; it must be smooth as satin, without a single rag-tag or bob-tail hanging at the nape line. This hair-do may look simple enough, but it is often more difficult to manage than the curly mop.

Doorknob Coil

If you are going in for the doorknob arrangement, tie the long ends securely with a tape or ribbon the color of your tresses, and knot it securely. Otherwise your towering doughnut may pull away from its moorings.

Among sartorial defects are belts that go ziggy, aren't snug and trim; skirt hems that have lost a few stitches and hang down, heels that have run over, giving an ugly appearance to the legs.

Cluttered Purse

Then there are purses which, when opened, display a cluttered mess of junk, seem to contain everything but the vegetables for dinner. Women are forever exclaiming about the queer things men carry in their pockets, but they are as nothing compared to the odds and ends a woman will stow in her purse. Seems to your good looks reporter, it might be a good idea to have a purse cleaning week. What say, lady?

There are girls and women whose slips show below the hems of their frocks. For heaven's sake, why? Slips nearly always have to be shortened, and it is just as easy to cut them off enough so there will be no danger of their hems getting in the public eye.

There never before has been a time when nearly all women's legs have been encased in wrinkled stockings. War stockings weren't fashioned as they used to be, for some reason or other. And that is precisely why one should see that the seams are straight, that stockings are harnessed with supporters that really support.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Eyebrows and Eyelashes

Eyebrows should accent good appearance. They don't always do that when they are teased and tweezed to a faint line. The emaciated eyebrow has been responsible for duplicated faces that carry the vapid, vacuous expression. Nature does a very handsome job now and then when designing forehead scimitars; when that has happened, it is a good idea to let well enough alone. Little fuzzers that have wandered from the fold should be plucked, but why do away with the whole flock? The depleted eyebrow is old stuff; but some of our pretty ones haven't found that out.

The arched pattern is graceful and appealing. Some of the quirky zigzags and harsh, straight, narrow lines are nothing less than sinister. Facial expression is dependent, to a certain extent, upon the design, which should impart warmth of feeling, giving character and charm to the face.

A neat tidying-up of the premises will be granted any woman. Eyebrows that meet and hold hand should have a divorce; we never see that kind any more. Continued extermination of the bridge that unites them will finally destroy the growth. Evidently the new shafts get discouraged, give it up as a bad job. The electric needle can be used for the purpose of doing away with unwanted hirsute threads.

Beauty operators who specialize in eyebrow arching deplore what has been going on among girls who do their own beautifying work. Many a pair of graceful brows have been hopelessly ruined by over-tweezing, that changed the natural pattern. Sometimes these crazy designs make a girl look scared or hare-brained. Forehead decorations are up-rooted, mangled, pulled apart, re-created into wraiths of former loveliness.

There is a distinct turn-about now, and for that let us be thankful. We should sing anthems of thanksgiving that the sisters have come to their senses. As an indoor sport, yanking out one's eyebrows is the least interesting. It has proved the theory that women will suffer anything for the sake of appearance.

The little fuzzers should be kept smooth, in good marching order. To achieve this state of glossy grooming, apply mineral oil or brilliantine with an eyebrow brush. If mascara is used, get a product with an oily base.

With the first sweep of the brush at the inner terminal of the eyebrow, sweep it straight up. Then slide the bristles along to get a clear cut edge, brush the far end downward.

As for eyelashes, every woman agrees that she wants hers long, black, curly and silky. That's what every child should have asked for when her fairly godmother kissed her in the cradle.

Much can be done to cultivate luxuriant lid fringes. Apply mineral oil at night. In the morning, bathe the eyes with hot water, then with cold to spur circulation.

Success Story is that of the fur-lined garment—suit-pjacket or coat. A wonderful suit of royal blue woollen has a loosely cut wrap-around jacket with fine broad shoulders and melon-shaped sleeves that fold over to form muff pockets. Lined with black Hudson seal. Skirt is very slim.

It's amazing how many versions of the topper are around for Autumn wear. Very smart and new is a white, suede-finished wool topper in winter white. It has square shoulders and is double breasted. Its brown velvet buttons match the brown velvet collar.

The Marry Go Round

By HELEN ROWLAND

Man's Sweet Dream

The release from prison camp of Leon Blum, one-time premier of France, will recall to the minds of many, his rather startling book on "Marriage" and what he called "free union", published in 1937.

Before that Sir Bertrand Russell had called it "emotional freedom", in his own writings; others called it "companionate marriage," and the Greeks must have had a word for it, too. Mine was "lockless-wedlock".

I often wonder if all the books and discussions of a decade ago on these subjects may not have had a lot to do with what we now call "juvenile delinquency". Everybody spoke and wrote so frankly of the necessity for loosening the marriage ties.

The brilliant idea in Leon Blum's book and most of the others was that the marriage tie should be a slip-knot. That marriage was too confining in its conventional form. That married people should have their cake, and then be permitted to go around sampling everybody else's That they should be tied— but with such a long rope that they could wander into other fields in search of romance and diversity.

"Free union!" That sounds to me almost as paradoxical as dry rain, a fat sylph, or a married bachelor!

It is never a woman, but always some brilliant impeccable man, who visualizes this marital Nirvana, in which a man can legally possess the woman of his heart, and still go out and enjoy playing Romeo or Casanova with all the other charming girls who catch his fancy. Sweet dreams!

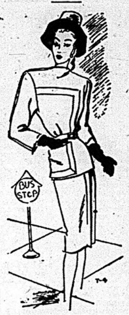
But, alas, Nature loaded the dice against man and his two-way marriage idea when she gave woman a one-way heart. She settled the whole problem, away back before the Monolithic Age, when the first lady mammal met her mate and convinced him that he was a "one-woman man".

No normal woman wants to be free—she wants to "belong" to somebody. She wants security and certainty—not variety. She wants a whole-time marriage while it lasts, not a part-time marriage. You can't be married and "emotionally free" at the same time. Because the secret of a successful marriage is teamwork! And you can't achieve good team-work, if each of you is pulling in a different direction.

Marriage is a partnership; and there is no other partnership on earth in which one partner would feel that he was entitled to go out and devote his time and interest to a rival. A man kids himself with the idea that he can be dead in love with his wife, and at the same time quite alive to the charms of other women. But a woman has a single-track mind and a one-way heart.

It is not the marriage laws nor the social conventions which have put the lock in wedlock. It is human nature. No man can think of another man in his wife's life without reaching for a gun or a club. And no woman wants to be one of a crowd, in any man's life! That is just man's sweet dream!

New Suit Note



Overblouse jacket with slim skirt.

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

SOMETHING new in the way of a suit comes to us in this gray wool overblouse model. Collarless, this design closes in back with a slide fastener. A wide fold at the yoke continues down the side of the bodice. The skirt achieves a wrap-around look by means of a fold down the left side. The outer arm seams are topped by a narrower fold which extends across the shoulders. The jacket has one large patch pocket. It is nice on its own or with furs.

The Experts Say

By HELEN BANNERMAN

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Sept. 29. (CP)—It is the steady, even pace that usually wins in the long run, says the Health Department's Nutrition Division, and recalls the hare and the tortoise. This is especially true of foods needed for good health—for eating the right foods only one day a week does you about as much good as having religion only on Sundays.

For example, Canada's food rules require that a citrus fruit or some other foods supplying vitamin C be eaten every day. The reason for this is that vitamin C cannot be stored by the body to any extent, so that if you eat a large quantity a few days a week the surplus goes to waste and eventually your body is short of this necessary vitamin.

Recent experiments, which may achieve positive progress by next hay fever season, are being carried on to see whether or not the ailment is connected with a lack of vitamin C or faulty utilization of it.

At this time of year, the vitamin C foods to include in the daily diet are tomatoes, citrus fruits, potatoes and vegetables such as cabbage, brussel sprouts and cauliflower.

Skill in handling foods is developed these days with meat rationing drawing upon the resourcefulness of all food preparers, because rationing calls not only for careful buying but also for proper cooking.

The Agriculture Department Home Economists say the old-fashioned way of roasting meat in a hot oven and cooking it at a high temperature shrinks it and reduces the number of servings. To get the maximum amount from a roast, keep the oven at a moderate temperature, 325 degrees Fahrenheit to 350 degrees Fahrenheit, throughout the entire cooking period.

Cook uncovered, fat side up. Do not add water. Add fat to lean roasts, and baste occasionally. Place rolled or flat roasts on a rack. Turn rolled roasts every half hour. Dredge the roast with flour and season it before cooking if you like.

Cooking times vary with thegree. meat, weight, thickness, shape of roast, and proportion of bone to fat. Use a reliable timetable for various kinds of meat, taking into consideration these factors and try to get the cooking time exactly right.

Let the cooked roast stand in a warm place for a short time. This makes for more economical carving.

Greenberg's $300,000 Homer Sets Stage for World Series Between Chicago and Detroit

Teams Expect to Split About Half Million as Parks Are Roomy

By JACK HAND
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Hank Greenberg's $300,000 home run, welcomed with itching palms by both Detroit Tigers and Chicago Cubs, has set the stage for a World Series of near-record proportions.

The Athletes could split approximately $500,000 on a 60-40 basis. A Washington pennant would have made a deep gouge in the player melon because of the limited seating capacity of Griffith stadium.

All the "if" situations, weatherman worries and last-day jitters were banished by Greenberg's lusty clout into the left field stands at Sportsman's Park in the ninth inning of yesterday's remnant ball game. Three were on and the Tigers trailed by a run when the former army captain came through.

The blow that gave the Tigers a 6-3 victory climaxed weeks of anxious waiting by Tiger patrons who had seen their favorites accused of "backing in" to the flag.

Detroit hadn't been too sure about sweeping the final pair from St. Louis Browns and had made tentative arrangements to hold out Hal Newhouser for a play-off game today that never will be played.

A Big Decision.

When Virgil trucks weakened in the sixth, Steve O'Neill replaced the recently discharged sailor with his No. 1 boy, Newhouser. That was a big decision to make for if it had failed, Steve would have had to string along with a second-line pitcher in the money game with the Senators.

Rain that fall all through the big game washed out the second tilt in the first inning but it didn't matter. The Tigers were in.

George Stirnweiss of the Yanks surprisingly won the American League batting title yesterday with three hits in New York's 12-2 romp over Boston, advancing to .309, one point ahead of Chicago's Tony Cuccinello who was rained out of a final doubleheader with Cleveland. The Yanks finished fourth, lowest since 1925 and worst in the Joe McCarthy regime.

Cavarretta Wins Title.

Chief interest in the National League's final day was the hitting duel between Phil Cavarretta of Chicago and Tommy Holmes of Boston, won by the Cubs' first sacker, .355 to .352. The two safe blows in a "mean nothing" 5-3 decision over Pittsburgh saved the day for Cavarretta.

Holmes collected four hits although his Club was shut out 1-0 by Rookie Don Fisher of the Giants in a 13-minute first game. But the Braves' left fielder was horsecollared in the second contest, a 2-22 tie called at the end of seven frames because of darkness.

Harry Brecheen added another victory to make his season record 15-4by hurling St. Louis to a 3-2 edge over Cincinnati.

Ed Stanky set a league record by drawing his 148th base on balls as Hal Gregg hung up his 18th decision, a 4-1 Brooklyn triumph over the Phillies.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, Oct. 1 (AP)— It's just a coincidence, of course, but a good one that the managers of all-star teams in the navy "world series" now under way in Hawaii are Schoolboy Rowe, who rose to fame with the Tigers, and Billy Herman, for many years a Cub.. They have some players the real world series contenders could use, too—Dick Wakefield, Ned Harris and Fred Hutchinson (Detroit) and Charley Gilbert, Whitey Platt and Wimpy Quinn (Chicago).

Guess Again.

(A final look at the world series pitchers).

Al Benton, Tigers—returned to baseball from the navy this season. Won five games, then broke a leg. Ran into an August slump that damaged his record badly.. Virgil Trucks, Tigers—just out of the navy and perfectly willing to give the Cubs his blues...Jim Tobin, Tigers—A Cub jinx for years in the National League but he wasn't this before leaving the Braves....Claude Passeau, Cubs,—last spring he was a doubtful asset because of bone chips in his right elbow. Now his elbowing has helped put the Cubs in the chips..Ray (Pabby) Prime, Cubs,—was a righthander but switched to southpaw pitching because of a burn on his hand. Has been burning up the league late in the season....Hy Vandenberg, Lon Warneke, Ray Starr and Paul Derringer, Cubs—what those old guys.

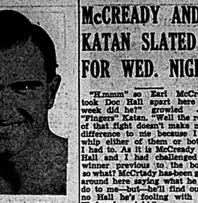
JOHN KATAN



EARL McCREADY

John "Fingers" Katan wasn't fooling last Wednesday when he stepped into the ring at the Hume Arena and challenged the winner of the McCready-Hall main bout. The Ole "Fingers" is in an ugly mood these days and figures he has been getting the worst of practically everything that has happened in a wrestling way. He is getting tired of being "pooshed" around by referees and other members of the pachydermic fraternity and this week is going all out to prove that he is the master of McCready and the logical contender for the British Empire crown at present adorning the brow of the Pride of North York, Whipper Billie Watson. The "Fingers" is dangerous when in a mood like that, and Wednesday night at the Arena should see some torrid mat calisthenics. On the same card Pat Flanagan, the high-kicking ex-airman will mingle with Demitri, the Furious Russian. Demitri was here last year—and, well you know the rest. In the preliminary the Ole Showman, Bunny Dunlop, will see—or attempt to find out what makes Walter Sirois tick. Advance sale at Bill Cook's tobacco shop. Doors open 8.15. First bout 8.45.

Durrett's Homer Helps to Save Series for Royals

Newark Bears on Way to Title When Long Hit Came

Newark, N.J., Oct. 1 (AP)— Balked in their bid to sweep Montreal Royals out of the International League playoffs yesterday when Elmer (Red) Durrett's two-run homer gave the champions a 5-4 victory, Newark Bears were ready to try again tonight with lanky Karl Drews picked to throw the haymaker.

Drews, a 19-game winner during the regular season and undefeated in three playoff starts, can send his teammates into the Junior World Series classic against Louisville by throttling the Royals. He was expected to be opposed by either Tommy Warren or Jean Pierre Roy.

Should the Royals win and pull up to a three-two deficit in games the act will transfer back to Montreal for the sixth game and the seventh, if necessary.

The Bears had the Royals all but counted out for their fourth straight time until Durrett poked his 380-foot round-tripper into the right field bleachers after Salty Parker opened the eighth by getting aboard on shortstop Dick Baker's fumble. Frank Hiller, who hurled a four-hitter, was the victim of the blow. Another homer by Howie Schultz with two on base in the first inning, accounted for all of Montreal's markers.

The Bears fought back to tie the score at John Gabbard's expense, scoring once in the third and twice in the sixth when Will Rabe doubled and Frank Drews and Hal Douglas trapped singles with two out. They went ahead in the sixth on a walk, Joe Buzas' double and Baker's loft.

Roy replaced Gabbard in the sixth and checked the rally. Then he ran into a heap of trouble in the ninth before the Royals won. Three walks had the sacks crammed but Frank Drews ended the game by lining the first pitch to Roland Gladu.

DIAMOND-DUFFY BURG IS DETROIT AS SERIES OPENS

Toughest Touch is How to Put 300,000 Customers Into a 55,000-Seat Park

By SID FEDER

Detroit, Oct. 1 (AP)—Detroit was a somewhat series-silly city today.

Always a diamond-daffy burg, it let its hair down and blew the roof off this time. And some of the folks were even thinking of a Greenberg-for-mayor movement for that grand slam homer Hank hammered to win Detroit's seventh American League pennant for the Tigers in St. Louis yesterday.

But, in spite of the delirious doings, there were still a lot of series headaches. The toughest touch was not only in how to fit 300,000 customers into a 55,000-seat ball park, but also how to cram thousands upon thousands more into hotels already bulging at the seams.

Two lake steamboats have been tied up at the Woodward Avenue docks to handle the overflow—and they already have the standing-room-only sign out, too.

Capacity Crowd Coming.

Naturally, there aren't going to be 300,000 in the stadium when the Tigers and the Cubs walk out there the day after tomorrow. But that was the number of requests. All over capacity were turned down, so there probably will be between 54,000 and 55,000 in the seats for the opener of the usual four-out-of-seven set.

Back of Hal Newhouser, manager Steve O'Neill's going to run into a pitching problem when he reaches into the trunk for succeeding servers. If Newhouser loses the first game the Tigers' elbower in the second scuffle is slated to be Virgil (Fire) Trucks, the right-hand fast-baller fresh out of his sailor suit. If Hal wins, the second-game hurler, will be Stubby Overmire, the stumpy southpaw. The third game thrower will be whichever of these two fellows has the second day off. Dizzy Trout will go into the fourth game in Chicago Saturday.

Confused in Odds.

The pricemakers were confused in posting odds. The prices ranged all the way from Detroit favorite at 10-13, up to one fantastic figure making Chicago 2-5 to win its first world crown since the Cubs trampled the Tigers 'way back in 1908.

The still-celebrating Bengals got back from St. Louis today, and the Cubs, who returned to Chicago for clean shirts and fresh razor blades, are due in time to work out on the series greensward tomorrow. Unless Manager Jolly Cholly Grimm goes into his juggling act at the last minute, his Cub lineup against Newhouser's southpaw shoots will present three lefthand hitters—or four, if husky Paul Gillespie draws the catching assignment—and will have veteran Roy Hughes at shortstop instead of Line Merullo.

Handful of Trumps.

Grimm has a handful of trumps to match any aces, back of Hank Borowy, there are guys like Hank Wyse, with 22 wins, and Claude Passeau, or portsider Pappy Prim or even Paul Derringer, who's won 16.

Meanwhile, Eddie Fitzgerald, the Tigers' secretary, sat and sweated it out. All he has to do is fill more than 400 press and radio requests for press box space. They come all the way from Los Angeles, San Francisco and Vancouver. Eddie insists he's going to put on his hat and walk out for keeps if one comes in from Tokyo.

London — (CP) — Brig.-Gen. Robert Harvey Kearsley, clerk of the cheque and adjutant, has been promoted lieutenant in His Majesty's Body Guard of the Honorable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms.

McCREADY AND KATAN SLATED FOR WED. NIGHT

"H.mmm" so Earl McCready took Doc Hall apart here last week did he?" growled John "Fingers" Katan. "Well the result of that fight doesn't make much difference to me because I can whip either of them or both if I had to. As it is McCready beat Hall and I had challenged the winner previous to the bout—so what? McCrtady has-been going around here saying what he will do to me—but—he'll find out its no Hall he's fooling with next Wednesday night."

But the "Moose" grinned quietly to himself in that easy fashion of his. "So Katan's starting his pachyderm propaganda again, has he?. "Well if he wrestles half as good as he talks, then the main bout shoiuld be quite interesting."

And so it will if the Katan is in his present "dangerous" mood, and the Pride of Aurora flashes forth with a sample of that Berserkian rage that enabled him to gain a popular decision over Doctor Len Hall here last week. Katan is not very popular with the faithful here as a result of his slap-bang methods while the Moose has a large following due to his clean aggressive style of wrestling. The bout is a popular one.

In the semi-final popular Pat Flanagan, high-kicking ex-airman will mingle with Demitri, hard-hitting Russian wrestler who is well-known to wrestling fans hereabouts. Al "Bunny" Dunlop will open the show in a thirty minute limit bout with Walter Sirois.

An Attractive Card.

Maestro Frank Kurtz, of the Gardens Athletic Club has lined up another outstanding boxing show for his third tournament slated for the Hume Arena here on Friday night.

Heading the card is Glen Dafoe, Trenton, who will cross gloves with Davey Thompson of Oshawa. These boys are both hard-hitting, aggressive fighters and their fine showing here in the last card caused the Gardens Athletic Club master-minds to match them for the main bout here on Friday. Dafoe wades in with all he has while Thompson doesn't back up a step. It looks like a natural.

In the semi-final go Bud Runion, who came within an ace of defeating Jerry Downes here a couple of weeks ago has been matched with Bruce Lidster, Oshawa, another fast-stepping boxer.

Six other three-round bouts round out an attractive card with all the local favorites as well as those from Oshawa and Trenton slated to appear.

As an added attraction Manager Kurtz has secured the services of Baby Yack, former Canadian bantamweight champion, who will referee the entire card. This attraction outranks the first tournaments and the fans are assured of a gala evening's entertainment.

The Same Old Story.

The following excerpts from a letter written by Eddie Schreider former football star of this city and erstwhile coach, trainer and jack-of-all-jobs of a potential junior O.R.F.U. squad here speaks for itself.

"Further to our recent conversation regarding a junior O.R.F.U. football team in Belleville, I wish you to regard this note as the obituary notice of our junior football squad here.

"I have never met such a lack of co-operation and disinterest in any venture I have as yet undertaken. Why the citizens of Belleville cannot see the value of sports for young boys of junior age, is beyond my comprehension. I have done my best in trying to convey my ideas to the different people I have been in contact with and although the majority have agreed with me, none has shown enough interest to work with me on this project."

There it is. The same old story. To the credit of Mr. Schrieder, it must be said that he worked indefatigably to establish the nucelus of a junior football squad here, even to the extent of paying for footballs out of his own pocket. The lackadaisical attitude of the sports public toward ventures of this nature is regrettable. Yet there is a consistent cry here about the lack of sports attractions.

And some people rave about the alarming increase of juvenile delinquency.

One Up.

According to late Sunday night reports, the Columbian Squires, Belleville's aspirants to the Junior OASA title are but one game from the championship. The kids defeated the classy Hamilton-nine in Hamilton over the weekend by a score of 5-0, with Don Boyle once more playing the hero's role. He handcuffed the Hams for nine innings and aided his own cause with a ringing double that was responsible for some very welcome runs. The story which came by wire late for this column appears on another page. The second game is slated for Belleville next Saturday.

LESSON NO. 793
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Although the breaking of rules is mostly practiced by fools, unless a player is in a trance, he's often tempted to take a chance.

Look into the prospects of this deal:

NORTH

♥Q 9 8
♦9 5 4
♣A 6 5

WEST
♠J 10 9 7
♥J 4

♦J 10 3 2
♣10 7 4 2

SOUTH
♠A 5
♥A K 10 6 3 2
♦A Q
♣K 8 3

South talked himself into a slam with this bidding:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 H	2 H
4 NT	5 H
6 H	Pass

The simple assist by north admits more than two tricks. With eight in his own hand, south knows of only 11 tricks in their pair.

To reach for a slam, a player should see more than 11 tricks. But with solid hearts assured, south had the eagers for a peek into slam chances. Nor can a man be blamed for trying.

Four no-trump asks partner how many aces and kings he has. Five hearts is The Kibitzer's convention sign for showing one ace and one king. If not enough, south can still stop at five hearts.

With all the aces and three kings, a small slam could be a good bet here. If partner happens to have diamond king and two little ones, a small slam should roll in. South's small spade could go on it.

If it is the spade king that north has, the small slam will no doubt depend on a diamond finesse. If so, there is a chance that it will be good or a strip-and-endplay may make it good. Or some other clever play may develop. Or a favorable lead. Or a mistake by opponents.

Such were the thoughts of south as he went to six hearts. And he got an opening lead of a spade from west. When he saw dummy, south decided to try the strip-and-endplay to avoid the diamond finesse.

It would have worked except for a clever defence by one of his opponents. Can you see it? I'm going to tell you about it.

TORONTO ARGOS LOSE TO OTTAWA BY 8 TO 6 COUNT

Win Places Three Teams Tied in Big Four With Victory Apiece

By ALAN HARVEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

A surprise show of strength by football's alleged "weak sisters" befuddled the soothsayers today as a three-way traffic snarl developed for leadership of Eastern Canada's two major leagues.

Results of the season's third weekend of competition found Ottawa Rough Riders, Hamilton Tigers and Toronto Argonauts perched atop the Interprovincial Union standings with a victory apiece, while the Ontario Union's three-team tangle involved undefeated Toronto Balmy Beach, Hamilton Wildcats and Toronto Oakwood Indians.

But what really stumped the experts were the upstart performances of Windsor Rockets, Ottawa Trojans and Montreal Hornets.

In the only O.R.F.U. game Saturday, Rockets rebounded from two humiliating defeats to hold Wildcats to a 6-0 score in Hamilton. The score in itself was a startling contrast to the 21-6 count which Wildcats rolled up against Rockets in their previous meeting, but it didn't tell the entire story. It took a third-quarter fumble by Windsor to pave the way for a touchdown by Len Wright, who added Hamilton's sixth point in the fourth quarter on a deadline kick.

Trojans, who share the O. R. F. U. cellar with Rockets, showed power in a 38-0 conquest of Verdun Grads in an exhibition game at Ottawa. Joey Richman scored four touchdowns for Trojans, twice beaten in league games.

Fired Bullet Pass

Tigers took the sting out of Hornets 5-0 in a Saturday night game under the arcs at Montreal, but there was little to choose between the teams in their Big Four debut. Coach Bill Hughes' untested Hornets penetrated inside the Hamilton 10-yard line three times in the final quarter on plays sparked by quarterback Johnny Fripp only to lose possession without scoring.

The game, played before an estimated 4,000 fans, was decided in the first quarter when Jimmy Smith fired a bullet pass to Doug Irvine on a sequence play. Irvine sprinted 23 yards for an unconverted touch.

At Toronto, 10,000 fans who constituted the day's largest attendance saw Rough Riders conquer Argos 8-6 on the strength of a 32-yard placement in the game's dying moments, by 37-year-old lineman George Fraser. The last-ditch rally was particularly sweet to Riders, who lost 11-9 at Ottawa the previous week when Argos pounced for two fourth-quarter touchdowns.

With Fraser collecting all Ottawa points on two placements and two singles, Riders led almost all the way. But Argos took charge midway through the final quarter on one swift offensive capped by Royal Copeland's two-yard plunge for a touchdown which gave the double blue a 6-5 lead. That looked good enough, until Fraser connected for his long placement.

Les Ascott, starry Argo lineman, suffered torn ligaments in left army and side which will keep him out of the game two weeks.

Virgil Trucks Looked Good Although He Lost

By GAYLE TALBOT

En Route to Detroit with the Tigers, Decatur, Ill., Oct. 1. (AP)—It was a happy group of Detroit Tigers that rattled home last night in the opening game of the World Series against Chicago Cubs, Wednesday at Detroit.

The way they won their clincher at St. Louis Sunday, by knocking the Browns aside 6-3 on Hank Greenberg's mighty ninth-inning homer with the bases loaded, filled manager Steve O'Neill's Warriors with a fierce joy.

The fact they captured the flag with the lowest won and lost percentage in baseball history did not dampen the Tigers' faith in their ability.

St. Louis was wrapped in its 10th straight day of rain for the game. Under any conditions less tense than existed yesterday, there would have been no ball game.

It drizzled throughout the contest and the field was virtually a morass.

Although Virgil Trucks, making his first big league start in some two years, weakened somewhat in the sixth inning and had to be relieved by Ace Hal Newhouser, he looked as if he might be a useful citizen in the World Series.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

Busher, the three-year-old filly owned by Louis B. Mayer of Hollywood, scored her ninth victory of the season by defeating 13 rivals in the $50,000 Hollywood Derby at Hollywood Park, earning another $40,470 to bring her earnings to $316,590 in 20 starts. With this amount, the daughter of War Admiral gained 10th place among the leading money-winners of all time. In her win Saturday Busher defeated Quick Reward and Bymeabond which had bested her in races this year.

Whirlaway holds the all-time money-winning championship with $561,161 and Seabiscuit is second on a total of $437,730.

Playing his first game in the backfield of Notre Dame Saturday, Phil Collela, a war veteran of the South Pacific, ran 76 yards for the touchdown on the first play of the gridiron fixture, the score defeating Illinois 7-0.

A soccer team representing the Soviet occupation army scored a 2-0 victory over the British forces eleven in an international match at the Olympic Stadium in Berlin yesterday.

The Navy team ran up a big score in American college football Saturday by blanking Villanova 49-0. The Army trounced the Air Force 32-0 with Glenn Davis, all-American halfback, racing 86 yards for the cadets' first touchdown.

With 27 under par for the four rounds, Ben Hogan of Hershey, Pa., won the Portland, Ore., Open golf tournament yesterday with a record 261 for 72 holes, 14 strokes better than Byron Nelson of Toledo. Harold McSpaden came in third with 277.

Detroit Lions went down to a 21-14 defeat by Washington Redskins in a National Pro Football League exhibition before 25,000 gridiron fans at Baltimore. Joe Krol, last year with the Hamilton, Ont., Wildcats, did not appear in the Detroit lineup.

Frankie Frisch will remain as manager of the Pirates next year for his seventh season, it was announced yesterday by William E. Benswanger of the Pittsburgh National League club. Frisch has failed only once to get his team into the first division.

In United States pro football yesterday, Cleveland Rams swamped Chicago Cardinals 21-0, while Green Bay Packers turned back the Chicago Bears 31-21.

Settings for the Arabian Nights

One unexpected thing Damascus revealed though reluctantly, was the interior decoration of the private palaces of the eighteenth century. Most of these great houses of the wealthy Moslems have been casually destroyed, or their decorations sold to collectors; but a few remain, and, if you are fortunate enough to know an influential citizen, access may be obtained to them. It is not easy to place this work stylistically; there seems to be something in it that is Empire, something of the brothers Adam, something that is Italian, but it is all transfused by the essentially Arab sense of beauty. The rooms are panelled to the ceiling in olive and other beautiful woods, exquisitely worked, while all the pilasters and panels and cornices are modelled in lovely floriated designs in gesso and then enriched with gold, silver, and colour. The ceilings are of amazingly elaborate designs, domed and coffered something like the artesonado work of post-conquest Spain, and almost wholly covered with gold leaf.

Until recently the great palace of Essad Pasha, with its three hundred rooms and its many courts and gardens, was the crowning example of this fine artistry . . . Exquisite apartments, finished in the richest but most delicate woodwork, carved, inlaid, painted and gilded, with flowers and shrubs and gracious fountains giving some idea of what the Arabian Nights tales were all about. Curious, so to find testimony to that high and opulent culture that grew up in the deserts of the East at the hands of nomad Arabic tribes . . .

Of late we have assumed that no more quarries of old architecture were to be unearthed; even Angkor Wat and Sikkim have been revealed to an astonished world; but there are three fields that, while perhaps minor in comparison, still await study and demonstration. One of these is this Moorish work in Damascus of the eighteenth century. — From "My Life in Architecture," by Ralph Adams Cram. (Boston: Little, Brown, 1936.)

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking his 2nd cigar with a sattisfied expression, and ma said, I can hardly wait for the laundry man to call tomorrow.

My, is he as handsome as all that? pop said, and ma said, Dont be silly, as a matter of fact he has a very common face and a disagreeable disposition to match it.

Then what's it all about, are we short of laundry? pop said, and ma said, No more than usual, with the towel situation still at a standstill. My, what I've had to put up with at the hands of that man. Every sheet folded a different way, and smudges on the tablecloths, and sometimes the entire wash a whole week late, with never so much as a weak explination or an apologetic smile, and if I dared to open my mouth in a mild way he'd ask me if I knew there was a war going on, and that was the begining and the end of the one sided argument. Well, it's a long worm that has no turning. The war is over, and yesterday I was actually sollicited by a strange laundry man asking me to give him a trial, ma said.

So that's it, you're going to fire the surly ruffneck, pop said, and ma said, Well not quite, his laundry, is really the most reliable in town in normal times. What I'm going to do is tell him flatly I want the laundry back in 4 days by special delivery service, and when he starts to argue that it's impossible I'll ask him if he hasn't heard there's no war going on. And then I'll casually drop a hint about the rival laundry man who's been courting my favors, and I'm sure I'll win with flying colors. I can hardly wait till tomorrow, she said.

Well hay, ma, can I stay home from school to hear you so you'll have an audience? I said, and ma said, Judging by the report card you brought home yesterday, you need better marks in school more than I need an audience.

Being a good but sad answer.

CHAPTER 5

There was a rustle from Karen, who had been more than quiet since they'd entered the office. She had been almost motionless, sitting back with an air of confidence, her legs neatly crossed, and her eyes softly focused on Brann. She had been waiting for her time, and it had apparently come. She moved in the chair, and if Elaine thought an annoyed expression crossed her pretty face she gave no other evidence of disappointment. But she said in a voice that was cool and certain:

"I had the lead in the original production of the play."

She might have been practicing that line for weeks, knowing that she would probably use it. It was not rushed, not tempered with angriness. It was a statement and it was deliberate and calculated—and pointed.

At the moment Elaine thought all its power was meant for Brann. Later she knew how wrong she had been.

Lee coughed a little and looked at Brann, his face damp with perspiration. He said: "Yes, Miss Stoddard starred in it then. She—she handled the part brilliantly."

Brann nodded. "I'm sure she did." His eyes had grown cautious, more alert. Those were the only changes in his expression of sincere friendliness "Miss gives the appearance of a very of a very talented young woman. I am sure she will find great success on the stage."

"Then," Lee broke in, "you think you could cast her in the lead."

Brann did not hesitate. He looked squarely at Lee and Karen. "No. I do not. I don't take those kinds of risks. I am not a gambler like some producers. When I place thousands upon thousands of dollars of my own money—and mind you, I do not use financial aid from so-called 'angels'—I do it only on sure things. Such as this play. Miss Stoddard, however beautiful and talented she is, is not a sure thing. The lead would have to go to some established star as Miss Foster or others of her caliber."

There was a quiet pause in the office. Elaine imagined she could hear the receptionist filing her nails.

Brann continued: "What I will do, and gladly, is cast Miss Stoddard in a minor though important role such as—" he thumbed open the script book. "Such as this girl Katherine. There is great power in that role. It is a tricky character to play. It would take finesse. A smaller role, yes. But if you're any good, Miss Stoddard, this part will tell. After that, then you may be ready for better buildups."

He sat back, clasped his hands in front of him, then removed his glasses and rubbed his nose. He swung around to Elaine.

"What do you think, Miss Grayson?"

Elaine paused in her thoughts. She dared not look at Lee or Karen. Her throat was tight when she answered. "I think you are right, Mr. Brann."

Karen was standing, her mouth half open angrily. There was the semblance of a sneer on her face as she glared at Elaine. She turned to Brann. "I'm sorry. I'm good enough for the lead. That role was written for me."

Lee was standing at her side, a curious expression on his face. He moved his lips without speaking. Then he shrugged and turned to Brann. "I'm sorry, too, Mr. Brann. You've been very kind. Perhaps we'll have another play to show you some day."

Elaine felt a tight band press her breath in until she thought she would choke to death.

"No, Lee. No," she cried out.

There was a coldness in his eyes when he looked down at her. "Coming, Elaine?"

With a sickening weight in her heart, she moved stiffly out of the office, clutching the script book under her arm. Lee was standing at the door, waiting to close it after them. His face was stony, his eyes a little dull. Elaine only glanced at him before turning around to Brann.

"I'll be back," she said. "If I may."

Brann smiled. "I'm counting on you."

Lee closed the door with a flat, echoing slam, walking away from Elaine.

The snow was soft and wet against Elaine's face. She kept her head bowed a little as she walked slowly along the street with Lee. The sidewalk was like a long, narrow strip of white, smooth cotton. It was late; past midnight. It was quiet.

Lee had knocked quietly on the apartment door and Elaine had bundled into a coat. Karen was sleeping soundly. An arm was flung over her brow and there was a child-like look to the faint pout of her mouth. Lee stared at her for a long time.

Elaine closed the door, feeling a well of hatred spring up toward Karen, and followed Lee down the street.

They had said nothing for several blocks, just walking slowly and evenly, their hands deep in their pockets, their breaths floating little puffs of white clouds into the night.

"Whose side are you on?" Lee had lighted a cigaret, watching the red tip glow against the wind.

"I don't like that question," Elaine answered. "It sounds too much like an ultimatum."

"Maybe it it. Maybe it would be for the best if it were."

"You're too vague," Elaine frowned. "You're not writing lines in a play now. There's a point to this. Get to it."

"All right," he said and took a deep drag on his cigaret. "There has been nothing but constant bickering between you and Karen. Nothing will work out that way. Something has to give."

"Meaning me?"

Lee nodded. "That's the way the cards look, don't they?"

The cold practicalness in his voice squeezed her throat. There were all sorts of silly words and phrases bubbling up in her. She said nothing, though.

"The way it is now," Lee went on. "We're not getting anything done as a writing team. If we don't agree on a goal, then we're shooting off at tangents."

"Tangents. That's a good word."

"Don't be clever now. Elaine. I want to get this settled."

"You already have," she said slowly. "You've cut me right out of the picture and put Karen in. If I don't like it, I can take another street car. There's one every three minutes, they tell me." She paused, brushed some snow away from her eyes. "On the other hand, if it suits me to see you and Karen turn down a chance like Brann offered us today, then I keep my ticket for the rest of the trip. Which ends where?"

Lee shrugged. "Brann's not the only producer."

"No, but he'll do until another Ziegfeld comes along."

"There's still John Warren. The play is ready for him to read."

"He also said he'd try to scrape up some money."

Elaine gestured impatienty with her head. "All right. So he's your man. Make him show you the color of his money first."

Lee walked on silently, then he turned to Elaine and stopped. His hands were on her shoulders, his eyes reaching deep down into hers.

"What's happened to us, Elaine?"

She shook her head. "Darling, darling," she whispered. There seemed to be no use to put it into words.

He leaned down, pressed his lips against her mouth. Her lips were cold, still, unresponding and he jerked away, angry for a second.

"Yes, I know, Lee. You used to kiss me nearly every night. And sometimes lots of times in one night. But that was a long time ago, wasn't it? That was back in school, wasn't it? Years and years ago. You used to kiss me the way you kiss when you own somebody. When those kisses go down inside you and grab you and say this is for keeps. Years and years ago, Lee."

She moved back a step and looked at him, keeping the love for him out of her eyes, stifling it some place inside, so that it wouldn't show.

"I'm taking another street car, Lee. There's one every three minutes, and it's about due. Good by."

She walked quietly down the street, leaving him standing in the still shadows. . .

People were playing the game "Knock, knock." And listening to Major Bowes. And singing "The Music Goes 'Round and 'Round." 1936 was still young, but to Elaine it had seemed a lifetime since she had left Lee standing on the corner.

Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind" had not yet come into its own, and in Washington, D. C., there were people who found jobs in such things as the A.A.A., the C.C.C. the S.E.C., the T.V.A. And there were a lot more people outside of Washington who weren't quite sure what those leters stood for.

And high in the building that held the offices of Anthony Brann, Elaine Grayson was learning a lot about playwriting and production.

She was a reader for Brann and she had her own private office and a good salary. She had returned to him soon after breaking with Lee and Karen and explained the story. He had been sympathetic, yet not sentimental.

He had said: "You have intelligence. I could use you and you could use the job, because you'll learn a lot around here. And you'll have enough time to write a play on your own."

She was sitting in at her desk, an open script book in front of her, idly wondering what her wardrobe needed for a week-end at the Branns' Connecticut home, when there was a short tap on her door.

"Come in." She pushed the book away and waited while the knob turned and the door opened.

It was Lee.

Elaine gripped the curved ends of her high-backed leather desk chair. The winter wind had reddened his face. There was still the eager, youthful expression of confidence, still the smiling eyes and quick grin.

He approached her slowly, with assurance. "Hello, Elaine. I told the office girl not to buzz you. Wanted it to be a surprise."

"How nice of you, Lee." She motioned him to a chair, pushed a box of cigarets in front of him. He had not changed much, she noticed as he lit the cigaret; a little thinner, a little older around the eyes.

"I know you're busy," he began. "I won't stay long."

"Don't be silly," Elaine protested. "I'm glad to see you. It's been a long time."

Lee bit his lip and looked away for a brief second.

"How have you been?" she asked. "The play and everything?"
about." He pulled out a bulky
"That's what I came to see you paper. Elaine recognized it as a contract. Her heart quickened.

"Warren's raised enough money to produce it."

Elaine was happy for him. "How wonderful, Lee. When do rehearsals start? I'd like to drop in and watch a few—if you don't mind?"

Again Lee bit his lip. "Well—they've been held for nearly a month now, I guess. We open in another three weeks."

"In another—! But I haven't seen any publicity about it."

Lee nodded. "We start rolling on that this week. Or as soon as you sign these papers, in fact." He shoved them across the desk. "I hope you'll understand."

Elaine picked up the contract her brows wrinkled in puzzlement. Then she read the document, slowly at first, then rapidly. When she was through, she laid it down on the desk stiffly and looked at Lee.

"That isn't very nice, Lee."

"I was hoping you wouldn't see it that way," he said. "After all, I did most of the writing. You polished it, of course, and we're willing to make a settlement on that. But we want clear rights to it. And you know there really wasn't any contract between us on equal rights to any play. We're willing to be fair."

Kinsmen Team Wins Trophy For Championship

Belleville Kinsmen softballers are champions of their district service league as result of their rather decisive 24-8 win over the Trenton nine at the Belleville fair grounds over the weekend. Following the game the Belleville team was presented with the fine Benedict-Proctor silver trophy which will be competed for annually by district Kinsmen Club teams.

Eleven runs in the first inning was all that Belleville needed to cinch the pastime and the championship as the local hitters hit pitcher Al Insley's slants to their liking. From then on it was just a case of how many with the Trenton boys adding to the local team's score through errors. Eddie Schrieder kept the Trenton batters well in check while his slants were capably handled by Don Thomas.

The new silver trophy, so recently won, will be placed on display at the Kinsmen club rooms at the Quinte Hotel.

Gunman Captured After Shooting Guard

Detroit, Oct. 1 — (AP) — A guard on an armored car was shot to death in front of a downtown bank early today when he resisted efforts of a lone gunman to hold up the vehicle. The bandit was shot and captured in the subsequent chase, police said.

The guard, William Hill of Detroit, was standing near the open rear door of the car when the bandit approached with gun in hand and shouted, "This is a stick-up."

Hill, police said, reached for his own gun and the bandit opened fire. He fled as Hill dropped to the street and pedestrians scurried for cover.

Two other armored cars drivers, who had stopped for a traffic signal, chased after the gunman, exchanging shots during a two-block pursuit.

Police said the bandit fired one shot at his pursuers while they poured nine shots at him, before felling him with a bullet in the groin.

The fugitive, identified by police as Richard Huff, 22, attempted to flee but the guards closed in on him and beat him to the ground with their pistol butts.

He was removed to receiving hospital where his condition was reported "fair."

Pleads Guilty To Arson Committed Fifteen Years Ago

Pleading guilty to arson committed 15 years ago in Prince Edward county, Harry LaLonde, Gilmour, Hastings County, was sentenced to five months when he appeared before Judge Lane in Prince Edward County court at Picton last week.

LaLonde with his wife was arrested by provincial police officers at Gilmour last August 22nd on an arson charge following the burning of the premises owned by Charles Phelps on August 20th, 1944. The offence of 15 years ago was learned by officers when the background of the accused was checked.

In a statement made to police when he was charged with the long standing offence, LaLonde said the burning of their farm residence at Irvine's Gore, Hallowell township, had been planned with household furniture, clothing and other effects first having been hidden in the out buildings.

LaLonde had then gone to Denbigh with arrangements having been made for his wife to call him there informing him of the burning of their farm home. Insurance amounting to $4,300 was collected from the Bay of Quinte Insurance Company, it was stated.

LaLonde will stand trial soon in Belleville for the burning of the Phelps' premises, police here stated.

Accidental Discharge Of Bullets in Pouch Injures Local Youth

Leonard Graham, age 17, of Charles Street, was admitted to the Belleville General hospital, Sunday afternoon suffering from abdominal and chest injuries resulting from the discharge of .22 calibre shells in a belt pouch while out hunting south of Cannifton.

With another city youth, Rex Yard, the Graham boy had gone for a short hunt during the afternoon when in climbing a fence the shells in his belt pouch discharged, several of the lead bullets entering his body. Seeing his companion injured, Yard immediately raised the alarm and running to the highway stopped John Robinson, who was motoring past. The injured youth was then rushed to the hospital by Robinson.

Attended by Dr. Russel Scott of this city, the condition of the youth this morning was reported fair. It was stated that the lead bullets failed to enter deeply into the youth's body as the force of the exploding shells was minimized through their being in a pouch instead of the gun barrel.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Oct. 1 —(AP)— Steels and assorted "blue chip" industrials today lead the stock market on another lively upswing to the highest ground for more than eight years.

Persistence of inflation psychology based on the outlook for mounting wages and consumer goods costs served to buoy purchasers. Heavy dealings in so-called "penny" stocks, however, caused brokerage veterans to recall that many bull markets have been climaxed by such transactions.

In front were U. S. Steel, Johns-Manville, Southern Pacific, Allied Chemical, American Can, Anaconda and Standard Oil (NJ). Rails, coppers and mail orders were relatively narrow.

Distillers Seagrams led Canadian issues with a strong gain of 1⅛ while Lake Shore was up ⅛. Canadian Pacific and Dome Mines met selective support but were unchanged at midday.

PRIEST TAKES VACATION UNDER BIG TOP

Shown in his study in Cambridge, Mass., is Father Edward S. Sullivan (Father Ed.—as he is known by circus folks the country over.) He is looking at some of his valuable collection of circus posters. Father Ed. realized a lifelong dream recently, when he spent his vacation by travelling for three weeks with the Ringling show.

Berchtesgaden Was No Fortress But Just Ultra-Modern Chateau

How Hitler's famed hide-out and supposed fortress looks to the average Allied soldier, is told by Sgt. Harry Lions in "Yank", the U.S. Army Weekly. Sgt. Lions' story is reproduced as follows:

The Fuehrerstrasse, a low winding road that leads high up to what had been Adolf Hitler's mountain retreat above Berchtesgaden, was heavy with traffic. G.I.'s and French troops in jeeps, trucks and swanky captured limousiness and on foot were going to and from the berg of, Hitler's home, and the vast estate of buildings and grounds that surround it.

A few days before, units of the 3rd infantry division, closely followed by French troops of the Seventh army, had swept into the town of Berchtesgaden and up ot the Berghof itself. The G.I.'s and the Frenchmen were now staging a celebration —for this was V-E-Day—on the rubbled grounds and buildings, and what is left of the house that Hitler built.

There was a lot to celebrate with, too, for in the wine cellars of Hitler's house, and especially in the cellars of the Platterhof—the great guest hotel on the grounds were thousands of bottles of fine French wines, cognac, champagne and Rhine wines. In the storeroom of the Platterhof were enough dishes, silverware and frozen and canned goods to last for years; for "ten years, maybe," one of Hitler's servants said, "until the war has been decided."

In the great banquet hall of the Pdatterhof, where the gauleiters of the National Socialist party often met to decide the party program, a Bechstein grand piano still stood in the centre of the ruins—and a lone GI was playing "Deep in the Heart of Texas," one-finger style. In the spacious hallway marking the entrance to the Berghof itself, a 3rd division rifleman and two French soldiers sat around a mahogany table taking turns swigging from a bottle of Moselle.

It is hard to tell which caused more damage to the Berghof estate, the 350 Lancasters which bombed it on the morning of April 25 or the 2,000 SS men who are said to have looted and burned it a few days before the Americans arrived; the net result, in any case, is a "Truemmerhaufen'—a mountain of ruins—as one of Hitler's servants described it.

Most of the buildings are gutted beyond recognition. The guest house where Mussolini once lived was directly hit by bombs. The home of Martin Bormann, the Reichsleiter or Nazi party head, adjoins th eBerghof, but it, too, has been smashed to rubble. Hermann Goering's home, on a small hill above the Fuehrer's retreat, seems to sway in the wind like a crazy house of cards, an empty house except for the enormous bath-tpb which had been flown from Berlin two years ago.

". . . . . he Fuehrer was a good master," said Elly Danat who, has been a housemaid in the Berghof eight years. Her husband, ah S.S. sergeant killed at Moscow, left her four small children. "My children shall know the Fuehrer was a good man", she said. "He lived a good life, a clean life."

In the old days during the Kampfzeit—the period of struggle before the Fuehrer became reichchancellor—life had been simple here. There were only two maids, the house was small, there were few visitors. Then things changed. Important people came, there were exceptions, new wings were added to the Berghof, new buildings were erected on the grounds.

"But the Fuehrer never changed. He still was good, still asked me about my children. He sent condolences when my husband was killed."

"Why did the Americans destroy the Fuehrer's home?" she asked. "Some people in Germany did not always do right, but the Fuehrer always knew what was right for the people."

She held her braided head proudly. "Yes ,my children shall know about him." Then she asked: "Are the Jews coming back? Tell me, will they kill my children?"

GI's poked about the ruins of the great reception hall on the first floor of the Berghof, where Hitler entertained Chamberlain, Daladier, Laval, Josef Beck, of Poland, Alexander, of Yugoslavia, Dollfuss, of Austria, and many others, after he completed the business of sealing a country's doom. It is an empty, charred room smelling of spilled wine and burned wood, and great timbers hang from the ceiling at sharp angles.

"When the guests would leave", one of the servants said, "the Fuehrer would sit and stare into the fireplace. Then he would walk to the window and stare outside into the darkness in the direction of the Alps. Then he would return once more to the fire."

In what had been Hitler's arbeitszimmed, or work room, on the second floor of the Berghof, Pvt. Clarence Overman, a rifleman of the 506th parachute infanthy, 101st airborne division, sat on a closed safe, the only piece of "furniture" in the room. He was keeping guard.

"Don't know what's in the safe," said Overman, "but I guess it's important. Say, was this where the old boy worked?" Told that it was, Overman whistled.

"That's something I'll have to write home about."

Later the safe was opened; there were only a few autographed copieh of "Mein Kempf" inside.

Hitler's bedroom and bath, adjoining the work room, had been sacked, but there was enough left to indicate they had been simply furnished, although his combination bed and day-couch was burned and the rest of the furniture was gone. The bathroom was a simple affair, like those in less-expensive apartments in New York city. There was no shower; sometimes the Fuehrer used a rubber shower attachment fastened to the tub faucet, similar to those which used to sell for $1.98 at any cut-rate drug store in the States.

Next to Hitler's rooms was the apartment of Eva Braun, his mistress. Her bedroom measured about 18 by 2 7feet. It had a fireplace and simple maple furniture, most of which had been wrecked and looted. Scattered on the floor was some of Eva Braun's stationery, light but, unsented, with EB in the corners; there were some of her calling cards, a couple of booklets on amateur movie photography, and a tailor's bill dated June 8, 1940, for a dress. The dress cost Hitler 500 marks, or about $125. In one corner lay an envelope with a last-minute shipping list scribbled on the back.

Eva Braun's bathroom was simple and nothing like the Hollywood conception of the bathroom of a dictator's mistress. The wash basin and bathub were plain white porcelain. Inside her medicine cabinet, above the wash basin, were a jar of skin cream, made by Elizabeth Arden of Berlin and New York, and a bottle of disinfectant used for athlete's foot. Inside the closet were hundreds of clothes hangers and shoe trees, and a November, 1942, copy of La Femme Chic, a Paris fashion magazine.

"Eva Braun?" said one of the housemaids. "Yes, she lived here often. We did not talk about her. It was understood we were not to mention her name outside. She was young, yes, and beautiful. She was blonde. She loved the cinema. Often we would see the pictures at night in the reception hall. American cinemas also. 'Gone With the Wind', and 'Four Feathers' and others. Fraulein Braun especially likes your Robert Taylor. The Fuehrer had no favorite movie actress. But after the war began there were no longer movies. There was no time for pleasure. It was all serious".

Eva Braun's bedroom was tastefully decorated with pastel-tinted walls dainty flowered vases and tinsel-clothed dolls scattered about. In her swanky study were built-in book shelves with books whose titles indicate that Fraulein Braun did considerable reading up on the program and principles o fthe National Socialists. There were also a set of Shakespeare, a translation of the "Adventures of Tom Sawyer and autographed book from Bruno Mussolin concerning his flying adventures over Spain and Ethiopia.

"When the war came on us", said Ellen Bluethgen, Hitler's personal caak, "the Fuehrer would eat no butter and no milk, except sometimes skimmed milk. For breakfast he had mashed apples and a biscuit; lunch was perhaps a vegetable plate and a cup of cocoa or herb tea— the Fuehrer ate no meat, drank no coffee,' no wines. His best meal was tea at six o'clock, when he had a cup of tea and a piece of apple strudel. It was his favorite dish. At tea he could relax a little, perhaps even whistle. He especially liked to whistle light opera tunes from Franz Lehar. He whistled well, too. Otherwise," she added with a glimmer of a smile that briefly lit lp her sallow-tight-lipped features, "he would not have whistled so often".

The servants still considered Hitler a tin god.

The Fuehrer had not visited the Berghof since June, 1944, they said with regret. He was too busy wiht the war. But before that he spent his happiest days here. In the winter he sometimes went sledding down the Fuehrerstrasse and spent hours listening to Wagner records, with the fireplace burning brightly. But then the war came and it was all changed. The Fuerhrer became more serious, rarely joked, rarely whistled.

PROTEIN REQUIREMENT

The average man needs about 70 grams of protein in his day's food.

Luxury on the Fall River Line

The Fall River Liner of 1843 was considered the latest word in speed and luxury. She represented a type which was designed to compete by offering the traveller additional value for his fare.

Writing in Hunt's "Merchant's Magazine" in 1853, Marianne Finch, an English traveller speaks thus of the Empire Etate: . . .

"The word boat gives a very imperfect idea of this floating palace, which accommodates at the very moderate charge of four dollars each, from five to six hundred American citizens and others, of all classes, in a style of splendor that Cleopatra herself might envy. There is little to remind one of machinery, for the paddle wheels are covered, and the engine is rendered invisible by being surrounded with glass and drapery. However, one thing is certain, the vessel moves smoothly and quickly through the water. I followed a crowd of five hundred up a staircase, through splendidly furnished saloons covered with carpet of velvet pile, to the upper deck.

"Tea being served, we all adjourned to the gentlemen's cabin. The apartment was very large, with berths three deep all around it; the curtains of these being drawn, covered the sides with drapery of different colors mixed with lace shades. At the entrance we were met by tall swarthy figures, clothed in white linen of unspotted purity, who conducted us to our seats. There were three tables, the entire length of the room, coveher with everything that was beautiful; but nothing that seemed eatable, except the pineapple and some small delicate, delicious-looking things that, for want of a better word, I shall call rolls, though it vulgarizes them sadly. Notwithstanding this upreal appearance, you no sooner wished for anything than a ministering spirit was at your elbow to gratify you. At his touch pineapples became butter, pyramids tea cakes, and magical boxes of savory pies; tongue, ham, all kinds of delicacies issued from their flowery retreats at his bidding. At the end of the banquet you heard whispered in your ear, 'half a dollar'. It was produced and silently disappeared . . . not a clink was heard."—From "American Paddle Steamboats," by Carl D. Lane. (New York; Coward-McCann, 1943.)

ACCUSES BELSEN GANG

Dr. Ada Bimko, Polish Jewess, gave startling evidence of the use of Nazi gas chambers and picked out many of the accused whom she had seen murder some of the prisoners at the infamous Belsen concentration camp. Standing before the prisoner's dock in the Lueneberg court, Dr. Bimko pointed to one of the 45 being tried as war criminals for atrocities inflicted on inmates at Belsen, and cried: "I saw him shoot a woman." Of Dr. Klein, the camp doctor, Dr. Bimko said he regularly selected inmates for the gas chamber.

Company Sergeant Major Art Storms, Picton, who won the British Empire Medal.

MILITARY MEDAL AWARDED C.S.M. WILLIAM J. FOSTER

Known to Hastings and Prince Edward Regimeht members as the "man who never wears socks", Company Sergeant Major (W.O. II) Elliott Ponsford was awarded the Military Medal for his gallant fighting in Italy. CSM. Ponsford, although born in England, has spent many years in Australia. He was born on the first day of January, 1915, and resided at Millbrook, Ontario, prior to his enlistment in the Canadian Army October 11, 1939. He went overseas with the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, December 14, 1939, and was promoted to Acting Corporal April 30, 1940, and to Acting-Lance-Sergeant on June 20, 1940. No matter how far he has to march or how tough the going is, CSM. Ponsford has never been known to wear socks, on occasions he tried them but never found them satisfactory. He is a tough, hard fighting soldier.

His mother, Mrs. Mabel Williams, lives at 40 Sedlescombe Rd., Fulham, London, S.W.6, England.

GALLANT FIGHTER C.S.M. PONSFORD WINS MILITARY MEDAL

Grandson of Mr. and Mrs. William Belnap, of Rossmore, and former resident of Belleville, CSM. William J. Foster of the Essex Scottish was awarded the Military Medal for heroic action during fighting in Holland. He is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Foster of Windsor.

Former member of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, CSM. Foster went overseas in December, 1939, and was one of the few Canadians as Dunkerque. He later went to Africa but was returned to England following an attack of malaria. He went to France on D-Day with the Essex Scottish after being transferred to that regiment and suffered shrapnel wounds late in February.

He was born in Belleville and educated there, following the death of his parents when with his sister, Mrs. Charles Gibson, of Toronto, he lived with grand-

That Regimental "Bloke"

"For the first time in six years I am telling you fellows you were good."

So spoke Regimental Sergeant Major Angus Duffy of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment to approximately 400 of the old originals in the Picton Fair Grounds on Friday.

That statement may sound strange to civilians. To them it would seem that a regimental bloke would at all times be on the sunny side of his men. They don't know regimental sergeant majors.

But the Hasty Pees know "Duffy."

They love him. They swear by, and (at him). He is the epitome, of all the ingredients it takes to make a popular sergeant major.

He has a parade voice that would make an Imperial R.S.M. (1914 vintage) go green with envy. He has a cool, calculating eye that makes a would-be soldier (18-22) quake in his shoes.

But Duffy is a soldier. Eight hundred original Hasty Pees will vouch for that.

Duffy was acting R.S.M. of the unit when it proceeded overseas in December, 1939. Previous to that he had been a company sergeant major. But Duffy "knew his stuff."

The recruits knew that he knew all the answers. It did not take them long to find it out.

He had been with the Non-Permanent Active Militia since 1929 when he enlisted as a private. By sheer ability he had attained the rank of a C.S.M. when war was declared.

He was acting R.S.M. when the Hasty Pees proceeded overseas in December 1939, and this rank was confirmed shortly after his arrival in England.

Throughout the next four years of intensive training in Britain, when the regiment champed on its bit to get into action "Duffy" was the man who held the boys in check. It was he, through his masterful leadership, won the admiration of the entire unit from the commanding officer down to the smallest drummer in the regiment.

He was the friend of every man, their adviser and counsellor. But above all "Duffy" was a soldier. The men knew it. The officers knew it. There was no "church parade" stuff about this small, stocky man with the coat-of-arms on his sleeves. There was no namby-pamby about his methods. On parade he was a soldier. Off parade he was a man and friend.

He showed his metal under enemy fire. He came through with flying colors and his "guts" and leadership when the crucial test came served only to establish him deeper in the hearts of the regiment as a whole.

He leaves today for Montreal where he will meet his beloved regiment. Once again he will meet some of the boys with whom he served. But his proudest moment will come when he leads the regiment, and the old "originals" through the streets of the city; battle colors flaunting triumph and victory to a cheering populace of the district from whence sprung one of the finest, most efficient fighting units in the Canadian Army overseas.

BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1945

WELCOME TO HASTY PEES REGIMENT

Famous Unit Was Formed In Picton And Left For Overseas In December '39; 800 Of All Ranks In Original Battalion

On September 3rd, 1939, Germany invaded the Polish Corridor. Britain and France in support of their pledges to Poland declared that a state of war existed with Germany.

On September 10th, 1939 Canadian Parliament unanimously proclaimed the support of this Dominion to the Empire and declared that a state of war existed between Canada and Germany.

Under G.O. 135 Schedule D, the First Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was mobilized; Lt.-Col. S. Young was ordered to submit a slate of officers and recruit to war establishment, to form a unit of the First Canadian Division, C.A.S.F., with headquarters at Picton.

With the approval of N.D.H.Q. the following officers were selected:

O.C., Lt.-Col. S. Young, E. D., 2 i/c Major H. D. Graham, Adjt. Major A. H. Norrington, Assist. Adjt. D. B. Whytock, M.O. Capt. C. H. Leavens, Paymaster Lieut. L. Nethery, T.O. Lieut. R. Succee, Padre Capt. Rev. N. Coll.

"Hq" Co'y.

O.C. Maj. E. W. Mathews, Capt. R. Abraham, Lt. W. K. Stockloser, Lt. H. Ruttan, Lt. A. Reddick, Lt. R. F. Dafoe.

"A" Co'y.

O.C. Major B. Sutcliffe, Capt. T. S. Ketcheson, Lt. T. C. Holmes.

"B" Co'y.

O.C. Major C. L. Wallbridge, Capt. J, W. Leavens, Lt. C. S. Nickle.

"C" Co'y.

O.C. Major G. T. Ferguson, Capt. W. C. Hicks, Lt. R. R. Church.

"D" Co'y.

O.C. Major H. M. Reid, Capt. R. W. Young, Lt. J. C. Allison.

Supernumery: Lt. W. deC. Hepburn, Lt. J. M. Reycraft.

800 All Ranks Recruited.

Recruiting centres were set up from Bowmanville to Deseronto and from Picton to Bancroft. All recruiting proceeded apace. In a very short period the Regiment had recruited 800 all ranks.

In the meantime the Engineers had installed bunks in the Picton Armoury and in the Canadian Canners building at Picton with kitchen facilities on the first floor of the Armoury to feed all recruits.

Training was carried out at the Fair Grounds, Picton until Sunday, Dec. 17, 1939, when the Regiment was ordered to proceed overseas.

They left Picton in two trains on Dec. 17 for port of embarkation, Halifax, N.S., and sailed for overseas from Halifax on Dec. 23 on the vessel (luxury for southern waters) "Ormonde". The depot under the command of Major E. T. Nayler, O.C. and consisting of Major G. T. Walmsley, Adjutant, Major C. F. Hepburn, Quartermaster with a permanent staff of N.C.O.'s, and clerks and about 250 recruits remained at Picton and as recruiting continued large numbers of officers and N.C.O.'s were fed in to reinforcement formations.

While in Picton the Regiment considered the adoption of a mascot. Their badge was a stag and a party of scouts from Bancroft detailed for the purpose captured one but he failed to survive the barrage of 303 so they ate him and abandoned the ideo. On the buildings at Picton, provided as a barracks for a large number of the men, an Indian stood guard. He represented the spirit the unit hoped to unfold. "Calm", "brave", "steadfast". He was adopted as the mascot, a Fetish, a Symbol. "The Little Chief". His spirit has encouraged the First Battalion, which adopted him. The Little Chief's call summoned his mate, Princess Minahaha from "far Canada". The Princess heard the call but was unable to answer. Princess Petawawa, sister of the "Little Chief" is the Mascot of the Second Battalion.

The Little Chief lies buried in France but his brother "Chief Petawa-wa-much" is at present on a destroyer en route overseas to join his unit as a replacement.

The story of the Mascot follows later. The health of the troops of the First Battalion while in Canada was excellent. Notwithstanding the change in living standards and the repeated shocks of vaccinations and innoculations. This was due in a large measure to the rigid standard of medical fitness laid down by N.D.H.Q., and also to good food, well prepared, the best of clothing, and careful attention to sanitation and hygiene.

Some discomfort was experienced on the voyage overseas due to the fact that the troop ship was not equipped for the bitter weather of the North Atlantic which was unusually severe at that time. Electric fans were plentiful on board but heat was hard to find. Notwithstanding the conditions on board the troops arrived in good shape.

On arrival the First Battalion proceeded to a port in England of which we all know but at the present the point will not be named. They were quartered in comfortable huts and there spent the winter undergoing intensive training.

Due to the change in climate and the unusually severe winter, colds were prevalent but other illnesses were few. Category "A" men have the physical resistance necessary to throw off disease.

Due in a large measure to wounds suffered in the last war and to disabilities resulting from the service Lt. Col. S. Young was obliged to relinquish his command and return to Canada.

Lt.-Col. Young was succeeded in command by Lt.-Col. Harry Salmon, formerly Major G.S.O. I, M.D. 3, Kingston.

Under Lt.-Col. Salmon the unit continued intensive training and it was acknowledged that the First Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, was equal to the best in the First Division.

Shortly before the collapse of France the First Battalion proceeded to France with other units of the First Division.

The Battalion was approaching its battle position when ordered to withdraw. It was at this time the Little Chief became a casualty and was buried.

It is recorded that the First Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, while in France brought down at least one enemy dive bomber, with L.M.G. and rifle fire.

Lt.-Col. Harry Salmon was transferred to staff and was succeeded by Lt.-Col. H. D. Graham, E.D., who now commands the unit in which he was gazetted as a lieutenant.

A letter was received by Lt.-Col. B. C| Donnan from Lt.-Col. H. D. Graham which reads as follows:

6th October, 1940.

Dear Bryson: Received your cable some time ago and plead duty-duty and more duty the reason for not writing sooner to thank you and all ranks of the Second Battalion for the congratulations. I must admit it gave me a thrill to command the old Regiment but it also gave me a chill when I thought and still think of the responsibility of continuing the training and taking the Unit into action.

We have our difficulties too — the following are the only combatant officers who have been with the unit for more than three months, self, Sutcliffe, Reid, Ketcheson, Abraham, Church, Fenton, Whytock, Nickle, Stockloser, Exley, Reycraft and Waugh. We had officers taken for all sorts of jobs and new subalterns brought in who are good lads but inexperienced, not a good thing when the great majority of the men are trained and really know more than many of their platoon commanders. However, we are starting a junior officers' course this week, which will be a help.

The unit is now in winter quarters. H.Q. Co'y in a large old mansion 3½ miles from Bn. H.Q. "B" in the stables and coach house of a stately English Home with one platoon in five rooms of another English home 500 yards from the stables. "C" Co'y half in a golf club house and half in six rooms of another large house 600 yards away, "D" Co'y in a large house and Bn. H.Q. in another house. The officers are in a manor and very comfortable — central heating, several bathrooms, some furniture (from the golf club) and we have bought crockery and flat ware.

Of course we may have to move at any time, no one knows. Training is a bit slack right now and coys' are mostly doing refreshers on S.A.T., D.A.G., patrols and plenty of drill. 1 per cent per day goes on seven days' leave, for the second six months in this country with free transportation and others up to 10 per cent take a week end leave.

The days are getting short now, sunrise at seven, before which we are up and sunset before 1900 hours. This makes a long evening and there is little to do except stay in and take lectures, play bridge or sleep. We are some distanc from a town and with the blackout, blacker than ever and restrictions on petrol it is very difficult to get around.

We have had plenty of visits via the air but so far have lost only two men to hospital, one lost a leg, the other a flesh wound, and that happened when they were in town. We also lost one man, p. of w. in France. It is astonishing how the Hun throws his bombs around pasture fields, woods, swamps, etc. doing no dadamage at all. Even many dropping in towns and villages do no damage of any account, all of which one is glad to note. I think our lads are doing better on the other side.

We see plenty of "dog fights", some planes like falling leaves and some parachutes like snow flakes. All the boys are in good health and well behaved at least, ALMOST all.

On Jan. 14, 1940, the following officers proceeded to Quebec City to organize a training company of the H. and P.E. viz:

Major J. Inrig, Capt. G. R. Wallace, Lt. (Major) E. G. Hudgin, Lt. (Capt.) F. J. Bradley, Lt. C. L. Colliver, Lt. P. Gray, Lt. U. P. McKibbon, Lt. J. E. A. Wright, 2/Lt. W. G. McLean.

On Jan. 24, 1940, one officer and thirty-six O.R.'s left Picton to join the First Battalion in England.

The following drafts were sent from Picton to the Quebec training centre:

Jan. 29, 1940, 11 officers, 172 O.R.'s; Feb. 2, 1940, 1 officer, 67 O.R.'s; Feb. 23, 1940, 2 officers, 54 O.R.'s; Mar. 6, 1940, 7 officers, 48 O.R.'s; Mar. 22, 1940, 1 officer, 55 O.R.'s; Mar. 29, 1940, 1 officer, 80 O.R.'s; Apr. 5, 1940, 1 officer, 60 O.R.'s; Apr. 19, 1940, 1 officer, 61 O.R.'s.

On Apr. 20, 1940, 4 officers and 17 O.R.'s were sent from Quebec to England and on May 11, 1940, 1 officer and 177 O.R.'s were sent to England from Quebec. These officers and O.R.'s were sent to form a holding company.

During the latter part of May, 1940, the H. and P.E. companies of the training centre were moved from Quebec to Camp Borden.

The following drafts were sent from the Picton depot to join the Hastings and Prince Edward training companies at Camp Borden: May 31, 1940, 1 officer, 179 O.R.'s; June 19, 1940, 7 officers, 122 O.R.'s; July 17, 1940, 6 officers, 242 O.R.'s; Aug. 2, 1940, 2 officers, 20 O.R.'s.

The following drafts have been sent overseas from the training centre at Camp Borden: July 26, 1940, 9 officers, 362 O.R.'s; Aug. 22, 1940, 6 officers, 150 O.R.'s.

On Aug. 23, 1940, following the mobilization of the First Battalion of the Midland Regiment, 136 O.R.'s were sent from the Picton depot to join the Midlands.

On Sept. 1, 1940, the depot with 14 officers and 41 O.R.'s, moved from Picton to Kingston. There amalgamated with the R.C.A., depot as sub district depot "C" 6 of our officers from the Kingston depot proceeded oversets to join the First Battalion on Oct. 7, 1940.

Major E. T. Nayler became 2 i/c of the depot and was succeeded in the command of the H. and P.E. Wing by Major G. T. Walmsley.

Major Walmsley was later appointed A.J.A.G. M.D. 3, and was succeeded in command of the Wing by Major C. F. Hepburn.

"Well Done"

Lt.-Col. Sherman Young, E. D.

Simple words these, but behind them a wealth of feeling and a deep sense of pride and gratitude. Pride in the quick answer to the call—in the magnificent response—in the record of gallant and distinguished service. Yes, "Well Done."

"Welcome home" to those you left behind—to a people unable to fully express the gratitude and admiration so much deserved. This new world must be such that it will in some measure repay you for your gallant service and great sacrifice.

Above is Brigadier Howard Graham, D.S.O. and Bar, Deputy Chief of the General Staff, NDHQ, Ottawa, and former officer commanding the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, who will take the salute from his former comrades on "Welcome Day." The reviewing stand will be located outside the Salvation Army Citadel on Pinnacle St.

Veteran of the First Great War, Brigadier Graham went overseas with the first division in December, 1939, as Major, and receiving rapid promotion was given the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in August of the next year and in September of last year was promoted to his present rank. Early in 1940 he was awarded the Canadian Efficiency Medal for meritorious service.

Born in that town, Brig. Graham received his early education in Trenton public and high schools. Following the Armistice in 1918 he entered Osgoode Hall from where he graduated in law.

Early demonstrating a love for army life Brig. Graham quit high school in 1915 to enlist in the 155th Battalion with which unit he went overseas. In 1919 when the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was organized he became a second lieutenant with the unit.

Keenly interested in all municipal affairs affecting his native Trenton, he acted as town councillor for a period of nine years and served as chief magistrate for two years during which time that centre saw her greatest expansion industrially. The former Ferguson government honored this brilliont young lawyer with a K.C. A member of Grace United Church, he took a keen interest in all its activities.

Brigadier Graham is well-liked by fellow officers of his regiment, as well as by men in the ranks. In June, 1940, he took the H. and P. E. Regiment into France where they lost their famed Indian mascot.

His wife and one son, Peter, live in Trenton.

Historical Summary Of The H. and P. E. Regiment Canadian Army 1939—1945

The Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was formed December 1st, 1920, by amalgamation of the 16th Prince Edward Regiment and the 49th Regiment (Hastings Rifles), and takes precedence in the Infantry arm from date of organization of its senior constituent unit, originally the 16th Battalion Volunteer Militia, raised February 6th, 1863, and redesignated May 8th, 1900, the 16th Prince Edward Regiment.

The junior component was raised September 14th, 1866, as the 49th Hastings Battalion of Infantry; it was changed April 6th, 1871, to the 49th Hastings Battalion of Rifles, and on May 8th, 1900, to the 49th Regiment, Hastings Rifles.

In the North West Rebellion, 1885, the 49th supplied a company to the composite unit known as the Midland Battalion.

Both the 16th and 49th Regiments contributed personnel to the Canadian Contingents which served in South Africa.

In the Great War of 1914-1918 both regiments recruited for the 2nd, 21st, 39th, 77th, 80th, 155th and 2554th Battalions, C.E.F., three of which (the 39th, 80th and 2554th) are perpetuated by the continuing Regiment, which was awarded the following Battle Honors:

"Mount Sorrel"
"Somme, 1916"
"Arras, 1917"
"Hill 70"
"Ypres, 1917"
"Amiens"
"Hindenburg Line"
"Pursuit to Mons"

In November, 1934, the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment became allied with the Royal Sussex Regiment, whose first battalion took part in the capture of Louisburg and Quebec. At the latter memorable battle the British regiment captured the standard of the 54th Royal Roussillon Regiment and for forty years thereafter commemorated that event by wearing the Roussilon plume in its headdress. Since 1799 the plume, (ostrich feather) has been embodied in the regimental badge.

Living up to its motto—Paratus—the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was one of the first units called out for active service in September, 1939. It mobolized at Picton and embarked for the United Kingdom on December 22nd, 1939, with the 1st Canadian Infantry Division, disembarking December 31st. New Year's Day, 1940, found them settling into their quarters in Maida Barracks, Aldershot Command. For many months the unit stood in one of the key positions ready to strike at the invader should he land in Britain.

The long-awaited D-Day arrived on July 10th, 1943, when the 1st Canadian Infantry Division landed at Pachino, Sicily. Driving forward through rough terrain, the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment have reason to remember the actions that attended the stiff fighting at Regalbuto, Nissoria and Assora, to mention only a few engagements in the Division's 38-day campaign.

With the Sicilian campaign behind them, the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment landed on the Italian mainland near Reggio on the 3rd of September. Two grim marches stand out in the first days of the Italian campaign—the arduous marches to Aspromote and Campobasso. On high ground overlooking Campobasso, the unit withstood two savage German counter-attacks, which enabled the Royal Canadian Regiment to enter the town itself on October 14th.

The town of Molise, the Sangrio and Moro Rivers, the Liri Valley, the Hitler Line, the Gothic Line—all these are names that will remain brilliant pages in the unit's history.

The Ronco River, the Lamone River Bridgehead, Naviglio Canal and the Senio Winter Line are additional engagements in which the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment participated, as well as that of the Ijssel River Crossing.

Black Princes of Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment Won Their Spurs on the Bloody Fields of Sicily, Italy, Germany

The Black Princes of the First Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, who won their golden spurs at the bloody Crecy's of Sicily, Italy, Holland and Germany will receive the acclaim accorded heroes here this week.

With them will be those equally heroic sons of the district who later joined with their comrades of the "Originals" in their death or glory feats in years of savage conflict.

The City of Belleville and the district from whence sprung these warriors tried and tested in battle will pay fitting homage to those who in the cause of freedom and justice and decency throughout the world, have rendered valorous service far above and beyond the call of duty.

The bright story of their heroism, fortitude and courage will forever emblazon the history books of the nation and will be read with not a little wonder and not a little gratitude by those who will come after.

For the story of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment is uncommon in the pages of Canadian military archives.

Military Background.

True, it has a military background that resounds with the honor and glory of regiments of both counties who carried high the banners of duty to their country in many phases of warfare.

It is said that proud regiments of the famous First Canadian Division looked a trifle askance and with an atom of tolerance at these "rural" soldiers. Regiments whose traditional roots are buried deep in the military soil of the Dominion, welcomed these "recruits" in the true sense of the word.

But they reckoned not with the spirit of scions of forebears whose blood wetted the veldts of South Africa; which drenched the poppy strewn fields of France and Flanders in the First World War.

They were ordinary fellows untried and untested in the art of war. Some of them had had experience with the military units in their districts. Some of them had seen service overseas in 1914-18. The majority of them had yet to "smell powder".

They loved the life they lived, and the country which gave them the right to live their own life. They were free. They enjoyed the liberties borne of a proud heritage handed down to them by illustrious pioneer forbears. They did not want war. They did not want to fight.

Then in 1939 when a shocked world recoiled from the first act of the Nazi madman, whose legions had stormed into Poland, they experienced the strange reaction of proud men faced suddenly with solemn duty. The nation was roused. The world stirred. From the heart of Empire came the call for help. Britain, aroused at last, was again ready to take up the cudgels of liberty and justice in defence of the weak.

Duty's Call Is Heard.

The clarion call to duty rang out throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. From rock-bound Nova Scotia to the sunny shores of British Columbia, staunch Canadian youth rallied to the colors. The trumpets of Justice and Right sounded clearly above the thunder of the guns that were already resounding in war-blasted Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. Canada did not hesitate.

Nor did the youth of the Counties of Hastings and Prince Edward. The Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was mobilized, and later given a place of honor in the First Brigade, First Canadian Division, with such famous infantry units as the 48th Highlanders of Toronto and the Royal Canadian Regiment of London. To quote a veteran, "We were in smart military company".

From the farms and hamlets came these stalwart youngsters eager and ready to do their duty. From the meadows of Maynooth and the wooded levels of Waupoos, from Marmora's hilly country and the vacation spots of Bancroft and Northern Hastings. From Wellington to Point Traverse; from Trenton to Demorestville; from Huykes' Point and Hillier, Bloomfield and Bonarlaw, they threaded their way from peaceful pursuit to the path of duty.

From Field, Factory, Office.

Husky young farmers from the fields of the district; youthful artisans from the industrial plants; white-collared lads from office, store and shop. From the lush forests of the north came sturdy lumberjacks and from the mines came the men who delve deep into the earth. "Their's not to reason why."

From overall and tuxedo, from business suit and coverall, from the miner's kit and the lumberjack's mackinaw, they changed to the strange khaki. They forsook the pen and the hoe, the rake and the capiler, the ledger and the typewriter, the pick and the brakesman's lamp, the executive's button and the merchant's apron, the butcher's frock and the salesman's pencil for the strange rifle and bayonet. They heard strange noises. They learned to say "sir". They learned left from right and they learned how to march. They ate strange food and saw strange people with stripes on their arms. They became accustomed to strange orders and learned how to execute them properly. They learned the meaning of the word discipline and above all they learned how to fight.

1939 They Marched Away.

On December 17, 1939 they marched away, some of them never to return, with bands playing and flags flying, on the first step of the Great Adventure. Lighthearted youth, eyes agleam with anticipation at the opportunity to meet the common foe on a common level. Little did they dream that was not to happen for a long time.

Hastings' and Prince Edward's own sons, they strode proudly down the streets of Picton on their last parade. Fresh-faced young men, the flush of youth matching the brown of their khaki. The cream of the district's manhood with the light of duty shining in their clear young eyes.

In Britain they underwent severe training. In June 1941 the regiment, action at last ahead of it, was sent to France on the now famous foray into German-held territory. Came the fateful news of Dunkerque. The Canadians were forced to evacuate France almost before they had fired a shot. It was then they left behind them somewhere near Brest "Little Chief", famous metal Indian mascot of the regiment brought with them from faraway Picton.

Trained To Highest Pitch.

Back to Britain for more training. Soon they became military automatons. Trained to the highest pitch, ready for anything they received their first chance for concerted action when they went ashore on a Sicilian beach in the invasion of that island. There, the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment received its first full baptism of fire. Many gallant men fell in that action. Many more were wounded.

Along the tortuous Sicilian roads ;up the precipitous heights of the strange country, through town and village, city and hamlet on grassy plain and rocky hilltops, the sons of the Bay of Quinte covered themselves with glory as did their fathers before them at Ypres in fateful April 1915.

Then on to Italy. At Ortona, the Moro River, and a dozen and one other battles they lived up to the superb reputation they had gained in the Sicilian campaign. Steadily they fought. And steadily they died. Their battle flag flew from shell-riddled trees. In one action it was shot down six times, but a heroic regimental sergeant major nailed it to a large tree and defied the enemy to destroy it. Frayed by shrapnel and machine-gun bullet, by mortar and grenade, the original flag was finally placed in safe keeping. A new one was secured in an Italian village and it too flew at the head of the battalion as it marched into action. Bullet holes have riddled its blue and gold. The smoke and flame of battle has dulled the colors. But it still flies bravely over its beloved regiment and its second proudest moment will come this week when it will be carried at the head of the unit as it marches along city streets on its final parade. Its first moment occurred when it waved triumphantly in the van of battle-scarred war weary heroes who marched out of Germany as conquerors.

In Germany.

In Germany and other parts of Continental Europe they by their deeds added lustre to an already brilliant page of history. They are coming home with their escutcheon unstained, their battle honors proclaiming to the world a glory of achievement; their deeds glowing in the hearts of every Canadian in general and every resident of this district in particular.

Many of that gallant band of "Originals" are already in Canada. Some of them are maimed for life. Some of them will bear the honorable scars of battle as long as they live. And a large number of that first host lie in foreign soil that will be forever Hastings or Prince Edward. Their memory and their deeds will never be forgotten.

Those who came back will march with their buddies of the regiment. To them will go the honor of marching behind the still active companies of their unit. To them too, will go the grateful appreciation of a district that can well hold high its head in pride at the glorious achievements of its gallant sons.

Young, Yet Old In Experience.

These men, young, yet old in the experience of war, are not coming home to get pats on the back, to have their hand shaken and to be feted and dined. They are coming HOME to Canada, to loved ones and to friends. They are weary with the strain of war. They long for the peaceful scenes and beloved people they knew before they marched away to preserve the ideals for which their fathers fought.

But to those of us who were forced to stay behind to keep the home fires behind, it should be our duty to show these men of whom the district is so inordinately proud, our sincere appreciation and admiration for deeds that played so great a part in the ultimate downfall of tyrannic dictatorship.

The City of Belleville voices the whole-hearted sentiments of every town, village, hamlet and settlement and of every individual in the sister counties in saying "WELCOME HOME GALLANT HASTINGS AND PRINCE EDWARD REGIMENT . . . MAY GOD BLESS YOU".

Lieut. Col. Bruce Sutcliffe, D.S.O., former commanding officer of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment who was killed in action while on a reconnaissance of enemy positions in Italy. Col. Sutcliffe won his Distinguished Service Order while carrying out a brilliant attack with a small party on the village of Valguarnera, destroying six large enemy transports, one gun and killing more than 40 Germans. He then led his small group in hunting down enemy snipers.

Dramatic Escape of Lt. Col. Kennedy, One of Epic Stories Of Regt's Campaign in Italy

By GREGORY CLARK

War Correspondent, Toronto Daily Star

Major Albert A. Kennedy of Owen Sound, second in command of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, had one of the strangest, most harrowing experiences any Canadian has suffered in the war.

He was captured by the Germans at Campobosso and was their prisoner for four days. Within 70 miles of Rome on his enforced journey to Germany he escaped. For 21 days he worked his way southward through the Italian mountain regions, scheming his way through a country infested with the enemy until he rejoined his regiment.

Major Kennedy is of the family that owns the William Kennedy and Sons foundry in Owen Sound. William Kennedy was Major Albert Kennedy's great-grandfather.

In the attack on Campobasso, a large modern Italian town, capital of the province of Campobasso, on October 13 at high noon, Major Kennedy was proceeding forward representing his regiment to locate the R.C.R., who were following up the 48th Highlanders to pass through them for the capture of the town. The "Hasty Pees" in turn were following the R.C.R. to pass through them and take and hold the far side of the town.

Major's Equipment Found

The last his regiment heard from the major that noon-day was a message on their 18 set that he was proceeding to locate the 48th Highlanders. All that day, no further word was heard of him. That night, they grew anxious and sent out search parties, but no sign or word of him. Next day, when Campobasso fell, webb equipment and a revolver holster bearing the major's name were found in a large house on the outskirts of the town.

Dug Up Four Graves

Thereupon, Italian civilians in great excitement, described how a Canadian major had been shot by the Germans near this house and buried at the back. Capt. Roy W. Essex, Toronto, chaplain of the "Hasty Pees," with a party of the regiment, dug up this grave. They found a newly buried major, but it was not Kennedy.

The search went on for four days and three more graves were exhumed by Capt. Essex in his tireless search for the missing major. On the fifth day Major Kennedy was reported missing, presumed a prisoner of war; which was exactly the case, and there is the story.

Major Kennedy was following up the road about one mile out of the town, accompanied by an R.C.R. private carrying the portable wireless with which the major was going to report the situation to his own battalion. Also with him was a 48th Highlander stretcher-bearer, hoping to catch up with his unit ahead.

R.C.R. personnel in support of the 48th ahead were scattered along the road and out in the orchards. Major Kennedy met an R.C.R. lieutenant, Russ Watson, of London, who warned him that the Germans were heavily mortaring the road and very accurately and he had better keep off the road.

Walked Into Ambush

A line of trees to the right of the road one or two fields over, offered a screen for the major and his two companions to advance with cover so they headed for the trees. It was broad noon of a beautiful October day. Down that line of trees was, at that moment, advancing a full platoon of Germans of the Herman Goering division, in the hopes of outflanking the 48th Highlanders.

Expecting to overtake the Highlanders, Major Kennedy walked fairly rapidly up the hedge of trees until, seeing no Highlanders and seeing movements ahead that looked suspicious, the major took cover and lay quiet, talking in whispers to his companions, one laden with an 18 wireless set, the other a stretcher-bearer with his haversack-load of bandages and first-aid equipment. Suddenly from all sides, a dozen Germans rose up from the hedges and bushes, armed with submachine-guns and machine-pistols. They were within ten yards. The major had walked into an ambush.

"What were your sensations?" I asked Major Kennedy.

"I had often thought," he replied "of being wounded and killed, but I had never dreamed of being captured. My instant thought was . . . this can't happen to me."

Hopeless to Resist

"It was, of course, hopeless to resist. My two companions were helpless with their burdens. I had a pistol in its holster and half a dozen machine weapons were pointed at us from a few feet range. In a moment the sergeant commanding the German platoon had taken charge of me, taken my pistol and ordered me to proceed up the hedge.

"He put two men in charge of the three of us, and after following the hedge a quarter of a mile, we turned on to the road and were taken to a house on the edge of Campobasso. There sitting at a table in the sunshine in his shirt sleeves was a cool, unconcerned German captain. He questioned me in bits of English and bits of French. My high school German was vaguely useful, but my high school French came in a little handier.

"When I informed the captain that I had no information to give he sent me inside the house to an upstairs room. My two companions were separated from me and I did not see them again except once for a passing moment in a railway station far back of the lines."

Thought of Escape at Once

"When," I asked the major, "did the thought of escape first enter your mind?"

"Oh, immediately," said Major Kennedy. "I started to mutter to the R.C.R. and Highlander as soon as we started to walk back with our first escort, but the guard made us stop speaking and separated us.

"I had the idea our attack would soon engulf the town and if we could stall, we would be rescued. But after the brief interview with the nonchalant German captain, I was shut up in a room upstairs where I could hear the battle approaching—especially a series of terrific shots nearby from our medium artillery. I took off my webb equipment and pistol holster and left them in a corner of the room where incidentally, they were found a few hours later by my regiment."

Major Kennedy was left in the room listening to the sounds of the approaching battle until about 5:30 p. m., when he was taken down and put in a closed car and started on his long journey as a prisoner of war. He was treated then and throughout the journey of four days, with respect and without any roughness. Through the evening and early night he was driven via Castelpignano to a town, the name of which he did not get, where presumably brigade headquarters were established. There he was questioned by two staff officers.

Silence Angered Captors

"Their method was to try to engage me in friendly conversation," said the major. "They came to me very amiable and sympathetic and introduced themselves. We talked about the war, the country and the weather. When I gave a smiling refusal to any question having to do with the army or my unit, they grew angry. Our interview terminated on a less friendly tone than it began. But no threats or abuse were attempted."

After this interview, Major Kennedy was put in the loft of a barn to sleep and was given a blanket. Guards stood in the barn all night and there was no chance of escape. The next day in an open volkeswagon or troop carrier the major was driven to the town of Roccataso.

On the evening of this trip he reached divisional headquarters where he was taken into a large room with a large party of German senior officers sitting before a heavy-laden table with wine and food of all sorts. Major Kennedy, now somewhat frowsy in his battle dress and unshaven, stood at attention while the German commander turned in his chair and haughtily questioned him. The major gave his usual polite refusal to any question of interest to the enemy and after a moment the German general dismissed him.

Bound for Germany.

At Roccaraso, Major Kennedy was kept two nights and a day in the waiting room of the railway station, which was the guard-room. The military police office was in a cafe across the street. He was given the same food as his guards. In this waiting room he saw his former companions, the R.C.R. and Highlander, for a moment. Two more prisoners were put in the waiting room with him—escaped refugee prisoners from prison camps up north, a New Zealander captured in Tobruk and an American captured at Tunis. Both were suffering privation from their escape journey down through Italy.

On the fourth day of his capture Major Kennedy, with these escapee prisoners of war, were put aboard a large open lorry along with some machinery. Three guards were put on the back of the lorry. Major Kennedy was informed he was on his way to Rome to be transferred by train to Germany as a prisoner of war.

"That would be Oct. ," said he. "We headed for Roccaraso via Sulmona and Avvizano on the highway to Rome. We stopped three times during that journey beyond Avvizano, the guards jumping down from the truck and taking their stand front and back to watch us. About 5 p.m., when we were, as far as I could see by the road signs, about 100 kilometres from Rome, it began to rain.

Leaped from Truck.

"I had in the previous stop, got a position near the end of the truck among the machinery. The other prisoners and the three guards huddled up against the cab in the front end of the open truck for shelter from the heavy rain.

"About 5:30, just as it was starting to get dusk I waited until we were passing through a hilly and brushy country and also waited for a sharp curve in the road. I felt the truck slowing for a bend. I saw the guards huddled up forward against the cab. The rain was really coming down. I glanced out and saw an abandoned field on one side and a steep slope on the other. So over the back of the truck I went and landed running.

"Of course it was more good luck than good management that landed me where I was, because the excitement of such a moment nearly paralyzes you. But it so happened that the truck was around the bend before it could stop. I heard one shot and shouts and it could not have been more than 30 seconds before two of the guards were after me. But I had dived through a thorn hedge, with some damage to my bald head and flung myself full length in a tiny creek bed I found on the far side.

21 Days in Mountains.

"Two guards came to hunt me while the other guard and the driver guarded the other prisoners. I heard their voices quite close, but apparently they thought I had run on into the woods a short way up the slope. After a few minutes they gave up the hunt and I heard the truck drive away.

"I lay face down in the creek hidden by tall grass and weeds for quite a spell, for fear one of the guards had waited behind. But as it grew darker I took a chance and got up and headed into the hills."

For 21 days Major Kennedy was to wander southward in those hills from just west of the town of Avvezzano down through the southward mountains toward Sora—which, if you have a map, you can see is a terrible and mountainous journey. He avoided all roads, because, every mile southward the Germans increased in numbers. At last at Venafro, newly captured by the Americans, he had his joyous deliverance and handed himself over to a patrol of Yanks just coming out from Venafro to continue their attack.

During that journey it rained in late October and early November as only it can rain in the mountains of Italy—heavy, laden downpours day and night with no hope of cease in the leaden clouds and fogs. His boots gave out in about a week. He had little food and was soaked to the skin most of the time.

Lost 15 Pounds.

He thinks he lost about 15 pounds during the ordeal which, off a lean hard soldier, is a lot of weight. He was in such shape that when, in the mountains overlooking Venafro and seeing the guns of our American Allies flashing below, other escapees with whom he had joined tried to prevent him going on because he was so thin and worn.

For three days after his escape from the truck Major Kennedy walked absolutely alone. He avoided every civilian, every road, every human habitation. Having succeeded in actually escaping, he lived in hourly dread of making one misstep. But on the fourth night he saw a barn and went into it. Its hay and straw was heaven to his exhausted limbs and body.

He had his first sheltered sleep in that barn and in the morning he was awakened by a little Italian who came into the barn. Major Kennedy spoke politely to him, nearly frightening the little man out of his wits. That small Italian becomes now one of Major Kennedy's larger friends in this life. First, he discussed with the Major in sign language and pidgin Italian English, what the situation was that faced them both. To make the situation clear, the Major said he was "Americano" and the little man went away and brought back not only hot food but an Italian who could speak good American.

Was Given Shelter.

After scouting the country, the Major was moved into the house and given a room with a bed. "Fifteen minutes after I entered that little house," said the Major. "With the family and friends all crowded around to se the Major or 'Commandante Americano' a motorcycle came up the road and halted. I dove into the next room and under the bed. A German entered and stayed 15 minutes. He was in search of eggs or chickens. When they went away, they helped draw me from under the bed.

For two days the Major stayed with these humble friends and then the little man took him to the railway and bought two tickets. In ragged Italian clothes with several days' scrub on his face the Major accompanied by his diminutive Italian friend, rode in the third class carriage with Italian peasants 40 miles south on his hard journey, to within a few miles of Sora.

When they parted, the little Italian kissed the Major on both cheeks, hugged him, prayed for him and then ran as fast as his little legs would carry him down the hillside, for fear his emotions would get the best of him.

From here on every road, every path, every human habition bristled with danger. The highways rumbled with German military traffic and in the distance he could hear the mutter and rumble of battle.

Into the mountains he went, where he met, through Italians, five other escapees, and they joined forces for the last leg of the trying journey.

Strain Doubled Hourly.

"With each mile," said Major Kennedy, "the nerve strain doubled." His boots had given out, he was dressed in the cast-off rags of the Italians, and his feet were wrapped in rags and pieces of cardboard. Yet they travelled scores of miles over mountains, up slopes, down deep valleys. They slept in woodcutters' shacks. A British tank officer who was too sick to travel loaned his good boots to Major Kennedy to go out at night and "scrounge" food from Italians. Among the Italians they found nothing but friends.

Finally with the Sangro Valley just over the last mountain range, they camped in a thorn-bush waste. As they huddled around their fire they heard strange sounds. It was another, a new escapee, Lieut. Fred Fisher of the Sherwood Foresters, taken at Tobruk, who had lost his spectacles, and here after escaping and travelling all the way from north Italy, was about to give up the ghost.

But Major Kennedy went and brought him into the circle. And it was with Lieut. Fisher that Major Kennedy climbed the last mountain, crossed the last divide and arrived at freedom.

Crossed Under Foe View.

"We decided that a large party of eight was too risky to try to cross the last road which was the main German defence road this side of the Sangro," explained the Major. "Some of the party moreover, did not want to risk the try in their weakened condition. But Fisher and I made it and it is the one thing in the whole adventure of which I am a little proud:

"When we came over the mountains and down to the valley the road was watched every yard by the Germans and was constantly alive with traffic. We took an hour to cross the open ground by the road alone. We did it in full view of a German command car with a clerk and operator in it, and a German sentry in the other direction.

"From there on, all we had to do was keep low and wait till dark. By now we knew we were in the midst of operations, for the firing was all around us. At dark we entered Venafro, which we had heard was taken by the Americans. At the bridge we were met by an American patrol."

Borrowed a Jeep.

It did not take them long to establish their identity. Fisher was bound to return to Britain, being an escaped prisoner of war from a prisoner-of-war camp, but the major figured differently. In his rags of Italian clothes, he begged a jeep from Fifth Army headquarters, and in that jeep, on the 25th day of his disappearance, he arrived back to his regiment in Cathelpignano.

Sergt.-Maj. Angus Duffy was the first to see him.

"I saw this wop in rags getting out of a jeep," said the R.S.M., "right in front of the battalion orderly room. I had just dismissed an N.C.O.'s parade. I could not believe my eyes, yet somehow I knew the Major would come back. I let out a h--- of a yell and ran to meet him. The whole N.C.O. parade swarmed round."

But the Major was anxious to report back to his commanding officer. So while the word ran like wildfire through the regiment in the Italian village, the shabby and footsore Italian "refugee" mounted the steps of the battalion headquarters house jauntily and went past the dazed sentry and into the room where the C.O. lay in bed ill and other officers were sitting about.

"It was quite a scene," admitted Major Kennedy. "We were all glad to see one another."

The Colonel had, just half-an-hour before, finished writing a letter to Major Kennedy's wife in Owen Sound, a letter of sympathy and condolence, reciting all the virtues of the Major.

"He tore it up," said Major Kennedy. "I think I should have seen it."

And Major Kennedy was back on duty next morning as second in command of the "Hasty Pees."

Christmas In Italy

By MAJOR BERT S. WEMP, DFC
Telegram War Correspondent

"Canadian troops have cleared Rossetta, and have pushed on northeast to within two miles of Alfonsini. Remaining enemy rear-guards east of Naviglio, between Bagnacavallo and Faenza, now are mainly cleared".

This communique describes the fighting on the Italian front on Christmas day, 1943. Flame throwers were used, but the actions interferred very little with the Canadians' Christmas dinner and, in some cases, Christmas tree celebrations. Canadian ingenuity overcame all difficulties.

The Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, had decorated a German spruce tree which they captured in a Nazi officer's mess. Small presents were hung from it, and boxes from home placed underneath. Santa gave them out.

A Good Christmas.

I visited as many regiments as daylight would permit and for the whole it was a good Christmas. The Huns sent over a few shells and we kept up desultory fire all day. Consolidated along Senio river, the Huns made no more of those vicious counter-attacks which he had for past two weeks and in which he had received exceptionally heavy casualties.

Saturday it snowed all day, falling from four to six inches deep, but 'twas only a White Christmas in the mountains for it disappeared from the plain on Sunday. There was ice on the ponds on Christmas morning.

In shell-wrecked buildings, home-made stoves supplied a little heat and how the cooks turned cement floors into roaring-hot bakeries or cookeries was wonderful!

Captured Christmas Tree.

Private Bruce C. Castle, of Peterborough, proudly displayed Christmas trees secured when his regiment captured a German headquarters building. Privates John Cardiff, of Ottawa, and J. Nichols, of Bobcaygeon, displayed two halves of beef with machine gun bullets through them but the meat was ready for the oven.

Various companies had turkeys, geese, chickens, ducks, pork, beef, oranges, nuts, cake, etc., for their Yuletide celebration.

Some of Those Present.

A cross-section of names included: Major Ron Church and Lieut. Don D. Beaumont, both of Picton; Captains Robert Scott, Marmora; John R. S. Spencer, Bowmanville; Frank Kane, James Frair, Picton; Lieut. Harry Edwards, Toronto; Sgt.-Major P. V. Fitzpatrick, Cordova; C.S.M. Art Storms, Picton; CQMS. M. Wright, Madoc; Sergeants Jack Pemberton, Belleville; J. Carswell, Madoc; Edmond Long, Tweed; Corporals T. O'Brien, Bancroft; Allan Nourse, Picton; H. A. Castle, Charles Perr, both of Peterborough; Privates Rambler Nobes, Marmora; J. Pyke, Napanee; J. A. Temedio, St. Kitts; Frank Brown, Toronto; W. M. McGaw, Niagara Falls; and Clifford Riddell, Thornhill.

Capt. Max Porritt Awarded M.C. For Heroic Action

Arriving back in England after spending a few months in a German prison of war camp was a doubly momentous occasion for Captain J. Maxwell Porritt of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment.

His liberation as a prisoner of war meant he was a free man once again and as he arrived back in the United Kingdom he learned he had been awarded the Military Cross for heroic action during the advance of his regiment toward Casena on the Italian front last October 14th.

With the enemy in strongly fortified houses and entrenchments, Captain Porritt in command of "C" Company, was ordered to attack, destroy the enemy and occupy the positions.

States the citation, "With great skill and coolness, Captain Porritt led his company in the assault, constantly exposing himself as he exhorted and encouraged his troops forward. When enemy in a house proved particularly troublesome, he moved across 200 yards of exposed ground to the tanks, and, standing there with a complete disregard for his personal safety, directed their guns onto the building. Then, stopping that fire, he charged the house with three men, killing three of the enemy and taking fifteen prisoners.

"Five houses and a church were cleared in the same manner, Capt. Porritt first directing the tank guns onto the target, and then leading a small party of men in to mop up. The company succeeded in killing a large number of the enemy and took a total of fifty-five prisoners. The ground taken, Capt. Porritt quickly consolidated and held on in the face of terrific shelling and mortaring.

"Throughout the entire engagement, Capt. Porritt displayed a courage, coolness and skill that was an inspiration, not only to his company, but to the whole battalion and to the supporting tanks. His great leadership and contempt of danger enabled his company to drive the enemy from dangerous positions and cleared the way for a further advance of our troops."

Captain Porritt is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Porritt, Lingham St., Belleville, and went overseas in August, 1940.

Emblem of Courage and Valor

Emblem of courage, valor, determination and Victory, the war-scarred battle colors of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, expected to arrive home shortly, will proudly float in front of the regiment.

Enemy machine-guns have marked the colors with the scars of war. It was carried in the van of the fighting by those gallant sons of Hastings and Prince Edward Counties and neighboring district through the hell of Sicily, Italy, Holland, Germany. It has never been lowered nor have enemy hands polluted it.

Carried at the head of the regiment, whose outstanding valor and heroism has marked it as one of the finest fighting infantry units to leave the shores of Canada, the flag has never 'bitten the dust.'

It has flaunted defiance at the common enemy when the days were dark, and waved gloriously in the many days of triumph.

In its "finest hour" it flew at the head of the regiment as it marched as conquerors out of war-torn Europe, with the arrogant Nazi grovelling in the depths of defeat.

Now it is back in Canada. Residents of the city should pay tribute to this symbol of devotion to duty, of courage in the bitter days and of triumph in victory. It is emblematic of the finest service ever rendered by man to his country, and of those heroic youths who left farm and fireside, school, shop, factory and office to serve as "farmer soldiers" and who have brought undimming fame to not only themselves as gallant soldiers but to the cities, towns, villages, and hamlets of this district from whence they came.

Welcome Home!

Chief Petawawa Much, Princess Minnehaha, Regimental Mascots, Will Bid Farewell To Troops in Final Parade of Famous Regt.

Little Chief, Original Mascot of Unit, Was Buried in French Soil When Hasty Pees Returned From 1941 Foray

Proud symbol of his race, and epitomizing the courage, heroism and determination of the gallant "paleface" warriors with whom he served in the holocaust of war in continental Europe, Chief "Petawawa-Much," ten-foot wooden Indian mascot of the famous First Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, will stand proudly at attention at the left of the reviewing stand, when the crack First Canadian Division infantry unit marches by in its last parade here on "Welcome Home" day.

The long period of unrequited love which the famous mascot has borne without complaint since he was sent overseas in September, 1941, will end on the day the regiment arrives in Belleville, for waiting to greet her inanimate lover will be the "Princess Minnehaha," proud Indian Princess, whose dreary existence of exhibiting her feminine charms in front of a summer cabin resort on the Trent Road will end temporarily on the great day of regimental homecoming.

For on the right of the reviewing stand, will be the proud descendant of a wooden Indian royal family, united at last with her lover, and who for the first time will view the heroic regiment she nearly joined in 1940, when heartbroken she attempted to be with her first love "Little Chief," original mascot of the unit who now lies buried in a grave somewhere near Brest in France. But that is another story.

Coming Home with Troops.

"Chief Petawawa-Much", according to the best traditions of the army, is coming home on the same troopship as his beloved "Hasty Pees."

He has a special compartment all his own. In fact it is a brand new crate especially designed to convey him back to his beloved Bay of Quinte, and he will occupy a spot of honor on the great troopship when it leaves Britain with the regiment on the long-awaited, long-looked-for journey home. On his arrival in Belleville Chief Petawawa-Much will be given a special guard of honor, and after detraining will be conveyed to his post on the reviewing stand by special military vehicle, there to view in regimental marchpast his gallant battle-scarred buddies for perhaps the last time.

The story of the birth of the 500-pound mascot is an interesting one. It is told in the history of the regiment written by Lt.-Col. B. C. Donnan, former officer commanding the 2nd. Battalion of the regiment and Major Angus Mowat, his second in command.

Whether it is due, they wrote, to the normal love of pets, or to the latent maternal instinct which we are all said to possess, or whether it may be a combination of the two impulses, the fact remains that soldiers have been taking to themselves pets and mascots ever since there have been soldiers.

All Have Mascots.

And sailors, too, as witness the perennial parrot. And airmen go up and do the most amazing things to Fritzie with bits of cloth monkeys and stuffed beavers nailed to the edge of the cockpit.

Now the conventional mascot, the mangy bear, the powdered goat, the half-starved French dog, and the dugout rat, these things are all very well as far as they go. But it took a Canadian County regiment, mechanized and metal to the eyebrows, to gild the centuries. It took the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment to combine in one symbolic figure, the stubborn iron will of today with the traditional past of the nation.

But since this story deals primarily with "Chief Petawawa-Much," the stories of the "Little Chief", Princess Petawawa, mascot of the Second Battalion and Princess "Minnehaha" will be told later.

Temporary War Widow.

When the sad news of the loss of the "Little Chief" arrived in Canada and the acquisition of Princess Petawawa had become a reality and it was discovered that the Princess Minnehaha would be through force of circumstances, a temporary war-widow, the Second Battalion began to devise ways and means of acquiring another Indian mascot for the now battle-baptised First Battalion in England.

For these veterans, gone was the thrill of seeing their giant "Little Chief" standing in his post of honor near headquarters, spear extended, and defiant eyes gazing seawards to where the common enemy lay waiting. Involuntarily they turned eager eyes to the "eyes right" or "eyes left" whichever the case may be as they passed the spot and hand would come halfway to the salute, before the troops realized that the "Chief" was lying in foreign soil.

"Surely," said someone, "you have now had enough Indians in your regiment to satisfy the wildest desire for mascots."

Carved New Mascot.

Then another idea broke, fully accoutered to the light. Previously Lt.-Col. Donnan had discovered, while in the throes of training in Pethawawa, a wood carver, one Abe Patterson, who was an artist rather than an artisan. It was suggested to him that he probably wasn't good enough to carve an Indian, a real Indian, a real Chief, fit to follow, or lead the First Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment into German, or wherever they might be sent in the course of duty.

Abe's reply was brief. "Carve one?" he said, spitting on his hands. "I carve one to knock your eye out."

"How much, Abe?"

"Cheap. One buck, fifty bucks."

"Sold."

And Abe was a man of honor, as well as an artist.

Mascot Arrives in Trenton.

On October 30, 1940, there arrived at the Trenton Armory, crated and weighing 500 pounds the buff "Chief Petawawa-Much", conceived in the regiment, born in Pembroke and destined to glory with the Regiment.

He is an imposing specimen. He is carved out of the solid trunk of a pine, twenty-inches in diameter. On his pedestal he stands nearly ten feet in height. His headdress is regal, that of a full-fledged chief as befits the regiment. His features are pure Sioux, finely carved, and with an expression as ferocious as those of his forebears who fought to the death rather than surrender.

His thighs and torso would make the mythical Adonis go green with envy. He is "a poetess' dream of strength and vigor."

And his motto is "Paratus," which in the common and sometimes rough speech of the soldier means: "Now don't lose this one."

Taken on Strength.

In the Part II Orders, 2nd. Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment he was taken on strength as of October 30, 1940, "No. 00001 Prince, Chief Petawawa-Much." But unlike most members of the Second, his dreams of transfer came true.

It is the night of Tuesday, November 26, 1940. The scene is on the shores of the Bay of Quinte, near the mouth of the River Trent, where the Chief's ancestors have hunted, fought and scalped in years of long ago. A cold, biting wind blows across the bay.

The ranks of a company of the Second Battalion stand as rigidly at attention as the Chief himself, their faces lighted by the glow of signal fires. In the background, drums beat out the slow insistent call of the spirit tribes to war. A bugle sounds. Rifles of the troops clash to the "present." The Commanding Officer, Lt.-Col. B. C. Donnan, E.D., steps forward salutes and hands the Chief's keeping to Lt.-Col. A. V. Yates, M.C., honorary colonel of First Battalion.

No Speeches at Acceptance.

He is accepted, and that is all. There are no speeches needed for this was an affair between soldiers. "Chief Petawawa-Much" was then a member of the First Battalion. In the next two days he would be lashed to the deck of a Britain-bound destroyer. That is all. The Second merely said. "Take him First Battalion, you lousy thugs, there's more to follow."

But the best-laid "plans of mice and men, etc.," and so it was with the transportation of "Chief Petawawa-Much" overseas. According to plan he was to be lashed aboard a destroyer and whisked across the Atlantic immediately, to gladden the hearts and eyes of the First Battalion. But something went wrong.

In the fall of 1940 he was, in truth, lashed to a battle wagon at Kingston, known as the corvette "Napanee." This trim little ship, unfortunately ran aground in the St. Lawrence River, and remained in home water during the winter of 1940-41. It was suggested that the weight of the "Chief" was the cause of the mishap but the subsequent court of inquiry did not bear this out. However in the spring of 1941 the corvette proceeded on her way to the Atlantic Ocean on duty, but Chief Petawawa-Much faded into oblivion and despite searching inquiries he was apparently and irrevocably lost.

Found in Naval Yard.

About the middle of August, 1941, Lt.-Col. Donnan received a letter from Major Colin Hepburn, then stationed at Fort Frontenac, Kingston, who suggested that Colonel Craig, then commanding officer of the Fortress at Halifax might be able to give some light on the whereabouts of the Chief. The result was that the Indian was traced to the Navy Yards in Halifax. The following letter was written by Col. Donnan to Col. Craig:

"You may have read of the rather famous Indian mascot taken to England by the First Battalion of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment. This poor fellow went to France with the troops and became a casualty and is now buried there.

"The 2nd. Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment had a new and handsome Indian carved. The new mascot by arrangement with Lieut. Commander Smith was placed aboard the corvette 'Napanee' with the intention that on arrival at Halifax he would be placed on a battle wagon for shipment to England, but unfortunately the 'Napanee' came to grief last Fall in the St. Lawrence and the boat did not arrive in Halifax until after Lieut. Commander Smith had been transferred to another command. We have finally traced the Chief to H.M.C.S. Dockyard, Halifax.

"I enclose herewith a letter received from Major Colin Hepburn with a copy of a letter from Capt. Edwards. It would be very much appreciated if you would arrange for the transfer of the mascot by warship or by some service to England and that arrangements be made to advise the C.O. of the First Battalion of its arrival. I may say that the cost of transportation by commercial vehicle would be prohibitive and furthermore we have no money."

Received Early Reply

Col. Craig replied as follows:

"The Indian Chief was in storage in the Dockyard here and I had it removed and gave a receipt to the Navy for the same. As there was no way of shipping the Indian, I got Brigadier Salmon, who had, for a time, commanded the First Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, give him room aboard his transport.

"He promised to see it delivered to the battalion in England. I thought it would be rather nice to have an officer who had commanded the battalion, bring them the Chief from the 2nd. Battalion."

On the 27th. September, 1941, there came a cablegram to Lt.-Col. Donnan. It read: "Chief Petawawa arrived good condition. Many thanks from all ranks 1st. Battalion.

"HOWARD GRAHAM."

There in England, the troops greeted the Chief with whoops of delight. He was given the post of honor formerly occupied by his distinguished predecessor "Little Chief." He was accorded the same honors. Officers and other ranks solemnly saluted the wooden epitome of the courage and valor of the Bay of Quinte soldier as they passed by regimental headquarters.

He was a source of wonder to British visitors. His fierce visage cleverly carved in an expression of unconquerable spirit and defiance, glared from beneath his head-dress. His magnificent torso and thighs were the envy of the regimental athletes. He represented home to those training-weary, magnificent men of the First Battalion who had experienced their battle baptism in that famous June 1941 foray into France, and who were eager and willing to face the supreme test whenever they were called upon.

Came Great Day.

Came the great day when the regiment and the divisions were ordered into action. This was the culmination of years of intensive training. This was to be the opportunity to pay Jerry for that reception in France. This was to be retribution to the enemy for the forced leaving of their beloved "Little Chief" somewhere near Brest. They were light-hearted men, these "farmer" soldiers as they paraded in heavy battle order for the final inspection. Battle light gleamed on young faces. Anticipation shone on the countenances of older men. They were Canadian metal as yet untested in the main crucible of war and from which, as later events proved, were to emerge with lasting honor and glory; with their fame inscribed in the history books of the war in blazing letters, and their heroism, courage, determination and fortitude comparable with the best in the British and Canadian armies.

Chief Went With Them.

But they did not march alone. With them securely crated, ready and willing to be with his "boys" in battle was the Chief.

He was with them on the beaches of Sicily. He flaunted wooden defiance at Nazi and Italian in those first fierce battles of the Sicilian campaign. Along tortuous mountain roads he travelled. In the heat of battle he stood immobile outside his headquarters, or wherever he was posted. He was a source of inspiration to one of the best fighting units in the Canadian army. He was a comfort to wounded heroes as they passed him on their way to hospital.

On to the bloody fields of Italy he went with his beloved Hasty Pees. Then to Holland and other hell-spots of war.

Now he is coming home. And those gallant youngsters who because of wounds or other circumstances, have returned home ahead of the regiment and will give their famous mascot a welcome befitting a hero and a comrade.

The "Little Chief"

There stood for many years on the roof of the Canadian Canners building in Picton, the striking figure of an Indian Chief in full war paint. He had, as long as the oldest inhabitant can remember, braved the heat of summers, and the frosts of winters; the storms and lightnings of the heavens—and the bad marksmanship of small boys armed with .22 rifles. He was a symbol of courage and "stick it, boys, till hell freezes over."

The Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was quartered in that canning factory right under the eye-and-foot of 'Little Chief. This was in the autumn of 1939 when the regiment was mobilized, and preparing to take its place in the First Division Canadian Active Service Force.

And as day follows night, and as people of the counties of Hastings and Prince Edward are born with imagination, this metal Indian eventually found his way into the ranks of the regiment.

The story goes that it was one, Private Secord, No. 1 Platoon, H.Q. Company, who led the scaling party that brought the Indian to the ground and placed him in front of the sergeants' sleeping quarters.

Serving Better Purpose.

There were murmurs in the most southerly of the two counties. He had stood there, oh, so long. But youth and the Hasty Pees were not to be denied and the result was the original owners, frowning at first and then smiling, said, "Take him, boys, he'll never serve a better purpose."

The Chief was duly taken on the strength as No. C-0000. Private Battle Axe, his identity disc was stamped as such, but his name was later changed, (on the request of the original owners) to "Little Chief."

Later the regiment sailed—and the Chief sailed with it.

In England he stood at proud attention on the barracks square, saluted and respected by all ranks—even the formerly proud officers of the permanent force, who were posted to the unit. When the regiment marched by, the Chief received an "Eyes Left" and nobody cared when he failed to return the compliment.

And now—Sorrow.

Became a Casualty.

Since soldiers never "go" anywhere but always "proceed", the "Chief" proceeded to France with his men and there became a casualty. Whether it was shell, dive-bomber or rifle bullet—or just plain precautionary measure, is not known; but Little Chief lies buried on French soil and in a spot that has been carefully pin-pricked on the map. But it is a temporary internment and one day he will be exhumed, rusty no doubt, and returned to his beloved regiment and old home in Prince Edward County.

Now, "Little Chief" was a bachelor, and those who know their Kipling know about chaps who have been too, too long "Single Men in Barracks." So, some of the regiment's recruits stationed at the depot in Picton and ready to go to Borden, decided to get the "Chief" a wife. There was one available and only one.

"Princess Minnehaha" was her name and she was living a life of loneliness, standing on one foot outside a service station a few miles west of Belleville, enticing United States tourists to enjoy her master's hospitality.

Eloped by Proxy.

It was suggested to the Princess by the recruits that she might do worse than elope with them (by proxy) and join the great Prince "Little Chief" in England.

She did.

Then trouble started. Unlike the original owners of the Chief, the owner of the Princess proved to be somewhat hostile about the whole thing and had the law on the Princess, the recruits and the regiment. He said she was worth $500, so as all the soldiers in the regiment didn't have that much money and as "Authority" took a serious view of the case, the Princess was returned inviolate.

So far, the regiment had one Indian buried in France and another returned to her rightful owner. But the Indian virus was strong in regimental veins and there appeared to be no antidote.

Came the dawn of a new era and the partial mobilization of the Second Battalion of the regiment. This unit had no boots, no hopes, nothing but the will to serve and the iron determination to acquire an Indian.

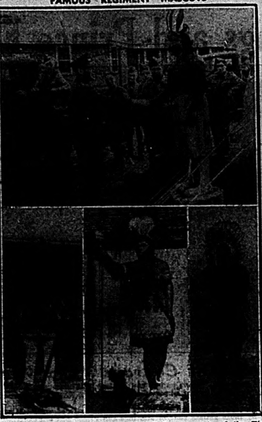
Combed All Stores.

Sergeant Hilts, the provost bloke was detailed to comb all the tobacco stores in Canada and get one. There wasn't one available, warrior, squaw or papoose. The adjutant was driven nearly wild, what with trying to trace Sgt. Hilt's movements throughout the country and with answering letters from chiefs of police from Cornwall to Saskatoon, as urging them the sergeant was really quite harmless and really was "on a mission."

But in the meantime another idea had germinated. It's an old idea in the army—to wit—"what you can't get from Ordnance you can damned well make." The idea was sired by Jim Reddick, son of Alex Reddick of the First Battalion, out of an old cedar tree. After a few days of secret work, Major Angus Mowat, O.C. headquarters, was able to wire the adjutant, "Stop search for Indian woman. Have just had one made."

So Princess Petawawa came into being. She went to camp with the regiment and took the salute proudly and lovingly from her Second Battalion proteges.

FAMOUS REGIMENT MASCOTS



Above are pictured the famous Indian mascots of the First and Second Battalions of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment. Top: Lieut.-Col. B. C. Donnan, commanding officer of the Second Battalion is seen shaking hands with his battalion mascot "Princess Petawawa," while the troops look on. Left lower, is the famous "Little Chief," who now lies buried in French soil near Brest, placed there when the battalion was forced to evacuate France on the well-known June 1941 foray. Lower centre, is "Princess Minnehaha," sweetheart of the "Chief," who was heartbroken when she failed to get overseas, and who will be in a position of honor on the reviewing stand when the First Battalion marches past on "Welcome Day." Last but by no means least, the war-scarred, battle-weary "Chief Petawawa-Much", regimental mascot who was with the regiment through the hell of Sicily, Italy, France and Germany, and which will be in the post of honor at the reviewing stand to bid a silent farewell to his gallant "paleface" buddies of the Hasty Pees when they arrive home.

The First Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment

INFORMATION FOR NEXT-OF-KIN

PARTICIPATING TROOPS AND SPECTATORS

DETRAINMENT

The First Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, returning from overseas, will detrain as a unit at the Canadian National Railways Station, Station Street, at a time to be announced through the press and radio. Committees have been formed to arrange a Parade through the streets of Belleville, a march past and entertainment for the Unit prior to dispersal.

TIME AND PLACE OF ASSEMBLY

The First Battalion veterans and other active service veterans will form up at the Armouries at the time to be designated. Members of the Canadian Legion, The Army and Navy Veterans in Canada will form up at the same time and march as units in themselves. The whole will march to the C.N.R. Station square and take up a position in the east section at least 30 minutes before arrival time.

ROUTE OF PARADE

The Parade will move off from the Station and proceed along the following route: West on Station Street to Front Street; south on Front Street to Victoria Avenue; east on Victoria Avenue, to Pinnacle Street; south on Pinnacle St. past the Court House, thence west on Campbell Street to Front Street; south on Front Street to Bridge Street East; east on Bridge Street to Church Street where the Parade will halt and form line of battalion facing right. Brigadier Howard Graham, D.S.O. and Bar will take the salute from a reviewing stand outside the Salvation Army Citadel on Pinnacle Street opposite the County Court Buildings.

NEXT-OF-KIN

The next-of-kin of the returning troops are requested not to attempt to contact their loved ones by breaking thru' the enclosure at the railway station. Special arrangements have been made for reunions immediately after the detrainment of the regiment and at the Armouries. The entire square south of the station will be barricaded and the public excluded two hours prior to arrival of the troop train.

SPECTATORS

Spectators other than those holding cards of admission to the enclosures and Armouries, may view the proceedings from all parts of the route of parade. There will be accommodation for at least four thousand people on the lawns of the Hastings County Court House facing Pinnacle Street where the march-past and taking of the salute by Brigadier Howard Graham, D.S.O. and Bar, can be witnessed. Visitors to the city are respectfully requested to park their automobiles in the residential streets to facilitate traffic work in the downtown areas. City residents are asked to do likewise, or better yet, leave their cars in the garages. Out-of-town guests are requested to bring their own lunches to alleviate the tremendous demand on city hotels and restaurants.

BANDS

The Band of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, the Belleville Municipal Band, the Argyll Light Infantry Pipe Band, and other musical organizations will assemble at the Armouries at ninety minutes previous to time of arrival, and march with veterans to the station at the appointed time. After the parade through the main streets, the bands will wheel right through the main entrance to the Armouries Lawn and form up facing north on the lawn, brass bands on right. Pipe and Bugle Bands on the left of the driveway. The bugle band of the First Battalion will lead the parade through the streets.

H. & P.E. ACTIVE SERVICE PERSONNEL

It is hoped that returned veterans of the First Battalion and other Active Service personnel of the H. and P.E., officers and other ranks will turn out in FULL STRENGTH for their first formal parade in this city so that the public can do them fitting honor. Veterans of the unit will form up at the Armouries at least 90 minutes before train time and will march to the station to arrive there at least 30 minutes before the regiment arrives. The veterans will be under the command of Major Robert J. Graham, and other officers and N.C.O.'s. Dress: Battle Dress, beret or service cap, waist belt, anklets, black boots. Or civilian dress with medals and decorations.

KITS AND BAGGAGE

Kits and baggage of the detraining troops will be tagged and addressed and will be placed in storage under guard at the station.

COLOR PARTY

The Color Party bearing the battle colors and other flags of the regiment will proceed to the station to be on parade there 30 minutes prior to arrival time. It will march on the colors and turn them over to the Color Party of the First Battalion. The Colors will be carried at the head of the parade.

ORDER OF MARCH

The Order of March will be as follows: The Battle Flag and Bearer; First Battalion Bugle Band; Headquarters and Headquarters Company, First Battalion; A Company; Color Party; B Company; Belleville Municipal Band; C Company; D Company; Argyll Light Infantry Pipe Band; Veterans and other active service personnel of the First Battalion; Veterans' Organizations; St. John Ambulance Brigade.

CEREMONY AT ARMOURIES

"O Canada" by the bands; formation of the First Battalion into line; address of welcome by His Honor Warden J. Fred Wilson, M.L.A., Hastings County; reception and luncheon for the troops inside the Armouries; dishmissal of the Regiment and other troops; general dispersal to join friends and relatives.

Like Warriors of Old "Hasty Pees" Storm Enemy Crest in Most Heroic Exploit of Sicilian Campaign

(By ROSS MUNRO, C.P. War Correspondent)

Assoro, Sicily, July 24, 1943—Clambering up a 2,500-foot precipice, an Eastern Ontario Regiment (Hastings and Prince Edward) stormed the crest in a pre-dawn attack, captured the town of Assoro and drove a strong German force from the mountain peak on which it is situated. (Assoro is near Leonforte.)

The attack, carried out in moonlight up the sheer face of a cliff which the enemy thought it was impossible to scale, took the Germans by surprise.

The exploit, which took place during the night of July 21-22, was one of the most daring and heroic of any performed by the Canadians during the invasion of Sicily. The regiment is being praised by the whole Canadian formation.

After reaching the peak, which juts out like a pinnacle amidst the cliffs and mountains on this part of the island, they fought outside Assoro and on the nearby mountain slopes.

Cut Off for Day.

They were heavily shelled during the day but held their ground with determination. The regiment was cut off for most of one day but two members of the unit went through the enemy lines to get supplies.

After a steady fight of more than 30 hours the Germans were beaten off the position and the weary Canadian troops manned the crest as other Canadian units passed through to continue the attack.

"TWO HASTY PEES"

July 23, I reached the regiment on its new positions at the front. Officers and men told me of the storming of Ossoro's cliffs. Then I went to the cliff top with the same commanding officer and he described the gallant action that gained so much for the Canadians in the drive through this mountain citadel of rocks and peaks.

It took half an hour to drive to the cliff top from the valley. This peak is the most prominent one in this mountain district and has been a landmark for the past week during the fighting in the area northeast of Etna.

From the summit of the peak, on the outskirts of Assoro, I could see fifty miles, with a magnificent view of Mount Etna and the valleys and hills to the southwest over which the Canadians had advanced and of more hills and mountains to the north and northeast, were the Germans were located.

The Germans were dug in strongly on the slopes of south Assoro and were in strength in the town.

Did Impossible.

They apparently counted on the cliff on the eastern side of the town as a natural defence and an obstacle no army would assault. But the Canadians did what the enemy thought impossible.

On Tuesday afternoon, July 20, a careful but dangerous reconnaissance of the Assoro cliffs was made by officers who crept into an orchard a mile from the base of the precipice. Details of the attack were completed for this back-door surprise. After dark the Eastern Ontario regiment moved forward as a single column to the base of the cliff.

"We weren't intercepted en route but an Italian civilian gave us a scare when he loomed out in the night driving a bullock before him" the commanding officer laughed.

He said one company was stripped down to bare essentials as an assault company, armed with a large number of automatic weapons. Capt. Alex. Campbell, of Perth, Ont., led this company with another one up the left side of the cliff. He took the rest of the battalion through a steep gully on the right and led it up the precipice there.

The men started to climb silently in bright moonlight at about 4 a.m. July 21. By 5.05 a.m. they had reached the top of the 2,500-foot crest, just as dawn was breaking.

"The Boches weren't expecting us to come up the cliff and we made the top without a shot being fired," the commanding officer said.

Found Three Nazis.

"The only Germans we found on the peak were three observation men who were directing the gunfire against out troops the day before."

The crest was rapidly cleared and the Canadians took over the German trenches. By this time it was broad daylight and the Germans on the forward slope and in the town realized that the Canadian battalion had performed a near miracle and scrambled up the cliff to catch them on the flank. Then the fighting started.

The town was situated only 200 yards from the peak where the troops were concentrated, many of them in caves and holes in the rocks. There were sharp exchanges of fire between the Canadians and the Germans in the town, a jumble of buildings barely clinging to the mountain side.

"The Huns were milling around the town and our men shot up truckloads of them when they tried to clear out of the narrow streets," the C.O. continued. "There was sniping such as I have never seen before. It was guerilla and mountain warfare rolled into one."

The Germans then began to shell the Canadians on the crest and kept it up for hours. Nazi machine-gunners got the range and the sniping became fiercer. There was mortar fire, too.

Artillery as Snipers.

The artillery even performed as snipers, with 88 mm. guns shooting practically with open sights, trying to dislodge the pockets of infantry. Canadian transport tried to come up a road leading to the crest, but was ambushed by German artillery fire. The vehicles were not only blocked by a huge crater, but also stopped by shells.

The regiment was cut off by mid-afternoon and running short of food and ammunition, for they were unable to bring large quantities with them up the cliff.

Break Through Lines.

Capt. Bill Stockloser, of Madoc, Ont., and R.S.M. Angus Duffy, of Trenton, Ont., set off on foot through the enemy lines to get supplies. They got through and Duffy explained it by saying "we ran like hell over the open spaces."

Wednesday night (July 21) supplies [illegible] ammunition were packed up the cliff by two companies of the Royal Canadian Regiment who were supposed to be resting, but who pitched into this tough job to help out.

One officer said they tried to use a mule for the climb up the cliff and loaded it down with supplies. But the mule got as far as the base of the cliff and then died. Everything had to be placed on the backs of men. By this time the men on the clifftop were breaking into the town and turning out the enemy.

The Germans on the forward slope could not dent the Canadians' positions and were forced to clear out.

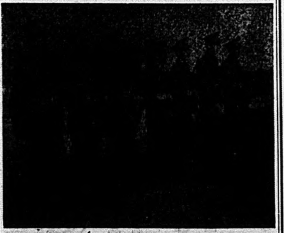
The Canadian artillery fire was effective and many harassing German guns were silenced. Finally the Canadians occupied all of Assoro and established a firm grip on the hardwon hilltop.

The officers in the cliff assault and the fighting on the peak included Stockloser, Major Bert Kennedy of Owen Sound, Ont.; Capt. Rolly Cleworth of Oakville; and North Bay, Ont.; Capt. Jim Bird of Picton, Ont.; Lieut. Len Hyslop of Kingston, Ont.; Signals Officers included Lieut. Roy N. Burness of Woodbridge, Ont.; Lt. Jack McKibbon of Trenton, Ont.; and Capt. Les Yates, Brockville, Ont.

Among the N.C.O.'s were C.S.M. George Ponsford of Picton, and C.S.M. Cecil Yearwood of Madoc.

Many of the crack infantrymen who followed the officers through to victory came from Picton, Cornwall, Belleville, Brockville, Trenton, Madoc, and other Eastern Ontario cities and towns. I talked with a few of these men. They are in tremendous spirits now after getting a rest. Cooks were preparing stews and gallons of steaming tea in the caves and trenches they were occupying.

There were numerous incidents of individual gallantry and there will probably be a number of awards as a result of this first big action the unit has fought as a regiment.



And here are some more of the gallant fighters of the old "Originals." Little did they dream in those early training days that they were standing on the edge of the worst war in history. But they did know that the "farmer" regiment would give all it had in the cause of civilization. They were right. Those youngsters fought with courage and heroism that brought the admiration of the whole of Canada and the United Nations. "Welcome home."

TWO GALLANT BROTHERS

The soldier seen above is MAJOR CLIFFORD BROAD, member of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, who will greet his old comrades on their arrival at Halifax today. Major Broad, who saw considerable service overseas with his unit, was selected to command the Hastings and Prince Edward contingent destined for the Far East. But an atomic bomb and Japanese surrender prevented that. With the gallant major is a brother who saw lengthy service as a ferry pilot in the R.C.A.F.

Welcome Home

(By BRIGADIER HOWARD D. GRAHAM, D.S.O.)

To the present members of the First Battalion of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment now returning as a unit; and to all those other officers and men who have returned prior to this date, I should like to say "Welcome home and well done."

I say this with the deepest feeling of sincerity born of my personal knowledge of the magnificent contribution that each one of you has made in this war. The proud record achieved by the regiment is the result of each individual's consistent co-operation one with another so that the unit served always as a perfect team, each member performing his responsibilities with loyalty, steadfastness and heroism at all times.

I am sure that you will carry into civilian life the same outstanding qualities which distinguished you in time of war.

Old comrades, may you long live and enjoy to the utmost the peace which each of you has given so much to attain.

Memories

Remembrances of Petawawa Camp, September 1st to September 15th, 1940, Second Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment. Lt.-Col. B. C. Donnan, E.D., commanding.

At chilly morning prompt at five
The King Bee strode through sleeping hive,
Summoning forth his 2 i/c
Says, "Now listen, you, to me."

Let there be no footprints in the sand,
And yes, by gosh, you'll fire the band;
Oh yes, and sack the R.S.M.,
A cigarette butt, by gad, mayhem.

He strides out to the stores,
And summoned out the staff by roars;
Through cook house, mess tent, he looks,
Puts fear of God in souls of cooks.

He pauses by a large marquee,
Out steps invaluable Sergeant B———
Hands the C.O. his morning draught,
And through the lines speeds word, He's laughed!

From 600 husky chests comes sighs,
The N.C.O.'s roars reach the skies,
The Colonel's HAD his morning ramp.
And sunshine's flooded o'er the camp,

Many Firsts Claimed By the H. & P. E. Regiment

The Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment on October 1st., 1945, marks its 25th. anniversary, though behind it lies a military tradition dating back to 1800. It is fitting that recognition should be given at this time.

This famous regiment, now known from coast to coast, as a result of its great achievements in Sicily, Italy and on the Western Front, is the oldest rural regiment in Canada, and claims many "firsts" among its records. It is also distinguished by the fact that it is the Senior Infantry (Rifle) Battalion in the First Brigade in the First Canadian Division. The regiment was one of the first non-permanent units to be called for active service in the present conflict, and went overseas in December, 1939, as it did in 1914, as part of the First Canadian Division.

Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment is also distinguished by the fact that in this war it provided two generals to the Canadian Army Overseas. Its commanding officer in 1940, Lieut.-Col. H. L. W. Salmon, M.C., was named major-general to command the 1st. Canadian Division. He was killed in a plane crash in England in April, 1943. Brigadier Howard D. Graham, D.S.O., of Trenton (now Deputy Chief of Staff, N.D.H., Ottawa) who succeeded him as C.O., and who went overseas as second-in-command, was named commanding officer and later promoted to the rank of brigadier, commanding the 1st. Canadian Infantry Brigade.

This famous Eastern Ontario unit is further distinguished by the fact that Major, the Hon. Allistair Buchan, son of the late Governor-General of Canada (John Buchan), and Lady Tweedsmuir, was second-in-command of the regiment for some time while in action and for a time commanding officer (at the time Lt.-Col. Kennedy was missing.) He is now Lord Tweedsmuir.

The Bay of Quinte unit also claims more "firsts." It was one of the first Canadian units to proceed to France in May, 1940, just before that country collapsed. Major-General Salmon was then in command, having taken over from Lt.-Col. Sherman Young, E.D., Picton, who recruited the unit here and accompanied it overseas, and since invalided home, as a result of effects of service in the Great War.

Shot Down Plane.

On its return to England from France, the unit was attacked by a Nazi plane and machine gunners from this unit brought it down, the first such bag of any Canadian unit, a British paper stated. This visit to France resulted in one of the members of the regiment being awarded the British Empire Medal in the King's birthday honor list. Warrant Officer Arthur Storms of Picton, was the last Canadian to leave France at that time, having volunteered to remain behind with a British unit to demolish supplies that could not be evacuated.

August, 1943, word was received by his wife in Trenton, that Lieut.-Col. Bruce Sutcliffe had been killed in action in Sicily. He succeeded Brigadier Graham as commanding officer of the regiment.

Though recruited chiefly from the farms of the Bay of Quinte district, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment spent three and one-half years in Britain, training faithfully and efficiently and showing a remarkable aptitude for military knowledge and life, and when they went into action, they were regarded as one of Canada's crack regiments of the line, being twice congratulated by 8th. Army commanders.

Oldest Rural Regiment.

This is a United Empire Loyalist district, and many members of the regiment are descendants of those pioneers who remained loyal to the British Crown. As its claim to being the oldest rural unit in Canada, it points to nominal rolls which are preserved here and which date back to 1800, when under Governor Simcoe, the militia began training in what is now Picton, which was named after the famous British General, Sir Thomas Picton, who was with the Duke of Wellington at the Battle of Waterloo.

The War of 1812-14 gave the local militia the first taste of active war experience and records reveal that some of the descendants of members at that time are again serving King and Country today.

With the Canadians in Holland—More than 20,000 Germans have been rounded up by the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment when, as their last operational commitment they were ordered to concentrate enemy troops in the vicinity of the great naval fortress of Ijmuiden on Holland's North Sea coast.

The concentration and disarmament of these Germans was done jointly by the Hastings and the Royal Canadian Regiment, both 1st. Division formations. The former unit collected the enemy while the latter operated the "disassembly" line into which the Germans fed their weapons, binoculars, compasses, transport and loot.

Guarding the Germans was another Hastings and Prince Edward responsibility. Then, when the first 20,000 were evacuated to Germany, their set-up became a transit camp through which poured many more thousands.

Job Done by Mid-June.

It was well on into mid-June before the regiment's job was done. Then volunteers for Pacific service, totalling 150 other ranks and eight officers, left for Canada and others who volunteered or were detailed for the occupational force were transferred.

When the H.P.E. were ordered to exploit the Ijessel River bridgehead and make for Apeldoorn, Major Cliff Broad, Madoc and Belleville, Ont., led his company in a dash which covered the five miles between Teuge and the Apeldoorn canal in an hour.

Teuge earlier had been taken by Major Jim Fraser's company after a tough fight during which eleven 88mm. guns, two heavy anti-aircraft guns and three tanks in perfect running order were over-run.

MAJOR W. A. DAVERN of Wellington, Acting Commanding Officer of the 2nd Bn. Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment (R.F.), which contributed

So, hoping to reach a still intact bridge over the canal just north of Apeldoorn, Broad's company sped forward. They were within 30 yards of the crossing when the bridge went up. There was nothing for it but to consolidate on the east bank, where Fraser's men later joined them.

Two Major Encounters Near Apeldoorn.

When Apeldoorn fell later to the R.C.R., the Hastings thrust forward to the highway joining Apeldoorn and Amersfoort.

They had two major encounters after using artillery fire directed by Major Ross Savitz, Toronto, to help break up stiff resistance to their advance through woods just west of Apeldoorn.

Broad's company bumped the trouble first. Another company under Major Sandy Moffat, of Montreal, joined them in an attack supported by tanks and flame-throwers.

There had been a ticklish moment when the companies were dispersed by enemy fire, but C.M.S. Jim Stapley, Holloway, Ont., went around and pulled them together again. He was later wounded in both legs.

Under the eyes of snipers, Cpl. Ted Crowe, Peterboro, Ont., pulled wounded men from within 75 feet of the German position.

Ready for Attack When End Came

The regiment was ready for Amersfoort when the brigadier and his brigade major visited the commanding officer, Lt.-Col. Geo. Rennison, of Toronto, to discuss final details of the attack and just as everything was considered ready the trio heard the radio announcement about the cessation of hostilities. The battalion moved into the line anyway, opposite Amersfoort. Germans and Canadians rubbed shoulders on a bridging side.

A messengers came from the German commander asking Col. Rennison if he proposed to bring his men into Amersfoort immediately. The Germans feared for the safety of his troops. Hatred of the Nazis was intense in Amersfoort because of the presence of an infamous concentration camp just outside the town limits.

The Hastings' orders, however, were that troops of the British 49th. (West Riding) Division would occupy that part of Holland, so Col Rennison went forward quickly and firmly he established an interim agreement pending the arrival of the British troops.

Lt. Col. Sutcliffe Killed on Recce Before Battle

By ROSS MUNRO

With Canadians in Sicily, Aug. 6 (Delayed)—Lt.-Col. Bruce Sutcliffe, of Trenton, Ont., was killed by shellfire while making a reconnaissance ahead of the front line July 20, 1943.

The reconnaissance he was on was aimed at completing final plans for the subsequently successful attack by the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment up the 2,500-foot cliff at Assoro, which Canadians captured.

On the afternoon of July 20, Col. Sutcliffe and a brigadier with a small party of officers went forward over a valley leading to the Assoro peak, then strongly held by Germans.

Col. Sutcliffe wanted to look over the ground personally before leading his Hastings and Prince Edward Battalion into a surprise attack that night. In addition there were some German 88-millimetre guns which had been firing on the battalion area and he wanted to spot them to bring the Canadian artillery to bear on them.

The party was in an orange orchard about a mile from Assora when Col. Sutcliffe told the brigadier he was going a few hundred yards to the right to get a better view and perhaps spot the German guns.

He had hardly left the party when the Germans shelled the area where he had gone. Col. Sutcliffe was killed instantly by an 88-m.m. shell which burst near him.

The plan which he had prepared was carried through with brilliant success that night when his regiment clawed its way up the precipice and surprised and took Assoro town.

Col. Sutcliffe, aged 38, was one of the youngest officers commanding an infantry regiment in the Canadian Army. He went overseas with the Canadian 1st Division in December, 1939.

He was born in Toronto, son of Mr. J. A. and Mrs. Sutcliffe and had lived in Trenton for a number of years.

Mrs. Sutcliffe survives with three small children, and the Colonel's parents.

"They Looked Down On Ortona"

By RALPH ALLEN
Globe and Mail War Correspondent

Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment looked down on Ortona today as the weather forced a momentary truce over all but the northern tip of the Moro Valley.

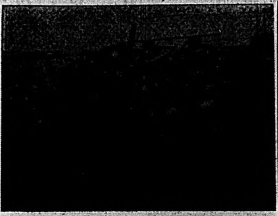
With practically all aircraft immobilized by soft runways and the opposing forces of armor temporarily out of contact, activity on the 8th Army front during the last 24 hours was confined to artillery exchanges and a brisk infantry skirmish during which troops fro mthe Dominion seized a ridge midway between San Leonardo and the Adriatic.

Dominate Lateral Road.

The new position of the Hasty Pees dominates the last important coastal town held by the Germans this side of Pescara. With troops from a Maritimes unit on their left commanding the high ground overlooking Orsogna, the whole of the short lateral road between Guardiagrele and Ortona, although still within his lines, is now operationally "out of bounds" to the enemy.

Mortar and gunfire all along the front continued to underline the Moro Valley's potentialities as a natural battlefield. Besides drawin garmor to its rolling fields by the powerful magnetism of military geography, the Adriatic corridor has become a concentration area for the largest number of German infantrymen, gunners and engineers thrown together in a comparable space since Salerno.

The Adriatic bounds the valley on the east. Fifteen miles inland the Maiella Mountains, more than 8,000 feet high, form a western boundary that is almost impossible for infantry to negotiate as the sea itself. Virtually every soldier the Germans have been able to spare from the battered divisions facing the 5th Army on the other coast has been moved into the area between.



This is what the originals of the First Battalion H. and P. E. Regiment looked like away back in the days of September, 1939. The swanky little dress had not as yet been issued and the boys were togged out in the uniforms similar to those worn by their gallant dads back in 1914-18.

WELCOME HOME

To the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment

A heartfelt welcome we give to you
Who answered your country's call,
Who stood on guard in war's dread hour
Lest the flag of freedom fall;
A welcome true that is your due—
Even the stones on the busy street
Re-echo the sound as they respond
To the rhythm of marching feet.

And the autumn wind takes up the strain
And wafts a welcome home,
And the leaves on the trees whisper in the breeze
A welcome to those that come;
And a grateful land gives a welcoming hand
To you who laid aside
The joys of youth, that the world in truth
Might in calm and peace abide.

And deep in the hearts of your loved and dear
Throbs a welcome warm and true,
And the stars that glow in their glad eyes show
A wordless welcome too;

But oh! amid the song and cheer
And joy on every side,
We think of those who gave their life
In the battle's crimson tide.
But we need not grieve for not like us
Will they grow weak and old,
Their youth they keep, while among the great
Their names are e'er enrolled.

And welcoming all who served so well
On land and air and sea,
Our songs of praise to Him we raise
Who gave us the victory.

Early History of Regt.

By MAJ. GORDON WALMSLEY

The Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, as it is presently constituted is a merger of two old Militia Regiments, namely the 49th. Regiment, Hastings Rifles, and the 16th. Regiment, the Militia Regiment of Prince Edward County. The association of these two old County Regiments took place immediately after the first World War, and was brought into being in 1920.

In order to give effective proportionate representation to the two Counties, the Headquarters was established at Trenton, with one company from Madoc, Trenton, Picton and Stirling. Later, when a Headquarters Company was added to a Regimental establishment the present establishment was finally brought into being as follows:

Headquarters Company, Trenton.
"A" Company, Trenton.
"B" Company, Madoc.
"C" Company, Picton.
"D" Company, Picton (Wellington.)

It should be added that in the interval since 1920 there has been some shifting of Company areas within the two Counties, but during most of the period three companies were recruited in Hastings and two in Prince Edward. As an instance of this, "D" Company was first located in Stirling, later in Belleville and finally in Wellington. As between "C" and "D" Companies there was more or less of a general understanding that the "C" Company would be the Picton Company, while "D" Company would comprise the area round about. There has been no hard and fast rule about this latter division, but, in the main it has been adhered to.

The present Regiment perpetuates the Battle Honors of three regimental Units of the First Great War, namely the 39th., 80th. and 254th. Battalions. In addition to perpetuating the three Battalions mentioned above, the two Counties had a prominent part in the formation of the following units in the First Great War:

The 2nd. Battalion.
The 21st. Battalion.
The formation of the 39th. Bn.
Contribution to the 59th. Bn.
The formation of the 80th. Bn.
The formation of the 155th. Bn.
Contribution to the 1st. Forestry Bn.
The formation of the 235th. Bn.
The formation of the 254th. Bn.

Since the organiaztion in 1920 until the outbreak of the present war, the energy and enthusiasm of all ranks was such as to bring it to the forefront of all units in this district, and to have it considered the outstanding rural Regiment. Such being the case, it was a foregone conclusion that on the outbreak of the present war, the Regiment would be the first one in the district to be called up. Such was the case, and the record and deeds of the Unit throughout the whole war have justified the selection.

While the acts of heroism and devotion to duty of all members of the Regiment during the present war are known throughout the length and breadth of our country, and a great many members of the Regiment and from outside the Regimental area, yet there is a feeling that in the main the Regiment is local in its character, and represents the spirit and traditions of our two Counties.

Also space does not permit the publication of the historical background of the 49th. Rifles, the Hastings Regiment in this issue, but briefly the traditions of the Hastings Unit are analagous in character to the 16th. Regiment, and the County Militia that preceded it.

Early History of the Prince Edward Militia.

The Constitutional Act of 1791 provided for the establishment of Militia Regiments in each District and Prince Edward was no exception when it came to the formation of a Battalion. They assembled annually, usually only for one day and it is believed that the first camping grounds were at Green or Grassy Point in the Township of Sophiasburg.

The Regiment was formally organized in 1880 under the command of Colonel Archibald Macdonnell. It consisted of about eight companies one of which was a troop of cavalry. Prince Edward was very proud of her troop of calvary, and the County Regiments round about were equally jealous as their establishment did not call for one.

In one of the main display cases in the Archives at Ottawa, there is prominently displayed the pay roll of the Prince Edward Regiment in the War of 1812. This list includes a number of names similar to the names of many of the soldiers now serving with the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, indicating that the grandchildren and great grandchildren are still following the traditions of their forebears.

It is not believed that the unit took part in any major engagement of that campaign, but their spirit and devotion to the arduous and tedious routine of garrison duty at Kingston was no less meritorius.

Again in 1837, detachments from the Regiment were sent to Toronto and other places, causing favorable comment wherever duty called. In fact, one of the Companies was absorbed into the Toronto Regiment and this unit later became known as "The Queen's Own."

During the succeeding year the Regiment continued to carry on, sometimes with enthusiasm, sometimes without it until February 6th., 1863, when authority was issued for the reorganization of the Unit under the name of the 16th. Battalion of Militia, with Headquarters at Picton and companies at Picton, Milford, Wellington and Consecon.

A large number of the unit volunteered for active service during the Fenian Raid in 1866, and the Unit journeyed to Kingston. The records of the Unit during the exciting period are no less honorable, because of the excited comings and goings here and there occasioned by the absence of reliable intelligence as to the whereabouts of the enemy. There was one time when it was rumored that the enemy were at Glen Island which occasioned an overseas voyage of about five miles, only to end in much disappointment, when it was discovered to be a false rumor. The welcome that was extended at that times by the County and Town Councils was no less enthusiastic by reason of that fact.

The Regiment continued to be known as the 16th. until its reorganization in 1920, but it was found that the limited population of the County did not warrant a complete unit in peace time, and the merger of the two county units followed.

Regiment Adds Lustre To Honors in Courageous Feats

On the starlit night of September 2-3, 1943, the 8th. Army launched the invasion of the mainland of Europe, striking across the Messina Straits to land two divisions on the toe of Italy. Both were battle-tested veterans of the Sicilian campaign, 1st. Canadian and 5th. British.

Included was the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, which had already won fame in Sicily, and destined to add to its laurels in Italy.

Only 16 days earlier, Messina had fallen, ending the battle of Sicily. The Allies landed with ease on the broad beaches between Reggio and San Giovanni. Italian troops surrendered on the beaches.

As they withdrew, the Germans carried out demolitions of bridges and roads every few miles. The 8th. Army advance from the bridgehead was slow and laborious. The Canadians pressed right up the spine of Calabria and the British division moved along the west coast road.

Armistice Signed

The Italian armistice had been signed on the day of the landing and it was announced September 8th., when the Canadians were deep in the mountains. The 5th. Army landed at Salerno Bay the next morning against heavy opposition.

To relieve the pressure on the Salerno bridgehead, the Canadians sped north to Potenza, covering 400 miles from Reggio in two weeks, an amazing feat for a whole division over shattered roads.

At Potenza the Canadians hit their first real German opposition in Italy and fought a battle group of crack German paratroops before capturing the city. Other British troops landed at Taranto and the Allied line across southern Italy took shape.

The Canadians then pushed on to Foggia without opposition and on October 1st. went up into the hills again towards Motta where there was fierce fighting for that town. Heavy rain fell and mud added to the trials of the campaign.

For twelve days the Canadian division battled its way through rugged country from Motta to Campobasso and from there the Canadians crossed the Biferno river in the heaviest fighting up to then.

In mid-November the Canadians went into rest at Campobasso renamed "Canada Town." Brig. Chris. Vokes was made commander of the division.

Other divisions of the 8th. Army had crossed the Sangro and now were on the south bank of the Moro river. Suddenly and secretly the Canadians were switched from the central mountain area to the Adriatic coast to lead the Moro river attack.

On December 8th., behind a gigantic artillery barrage, the division attacked and the grimmest fighting it had seen in the Mediterranean theatre followed. The Canadians drove the German 90th Light Division out of the line and then tackled the 1st. Parachute Division, one of the best in the German army.

Over the rolling fields, blasted by thousands of rounds of shellfire, the Canadians fought thru' the vineyards and the orchards of the Moro valley, battled their way up the coast and the main inland road to Ortona itself.

Ortona Captured.

For eight days they fought from house to house through the shattered streets of Ortona against Germans who resisted to the death. Finally Ortona was captured on December 28th. It is the 1st. Division's most shining battle honor. But the division's losses were heavier there than any time since the landing in Sicily, July 10th. Official figures show casualties from September 3rd. to January 8th., covering the Moro and Ortona battle, totalled 3,869—879 killed, 2,841 wounded, 149 missing—compared with 3,453 for the whole period from July 10th. to November 23rd.

In November a large Canadian contingent reached Italy from Britain and an all-Canadian corps under command of Lt.-Gen. H. D. G. Crerar, was formed as part of the 8th. Army. In late January it moved into the Adriatic coast line as a corps where its activity was limited to patrol until spring.

With the 5th. Army north of Naples, Canadian special service troops fought in the mountains and later in the Netuno bridgehead with a composite Canadian and American force.

That is the factual record as given by the Canadian Press, and reprinted by special permission. Now for some of the highlights of these actions, and the part played by Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment.

The Landing.

The landing was made on a sandy half-circle beach just north of Reggio, and under cover of an enormous barrage fired by 400 guns, seven miles away, on the Sicilian shore that smashed the target for two hours steady. The First Division, including the Hasty P.'s landed the first day, ahead of schedule, owing to lack of opposition by the enemy. Reggio fell quickly.

In a 400-mile, two week advance from Reggio to Potenza in Southern Italy, the Canadians went through the heart of the Calabrian Mounts, then out to the Gulf of Taranto and north into the mountains, again overcoming scores of German demolitions. The 1st. Infantry Brigade took Gambarie, 15 miles from Reggio.

Roads and bridges were blown up and many times the Hasty P's. and other units had to move over mule trails off the road.

Every few days the brigades alternated in leading the advance, which involved little fighting but required a lot of physical stamina. Twisting through the mountains and then swinging over to the east coast, took the Canadians farther than any other formation in Italy.

Cittanova, Locil, Catanzara and Cotrone were other points on the Asiatic coast where the Canadians saw action.

Patenza, important to the Germans as a road and rail junction, fell after a 12-hour siege. It was their first clash with the German defenders of the Italian toe who had eluded them since the Reggio landing. Here, enemy paratroopers put up strong resistance.

Across the Biferno.

November 7 found the Canadians fighting their way across the Biferno valley, driving the Germans from solid defensive positions on its heights. The fight for the river line on which the enemy was dug in, lasted for a week. They fought ahead, waded the river and battled up the steep slopes to high ground on the far side.

Rainy weather hampered their march all the way from the Foggia plain.

The march toward the river followed immediately on their capture of Campobasso, with the Hasty P.'s adding to their battle honors there.

A company of the Hasty P.'s occupied Montagano, astride a 2,500-foot hill, and patrolled beyond.

H.P.E.R. Occupy Town

Men of the H.P.E.R. entered San Stefano after a sudden barrage was loosed on that valley town. The weight and suddenness of the attack was too much for the Germans, who left, abandoning half-finished breakfasts and cots that were still warm. About an hour after San Stefano's occupation, the Germans dropped nearly 300 mortar bombs.

The H.P.E.R. occupied the town of Molise.

The backbone of the German defence at Biferno was shattered by then.

The Biferno crossing ended the second phase of the 1st. Division's campaign in Italy. The phase had begun when the Canadians struck the outer line of German defences at Motta and entered the Abruzze hills.

October 2 found the H.P.E.R. making a back-breaking cross-country march to Monte Miano, dominating the high San Marco ridge.

Tough Going.

The going was tough. Infantrymen had to climb greasy hills with big blobs of mud clinging to their boots and crawl through soaked undergrowth. Tanks came to the rescue of some transports bogged down in soft fields. Mule trains driven by North African Arabs helped with the supply problem as the advence went ahead a mile at a time. The terrain favored the enemy, always hiding over the next muddy ridge, shelling, mortaring soaking roads, and firing his machine guns from clumps of bushes or well-hidden trenches.

Campobasso.

The Hasty P.'s entered Campobasso with the R.C.R.'s and the 48th., with little opposition.

Campobasso was renamed 'Canada Town' by the Canadians. Its streets were renamed and converted generally into a rest centre. The movie houses were the Savoy and the Capitol.

Across the Moro to Ortona

First across the Moro river was the distinction of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment in December.

Canadian troops overcame the most stubborn resistance of their Mediterranean campaign winning the battle for the Moro river valley which ended December 28 when the enemy withdrew from the coastal town of Ortona.

For three weeks they hurled the full weight of their man and tank power against a foe who was under orders to fight to the last bullet. They mauled one German division so viciously it had to be replaced and they hammered a second until it withdrew.

The battle was fought over rich farm land, green and rolling, dotted with olive groves and flanked by the pale sea on one side and the high white Apennines on the other. Before the battle was over the meadows were cut and torn and the stone farmhouses were shattered.

H.P.E.R. in Action.

The Canadians entered the picturesque battle area December 6, when spearheaded by H.P.E.R. who made an attack and established a bridgehead across the Moro river.

German strength on the coastal road below Ortona was too great for the main attack to go in there, but when one Hastings company succeeded in gaining a foothold across the river the rest of the battalion was brought in. This paved the way for the other troops, and the Hasty P.'s added to their fame.

Faced by a mass of German men and machine-guns, these troops held the coastal flank until the Ortona assault when the Seaforths took their place. They beat off many counter attacks.

The drive for the major bridgehead around San Leonardo began December 9, preceded by a long barrage in which Canadian field guns alone fired more than 23,000 shells. The valley remained clouded in smoke when Ontario units stormed the upper side of the Moro.

This battle was particularly hard-fought. Ortona was finally cleared, house by house. It was here the Hasty P.'s spent Christmas "in the line," celebrating on New Year's Day instead. (See special article.)

Cold, rainy weather settled down over the front then, and operations became limited to patrols.

On a daring night raid on the village of Berrati, two miles from Ortona, Canadian troops captured the/C.O. of the Nazi unit, his adjutant, four other officers and 140 men. H.P.E.R. spear-headed this attack, an official report stated. The Canucks also forced the Nazis from Ravenna.

January, 1944, found the Canadians at Ortona ready for the drive into the storied valley of the Po River.

The Canadians moved out of the Adriatic sector late in March to rest and retrain in Central Italy. By May they were secretly switched over near the west coast in the Cassino area. Here, the H.P.E.R. helped break through the Gustav Line and the Hitler Line. They punched ahead to the line after brisk fighting at Pignataro and Santa Angelo in the Liri Valley.

The 1st. Division achieved a mighty victory May 23 by breaking through the Hitler Line.

In a lightning move, the Canadians were sent north of Ancona, 110 miles east of Florence, and just south of the Metaura River where the campaign to pierce the Gothic Line began with the crossing of the Metauro August 26. Within four days, the Canadians faced the Foglia, the Gothic's spine. Part of the line's defences were smashed. The Marano River was crossed, followed by fierce fighting at San Martino, San Lorenzo and the Rimini airport. These taken, brilliant tactics obtained positions around San Fortunato, "the last ridge of all."

It was here that Capt. Wm. Graydon of Picton, was awarded the Military Cross for gallantry, being credited with the leadership which won the dominating feature of San Maria, ten miles south of Rimini.

General Sir Oliver Leese of the 8th. Army, sent a message of congratulations to the H.P.E.R. on their hard fighting at San Maria Ridge and at Fortunato.

Rimini itself fell September 21 and the Canadian Corps hit the Lombardy plains country the day the autumn rains came.

Regiment Praised.

Pushing toward the Po delta, the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment crossed the Naviglio canal. The bridgehead was thrown across this canal December 12, and the next day the Germans counter attacked 13 times in nine hours. Gen. Sir Richard McCreery, 8th. Army Commander, congratulated the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment and the Carleton and York Regiment of St. Stephen, N.B., for stopping the enemy there.

The Corps burst out in a mighty effort December 21 and in subsequent intense battles the Germans cracked under terrific pressure, withdrawing to the Senio river.

The Commanders.

The Corps fought under three commanders during the year — Lt.-Gen. Crerar who later became a full General commanding the 1st. Canadian Army in Europe; Lt.-Gen. Burns of Westmount, Que., and Lt.-Gen. Foulkes of London. Maj.-Gen. Foster, whose wife lived in Picton from 1939-41, succeeded Vokes as commander.

"The Brightest Star"

By ANGUS MOWAT

(Published with Special Permission of the Auther)

"Soldier!"

"What?"

"Come over here!"

"Sir."

"Reinforcement?"

"Yes—Sir."

"Come over here—close—I want to look at you! H'm'm—boots—anklets—h'm'm—passable—h'm'm—but what's that youve got stuck in your cap?"

"Why, it's my cap badge."

"Sir—to you!"

"Oh,it s your cap badge, is it? Well listen, soldier, this is where you start getting a new grip on life. Soldier, that isn't your badge, that's our badge! Get it? And you—you're wearing it dirty; Listen, soldier, when you put up that badge you put up something that belongs to all of us, to those that went before us and those that will come after, to the living and the dead—and those who are about to die. You'll wear it soldier—yes— and you'll be one of us—but you'll wear it clean! Get it? Clean! Come back here in fifteen minutes and I'll tell you what all those little things on your badge mean to you—to a Hasty P. And if it isn't shining like the brightest star, God help you!

"All right, move!"

"Sir."

There are those of the Hasty P living today who will remember the words, or the like of them, and the circumstances under which they were spoken; and they will recall the R.S.M.s little history lecture that used to follow, when "the brightest star" was brought back for his inspection. It is not, of course, that the badge itself matters so much. The badge, clean or dirty, is, after all, no more than a small bit of sheet brass, shaped, and stamped with certain figures and costing about nine cents. And it is, moreover, dingy with a miserable kind of dull lacquer when you draw it out of stores. But it is what the badge stands for that does count and that makes it worthy of all the polishing—and the significance—bestowed upon it. Because it is a symbal. It is the symbol that signifies a man's own rightful place in the regiment, that makes him one with the past and the present of his regiment and that projects his spirit into the future of its life when others, following in his footsteps, will wear it in their pride too. And above all, in this small, close community of men it is the symbol of the one reward that war, any war, can offer to the fighting man—the great comradeship of his peers.

Testing of the Regiment.

The testing of our regiment was, in the very truest sense of the word, the testing of this symbol, of this "brightest star". It was the final proof of labor and fatigue, the last demand of all those months and months of waiting, watching, matching, learning, which went on and on till the very soul grew sick of it all and only the spirit of the regiment itself was strong enough to hold men's faith. The day came when things that had been long built upon, patriotism, adventure, romance, duty, when these things became just words, meaningless and fit subject only for grim jesting under trial. In that day they held nothing for a man. But the spirit of the regiment, the intangible essence that the bright cap badge stands for, that still meant something. That still was strong enough to hold men's faith in the teeth of any task that might beset them.

The Moro River Epic.

"On the night of 5 December, '43, a crossing of the Moro River was ordered. There was little reconnaissance and even less support for this task. The Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment had been in position less than three hours, had not seen the country by daylight, and were not able to form any reasonable assessment of the ground over which they were to attack. The attack was put in on the right of the brigade position. With only 3-inch mortar support one company of this regiment successfully crossed the river valley and got into the F.D.L. of the enemy on the other side. They were under intense fire from the flanks and from the front, and at the same time their W/T failed, making it impossible to give them even mortar support. This company maintained its hopeless position until 0100 hours and then withdrew on orders, having suffered heavily but also having gained a detailed picture of the Moro and its defences which later enabled the regiment to make the crossing in force and establish a bridgehead which the enemy was not able to shake."

One brief, cold paragraph like that hidden in a ton of paper. A mere "diversionary" action, a mere incident in the war. There was no big brass there. There were no correspondents, there was not even a mention in your morning paper, and the whole thing is forgotten now by all save a handful of survivors. But it is worth thinking about nevertheless. Shut your eyes and try—just concentrate and try—to get the feeling of that December mud seeping through your clothes, crawling up under your shirt, crawling even into your very mouth as you lie there waiting for the word to go. Try listening for those terrifying moments of stillness, worse almost than any noise, that come between the bursts of m.g. fire, or the crump of 88's and moaning minnies. Try, if you can, to bring into your mind the smell of it, the rotten mud, your own wet, filthy clothing, and burnt cordite, and a faint, sweet whiff of rifle oil as you wipe the back of your hand across your eyes.

You can't get it? No—no man can who wasn't there. Not fully. But it is a dullard indeed who cannot, if he will, get enough of it to know that of his own individual strength no man could go through with it. But they did go through with it, the Hasties, not only at the Moro but time and time again and in many places. They went through it because of the strength that came to them from that one thing, the spirit of the regiment, symbolized in the "brightest star," which is no more than the will and spirit of all the individual members moulded and trained and bound into the one single will.

"That isn't YOUR badge," he said, "that is OUR badge."

So it went on like that from the moment they touched down on Roger Amber Beach, and when they went through Grammichele, and up the Assoro cliffs, and on to Regalbuto, and the Moro, and into the hell's cauldron of the Rimone, and on and on through a hundred fights to Apeldoorn. And there were many men who died along that road, and many more who were wounded and went away, and their places were taken by others who came, not only from the sister counties of Hastings and Prince Edward, but from towns and villages and farms strung out across the Dominion from Trail to Antigonish. And the spirit of the regiment took these men too and made them with itself, made them into Hasties, utterly loyal, and even as the oldest veteran, cherishers of "the brightest star."

But they are home now—most of those who will come home—and what shall we say to them? Shall we say, half believing it perhaps, "Their name liveth forever more?" Or shall we not be more fully honest and speak to them as a soldier speaks to a comrade, bluntly, and say, "No, that isn't true. It doesn't last. It will all be forgotten by the great majority, and ten years from now you won't be any hero, you'll only be another vet. And people, except your comrades, will start walking away from you if they think you look as if you were going to begin talking about what happened to Able Company on the Rimone."

That at least will be honest and realistic. And when we have said that we can add, "It really doesn't matter, not to you, because the spirit of our regiment is in you and you are part of it and you will pass it on to your own sons so that it will live for many years. And though all the world beside may fail in its remembering, the regiment does not forget."

How could it forget, ever, this regiment which bred the kind of man who would write before he died,

"These men of mine must never know
How much afraid I really am.
Help me to lead them in the fight
So they will say, 'He was a man'."

Captain Fred Lazier, Hasty Pees Called "Bravest Man I Have Ever Met" by Sergeant of Company

CAPT. FRED LAZIER

In the flaming vortex of a swirling street battle fought out with machine guns, bazookas, rifles and grenades against the thunderous background of artillery, Canadian stretcher bearers shook hands with a German medical officer of a Nazi paratroop outfit and wished him well.

In the hail of bullets and shell and mortar fragments that roared across the narrow streets of the village of St. Maria, Italy, Captain Fred Lazier, Charlotte Street, Belleville, afterwards called "the bravest man I have ever met" by his sergeant Gordon Clark, Fort William, and his gallant men of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment fought it out with the enemy.

His company claims the distinction of being the first unit to penetrate the Hitler line.

As the advance platoon reached the outskirts of the town two Germans on patrol, appeared. The Canucks shouted to them to surrender but they ducked and sought shelter. The Canadians took shelter in a large house and company headquarters were established in an adjacent dug-out.

Laid Siege To Company.

The Germans, under the protection of darkness returned in considerable strength and laid siege to the little band of Canucks. They yelled "English soldiers, surrender". The Hasty Pips replied with a hail of lead. Sgt. Y. Gordon, of Prince Edward County ran headlong into a Nazi, when he came around a house corner. The Nazi hurled a hand grenade. It was a near miss.

The building was riddled with bazooka fire. In the adjoining house armor piercing shells crashed through doorways, ricocheted on walls. The Germans fell back. Expecting tank support, the Canucks advanced in pursuit and were met with a murderous fire. Both sides suffered heavily. Canadians and Germans worked together attending the wounded. They stood casually at each stretcher looking at each other while a deadly fire swept them.

Short Of Dressings.

The victims were so numerous the Canadians found themselves short of shell dressings. The German medical officer offered aid and made several trips to the Canadian position. Owing to the number of fractured bones he offered to move the cases to his own field dressing station to set splints, suggesting the Canadian ambulances should then pick them up and return to their own lines. The Canadians were outspoken in their admiration of this Nazi doctor who forgot hates in the maelstrom of suffering.

That evening flanking companies from the regiment drove the Nazis from their positions in the village.

How They Found the Indian

Following is the delightful piece of humor anent the research for "Chief Petawawa-Much" mascot of the 1st Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment among the naval dockyards in Halifax. The funny situations mentioned are actual facts, as explained in a letter to Lt.-Col. B. C. Donnan, then officer commanding the 2nd Battalion, by Lt.-Col. C. S. Craig, commanding the Halifax Fortress. The letter follows:

"Department of National Defence
H.Q.
Halifax Fortress
27, April 1945

"Lt.-Col. B. C. Donnan
"Barrister, ec.
"County Crown Attorney
"And Clerk of the Peace
"Belleville, Ont.

"Dear Colonel:

"Reference your letter of April 9, 1945.

"You will remember writing to me regarding the recovery of the Indian mascot for the H. & P.E. Rgt., after it became involved in the accident to the corvette, which was bringing it to Halifax.

"On receipt of your letter, I made inquiries from the dockyard regarding the disposal of stores removed from the corvette, and was informed that they had been placed on one of the naval docks in Halifax. I informed the Officer in charge of the dockyard of your wish to get the mascot across to the Regiment as soon as possible, and was given permission to take it from among the stores on the dock, if I could locate him. The assistance of the operator of one of the light cranes was given to me to locate the mascot. I informed him that I was was looking for an Indian who was among the stores removed from the corvette. He immediately stated there was no Indian there, and he was sure there was no Indian there, as he would have smelled him long ago, as the stores had been there fore some time. I started to explain that this Indian would not smell, but was informed bluntly that anybody would by this time. On explaining that he was very much like an old-fashioned cigar store Indian, and probably be in a bale or a box of the approximate size of a coffin, he set to work and soon discovered the mascot.

"The Captain of one of the armed merchantmen, which had been in and out of Halifax a number of times, was approached by me and asked if he would take an Indian oved for me and despatch it when he arrived in the Old Caunty to the H. & P.E. Regt., as they were very anxious to have him as a mascot. His reception of the request was rather chilly, and he informed me that although we had been quite friendly, and in spite of the fact that I had done a number of things for him since he had been coming to Halifax, that it was asking rather a lot to expect that he would let any damn man stowaway on his ship, white man or Indian.

"To save further explanation I pointed out that it was a cigar store Indian. He replied that he did not give a damn where the fellow had worked, but he still was not going to stowaway on his ship. An explanation had to be made of the whole thing with emphasis on the fact that cigar store Indians were made of wood. He was then only too willing to assist in the transportation of the mascot to England. You know the rest of the story.

"Yours,
"(Signed) C. S. Craig."

ONE SHOT, 31 STARLINGS

Hamilton, Sept. 29 —(CP)— People have talked for a long time about getting two birds with one stone, but Thursday Allan Borer of nearby Clappison's Corners brought down 31 birds with a single blast of his shotgun. He let fly at a flock of starlings taking off from a stubble field.

ADVOCATES SAFETY COURSE

Toronto, Sept. 29 (CP)—Establishment in Ontario High Schools of safe driving courses for senior students was suggested yesterday by Prof. A. E. Neyhart, Administration head of the institute of Public Safety of Pennsylvania State College. He said similar training in the United States had reduced accident rates 50 per cent.

LUCKY "GUINEA PIGS"

Manchester, Eng. (CP)— Girls on the staff of the British Cotton Industry Research Association wear new clothes every week to the amazement of coupon-starved friends. They are "guinea pigs" for the association's scientists who ask them to wear blouses, skirts and underclothing of varying colors, qualities and designs in their search for the "perfect material".

GENERAL PATTON IS RELIEVED OF COMMAND

MacArthur Asks Full Accounting Of War Production

Pressure Also Mounting For Cabinet Reorganization

Tokyo, Oct. 2 — (CP) — Pressure mounted among Japanese today for top-to-bottom reorganization of their cabinet by the time demobilization is completed in mid-October; and Gen. MacArthur demanded a full accounting of Japan's military production as well as existing stocks of war material.

He asked the Japanese government for full information on the annual production of arms, ordnance, ammunition and automotive equipment from 1941 through August, 1945, plus estimates for the remainder of 1945.

Japanese sources reported a rising sentiment fc elimination from the cabinet of ministers once associated with the beaten, war-making regime, as well as those blamed for failure to anticipate growing food, housing and fuel shortages.

Earlier reports — strictly without confirmation — hinted that Emperor Hirohito might abdicate in a thorough government housecleaning when his task of carrying out the principal surrender terms is finished.

United States Army doctors today reported that former Premier Shigenori Goto, suspected war-criminal, is not faking; he has had a heart attack and consequently his appearance at U. S. 8th Army prison has been delayed.

The Tokyo newspaper Mainichi said today that loud demands for a less tainted, more energetic government may force Premier Prince Higashi-Kuni to shuffle the cabinet even before the end of demobilization, set for about Oct. 15.

Higashi-Kuni had specifically asked the army and navy ministers to stay on the job until they finish the breaking up of the armed forces and the repatriation of servicemen from abroad. Rumors intensified that these two would quit at the earliest opportunity and that others would go out with them or perhaps in advance, Mainichi said.

Other well-informed Japanese sources said Higashi-Kuni himself might resign in the face of increasing criticism of his government's failure to formulate a concrete plan to alleviate shortages of food, housing and fuel before the water.

Tokyo's newspapers, enjoying a new Allied-guaranteed freedom of the press, attacked Japanese government "inefficiency" and "secrecy". They demanded the immediate retirement of "feudalistic and narrow-minded officials" in the Home Ministry who tried to confiscate editions which carried Allied correspondents' interviews with Emperor Hirohito and pictures of the meeting of Gen. MacArthur and the Emperor. The Allied command countermanded the Home Ministry order.

An order from Allied headquarters also demanded immediate confirmation of all copies of the September issue of the monthly English-language magazine, Tokyo Kaizai Ehimpo, for publication of "material inimical to the interest of the occupaton forces".

The material to which Allied headquarters objected was an unsigned article giving the Japanese reaction to the Allied occupation. The order stated that the magazine must henceforth submit to a civil censorship all editorial material written in either English or Japanese.

Allied correspondents in the area north of Tokyo were told by civilians today that the police had threatened them that they would be punished if they talked about Allied pilots shot down in the area prior to the surrender of the Nipponese government. Several Superfortress pilots are known to have been shot down in the area where correspondents were conducting their questioning.

Cease-Fire Order Pact Reached In Indo-China

Kandy, Ceylon, Oct. 2—(Reuters) — Agreement for a cease-fire order in French Indo-China has been reached at a meeting between French authorities and leaders of the Annamese Independence Movement, it was officially announced here today.

The cease-fire order is to come into effect tonight.

The communique said the Saigon Control Commission, representing the Supreme Allied Commander in Southeast Asia, was sent to Saigon Sept. 9 "to control Field Marshal Count Terauchi's headquarters and to ensure the smooth working of the Japanese surrender throughout the Southeast Asia Command."

The Commission also was charged with evacuating Allied prisoners of war and internees and disarming Japanese forces in that part of French Indo-China which falls in the Southeast Asia Command area.

It describes the disorders which began Sept. 25 when four Indian soldiers were wounded in a clash with armed Annamese.

20,557 Claims Of Unemployment Made in September

Ottawa, Oct. 2. (CP)—A total of 20,557 claims for Unemployment Insurance Benefit was received at the offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission throughout Canada in August, almost double the 10,886 claims received during July and more than six times the 3,241 claims registered in August, 1944, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics said yesterday.

Similarly, the number of persons who signed the live unemployment register during the last six working days in August increased sharply over previous months. Persons signing in August numbered 28,770 against 19,224 in the last week of July and 5,408 during the last week of August, 1944.

The Bureau said the sudden rise in recorded unemployment among those covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act "unquestionably results from lay-offs due to the cessation of hostilities in the Pacific".

WAR EXPENDITURE BILL IS PLACED BEFORE COMMONS

Talk on Resolution To Cancel Debts On Farms Incurred By Veterans of First War

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—The Commons today returns to debate of the government's war expenditures and demobilization bill after a day spent discussing—without a decision being reached—whether veterans of the First Great War should be given clear titles to still unpaid debts for farms.

The day-long discussion was finished by Walter Tucker, parliamentary assistant to Veterans Minister Mckenzie, who suggested that the Commons' Committee on veterans affairs go into the whole matter of the veterans' indebtedness.

The debate was started by Robert Fair (SC—Battle River) who urged in a resolution that the government consider granting clear titles to First Great War veterans who have not been able to pay for farms which they purchased under provisions of the Old Soldiers Settlement Act.

The resolution, first to be discussed on the first day set aside exclusively for private members' business since before the war, found support among many of the 20 speakers who participated in the debate.

However, some speakers felt if clear titles were granted to those who still owed money on their farms something ought to be done for those who had toiled hard and paid off their indebtedness.

Still others felt that the sanctity of contracts ought to be observed or the government would be flooded with requests to cancel the indebtedness of other classes of society.

Bulk of First Division Now On Home Soil

Halifax, Oct. 2—(CP)—Crowded troop trains today continued the mammoth task of moving the nearly 18,000 Canadian servicemen and women — majority of them veterans of the famous Canadian 1st Division — who arrived here Saturday and Monday aboard the Nieuw Amsterdam and the Ile de France.

The Ile de France docked late yesterday with 9,754 veterans closely following the 7,744 who reached port on the big Dutch liner two days before. With the arrivals, the great bulk of the 1st Division, which went overseas in December, 1939, was back on home soil again.

Complete units aboard the Ile de France included the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment of Belleville, Trenton and Picton.

As well as the army veterans, the Ile de France brought home more than 1,000 members of the R.C.A.F. and Women's Division, 51 Canadian Nursing Sisters and 67 C.W.A.C.'s.

Prisoners in Belsen Camp Set Upon By Dogs and Killed States Witnesses

By WILLIAM FRYE

Lueneburg, Oct. 2 — (AP) — A 23-year-old Polish Jewess who survived the horrors of the Osweicim concentration camp testified today that Juana Borman, S. S. woman guard, murdered a woman prisoner there and then gloated over the crime.

The witness, Esther Wolgroch, testifying at the trial of the 45 S. S. men and women who operated the Belsen and Osweicim camps, said the Borman woman, whom she called "the she-beastess of Osweicim," set a dog on the prisoner and looked on while the dog killed the woman.

Then, the witness said, Borman called her S. S. superiors and boasted:

"Look — see what I have done; that is my work."

The witness was asked to identify Borman from the array of defendants, and pointed to a pinched little woman with a number placard on her blouse.

"Number six — the she-beast of Osweicim," the witness exclaimed.

Maj. A. S. Munro, one of the defence counsel, asked her if she could be mistaken.

"No," she replied. "I know Borman very well. I would recognize the partner of the dog even at night."

The prosecution yesterday presented in evidence what it said was the plan of the Osweicim camp, where it was charged more than 4,000,000 persons died in the gas chamber.

LEAD VALIANT "FEW" IN ANNIVERSARY FLIGHT

Group Captain Douglas R. Bader, famed legless fighter pilot of the British Royal Air Force, is shown in London, Eng., getting into the cockpit of his Spitfire plane to lead the flight of survivors of the R.A.F. pilots who fought and won the Battle of Britain on the fifth anniversary of that historic battle. Only 16 of the pilots are left, of whom Winston Churchill once said: "Never have so many owed so much to so few."

FLOOD THREAT MENACES ONTARIO AFTER LONG RAINS

Highways Are Blocked at Several Points and Crops Rotting in Fields

Toronto, Oct. 2 — (CP)—Flooded streets, blocked traffic, rotting field crops were reported from many parts of Southern and Western Ontario today on the heels of an unrelenting downpour that has continued for a week or more. Today's weather forecast held only slight hope of relief — promising "scattered" showers.

In most sections the latest rainfall has continued since Sunday evening, on top of an unusually wet September. Highways were blocked at several points. Niagara Falls has had more than 10 inches of rain since Sept. 13. Chatham has had four inches since Sunday night. In Toronto the September rainfall of 5.56 inches was the heaviest in 19 years, and it's going on steadily.

The swollen Sydenham River at Wallaceburg was reported within three inches of the top of the concrete revetment. The Thames river at Glencoe was up five and a half feet and still rising. At Simcoe the 105th annual fall fair opened yesterday, but the grounds were practically flooded and it was almost impossible for persons to move around.

From many areas came reports of heavy losses to farm crops. The latest downpour just about finished late tomatoes in Kent County, where farmers had been devising skids to salvage what they could of sodden crops hard hit by last week's rains.

Beans were spoiling in the fields and Sarnia and Chatham particularly feared a heavy loss in this crop. In all parts of Chatham streets were flooded and numerous cars were stalled in deep water. St. Thomas area farmers feared their bean crops would be a total loss.

A large area of land was flooded around Thorold in the Niagara Peninsula and Thorold streets, like those in many other sections, were under water.

FUTURE OF CANOL PIPELINE UNCERTAIN

Edmonton, Oct. 2—(CP)—Maj.-Gen. David McCoach, Commanding Officer of the 6th Service Command, U. S. Army, said in an interview Monday the $130,000,000 American-financed Canol pipeline from Norman Wells, N.W.T., to Whitehorse, Y.T., has been declared "excess" to needs of the U. S. Army and now is in the hands of the War Department.

Should Canada refuse to buy the pipeline, he said it would go up for sale at a public auction.

Gen. McCoach said no decision has been made by the government of Canada and the United States as to when the Dominion government will take over the Alaska Highway.

HIROHITO ACCUSED HIS ARMY CHIEF OF LYING TO HIM

Action Took Place at Conference Before Surrender Says Correspondent

San Francisco, Oct. 2 — (AP)—ABC correspondent Larry Tighe reported from Tokyo today that Emperor Hirohito flatly accused his army chief of staff of lying to him, in their final, tense, pre-surrender conference, precipitating the general's suicide. Tighe did not divulge the source of his report.

"The cabinet split at this meeting" Aug. 13, over whether to continue the war, Tighe said. The cabinet attended in a body, and met with Admiral Mitsumoca Yonal, naval Chief of Staff, and General Kobeichika Anami, Army Chief of Staff.

"The Emperor turned finally to Admiral Yonai and asked 'Has Japan any chance in continuing the war?' " Tighe continued. "The Admiral bowed and replied, 'I greatly regret, but from the Navy's point of view, Japan has no chance. It it better to surrender now."

"Turning to Gen. Anami, the Emperor repeated his question. The general paused, and then blurted, 'Give me one more battle. A battle on Japan, and I can turn the tide."

"Hirohito looked piercingly at his Chief of Staff, and then, as if his mind were already made up about ending the war, crushed Anami by asking, 'Are you still lying to me?'

"Anami flushed and bowed. Completely humiliated, he backed from the room, and immediately ripped open his stomach with his dagger.

"Shortly afterward, a message of acceptance of the Potsdam Declaration was dispatched to President Truman," Tighe concluded.

MOLOTOV, BEVIN REPORTED TO BE AT LOGGERHEADS

Commissar Threatened To Go Home During Weekend After A Heated Argument

By FLORA LEWIS

London, Oct. 2 — (AP) — Informants high within the counsel of the Foreign Ministers' Conference said today that the Foreign Commissar Molotov, threatened to go home during the weekend after a heated argument with the Foreign Secretary, Ernest Bevin.

The two have been reported at loggerheads frequently during the sessions which were drawing toward a close.

The representatives of Great Britain, the United States, Russia, France and China met for more than two hours this morning and reconvened for another session later. It seemed that even the most superficial agreement could not be reached.

M. Molotov was reported by persons present at the weekend exchange to have taken exception to a remark by Mr. Bevin that the Soviet Commissar's methods were "Hitlerian."

The clash resulted when M. Molotov demanded that the ministers revoke a decision of Sept. 11 on procedure, which permitted France and China to all in on all discussions.

Conference Deadlocked

This is the issue which has deadlocked the conference for more than a week with Russia insisting that the Potsdam decisions be adhered to with only the foreign ministers of the Big Three discussing and drafting peace treaties for the Balkan states.

It was reported reliably that nothing more had been accomplished in the latest session, and that bitterness, anger and impatience were increasing steadily.

Actually, the task of bringing the conference to an end almost overshadowed its failure in the past three weeks to reach any important agreement.

Apparently abandoning hope of untangling the debate over procedure for the Balkan peace treaties, the ministers now were snarled in the problem of what to do about the final conference documents.

Before they adjourn the ministers are scheduled to sign both the unpublicized state records of the conference and the joint final communique. If they go home without agreeing on these records, it would be tantamount to admitting they were unable to reach a decision about the points on which they were conferring. Under such circumstances the final communique could do little more than recite the simple fact that a meeting was held.

The Russians are reported to have refused to sign anything until they gained their point that France and China be excluded from discussion of the treaties with Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary.

Head of Famed 3rd Army Takes Over 15th Army

Truscott Takes Command 3rd and Occupation Zone

By WES GALLAGHER

Frankfort-on-Main, Germany, Oct. 2 —(AP)— It was officially announced today that Gen. Geo. S. Patton, Jr., who differed with Gen. Eisenhower over policy for eliminating Nazi influence in Bavaria, has been relieved of command of the famed United States 3rd Army he led through France. He will take over the United States 15th Army, which is reduced now to a "paper" organization.

The 15th consists of a headquarters staff and a few troops doing research work.

Lt.-Gen. Lucian K. Truscott, Jr., commanding the 5th Army which is slated for official dissolution Dec. 1, will succeed Gen. Patton in command of the 3rd and of the eastern half of the American occupation zone.

The changes will take place about Oct. 7.

The 15th Army does not control any occupational area. Its mission is to prepare reports on Allied relations in the war, with recommendations for future procedure.

It was announced July 21 that the 15th had completed its job as an occupying force and that the commander at that time, Lt.-Gen. Leonard T. Gerow, had been named president general of a board of American officers to make a detailed study of the European war.

Although no official reason was given for the transfer of the swashbuckling, pistol - packing Patton, it came on the heels of his widely criticized statement to newspapermen Sept. 22 that some Nazis should remain in office for the sake of better administration this winter.

This was in conflict with Gen. Eisenhower's stand for immediate elimination of all Nazis from office, in line with the Potsdam declaration.

Gen. Eisenhower's action came one day after Gen. Patton summoned from his Bad Toeltz headquarters to report on his stewardship of Bavaria, spent more than two hours at Frankfurt conferring with his chief.

Several high German administrators, including Friedrich Schaeffer, Minister President of Bavaria, have been removed as a result of the investigation.

Paper Balloons Were Expensive And Worthless Say Jap Officers

By RUSSELL BRINES

Tokyo, Oct. 2 — (AP) — Japan's expensive V-1 weapons — bomb-laden paper balloons — intended as retaliation against Allied raids on Tokyo, were abandoned because neither the Japanese nor the people of the North American continent seemed to pay any attention to them.

This explanation was given today in an interview by the staff officers technical section, Japanese headquarters.

Nine thousand balloons were launched from three sites near Tokyo before the experiment was abandoned April 20, 1945.

It took more than two years to complete experimentation, before the first balloon was launched, and cost more than 9,000,000 yen (more than $2,000,000 at pre-war exchange) to manufacture the strange weapon — but officers said they heard of only one landing on the North American continent.

And this one, they added wryly, was reported to have been found, unexploded, in Wyoming.

They finally decided the weapon was worthless and the whole experiment useless, because they had repeatedly listened to the Chungking radio and heard no further mention of the balloons.

(Actually, there were quite a number of the balloons reported found in the United States and Canada, but at the request of Allied censorship publicity was withheld. One of the bombs, found intact by a picnic party in Oregon, exploded and killed several persons.)

The bombs were prepared more for "psychological effect" than for destructiveness, officers said. The secret weapons were not heavily propagandized in Japan, however, because "we weren't sure of results."

So all the Japanese knew about their balloon bombs was what they read in the newspapers — and newspapermen said they did not bother to write much about it.

Scientists had the course of the weapon figured out in detail; they would spiral upward more than 10,000 yards, they estimated, then eastward winds would speed them across the Pacific at 125 to 100 miles an hour in a straight course for the North American continent. Timers were to explode them 40 to 50 hours after they had been launched.

Time of Arrival Still Uncertain

At time of going to press no official word had been received of the time of arrival of the First Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment.

It is believed the unit is on its way to Belleville as the troopship "Ile de France" docked on Halifax early Monday evening.

Local officials and members of the District Reception Committee are making all efforts to ascertain the approximate time of arrival here so that the proper information can be published and broadcast to next-of-kin and friends of the returning veterans.

An unofficial report received just before noon today stated that the regiment would arrive in the city on Wednesday evening, but no official confirmation could be obtained. This is not to be taken as definite news.

Killer of Taxi Driver Sought By B.C. Police

Vancouver, Oct. 2 (CP)—British Columbia police today intensified their efforts to find the slayer of Reginald Claude Price, 39-year-old taxi driver who was the fourth murder victim in this district during the last month.

City detectives scoured the city and suburbs for clues that might lead to discovery of the killers of the University of British Columbia graduate.

Powder burns on Price's left temple showed he had been shot at close range by two bullets fired through the head. He had been robbed of between $200 and $300 in cash which he was known to have been carrying.

Discovered by a house painter who thought he found an abandoned stolen car, the body was slumped in the front seat.

Other victims of recent murders were children. The first was four-month-old George Higginson whose battered body was found Aug. 30 in a waterfront rooming house. George Higginson, 39, and a former soldier has been charged with the child's murder.

Four-year-old Dianne Blunt's body was discovered partly buried in a garage near her home Sept. 30. A 12-year-old school boy was reported to have confessed to her murder. A week ago 10-year-old Doreen Ryan was shot to death outside her home in nearby Murrayville. Nobel Monahan, 53, a district farmer has been charged with her murder.

Origin And Progress of Chain Stores Narrated

An interesting insight into the origin and progress of the many chain stores now in operation in the United States and Canada was given the Rotary Club on Monday by Rotarian Harry Croll eastern superintendent of the Metropolitan Stores.

The first chain, or multiple unit stores as the speaker termed it, began with the old Hudson Bay Company which opened outposts throughout the country and in the United States in the early days.

The late F. W. Woolworth created the idea of opening several stores and selling merchandise at popular prices.

The grocery chain, he said, originated in a small store in Maine when a foresighted bookkeeper showed his boss the potentialities of opening stores in nearby communities. From this idea was born the well-known A and P Stores.

In the mail-order chain, three great firms Sears-Roebuck, Montgomery-Ward and Butler Brothers did a tremendous business through mailed catalogues. But the advent of the automobile caused a large decrease in business and these firms resorted to the opening of branches throughout the United States.

Two Groups.

He classified chain stores into two groups, the corporate and the voluntary chain. The first-named is owned and operated by corporated companies while the voluntary system consists of a number of business men who combine their merchandise and advertising.

In 1944, Rotarian Croll stated, the variety stores (5 and 10) consisting of twelve companies which operate 100 stores each did a total business of one billion 400 million dollars.

The three big leaders such as Woolworth with 2004 stores did a total business of 460 millions of dollars: Kresge Stores with 714 shops did 216 millions and the W. T. Grant Company with 491 stores 174 millions of dollars.

The A and P chain has grown to 20,000 stores in the U.S. with the original idea of placing a store in every community. The government clamped on heavy taxes with the result that several stores were closed. The company then amalgamated several shops into one and this was the birth of the Supermarket.

Rotarian Croll outlined the methods used in obtaining locations in various communities for chain stores, stating that in the majority of cases rentals are based on commission. In other words the more money the store makes, the more the landlord gets.

He was introduced by Rotarian Percy McGuire while club appreciation was expressed by Rotarian Art Francis.

Few of Original Red Patch With Units as Casualties, Transfers Change Faces

By DOUGLAS HOW
(CP Staff Writer)

The patch was red — emblem of the 1st Canadian Division. The soldier, walking with that awful, deliberate, that unforgettable stride of the infantryman, went on through the dust of the road, the arm hardly moving, the patch red and bright against the melancholy of his clothes and the sweated bronze of his face.

He thrust across Sicily in 28 days, still lusty for battle, blooded, proud at the end that the enemy had called him the Red Patch Devil. He struck into Italy and walked and shot and walked and fought and walked and budged himself north.

The men fell at his side. The graves began to multiply. He went across the Moro and into Ortono and fought the paratroopers for eight days and the division won its first V.C. at Casa Berardi and he came out of it knowing that now he was a soldier, as good as his father, as good as any other.

In the sunlight near the sea one day they laid the dead of the Moro Valley to rest in the soil of Italy and left them there in the spring when the long winter had gone and the march began again.

Saw Bulk of Cassino.

The wounded came back and the reinforcements came up and the division pulled down its patches and the soldier looked up one day and saw the bulk of Cassino before him and knew Italy's greatest battle was at hand.

He heard the hosts of guns that May morning in the fog and then he went forward into the wheat and into the hell and he broke the Hitler Line there in the Liri Valley. Here was a noble feat of arms, one to rank with the Ypres and the Vimys of the past and the Caens and Hochwalds to come.

But the dead lay thick on the ground. The faces changed again. Thousands of men had worn the patch and gone their way and others had taken their places. The framework—the patch—went on.

Chris Vokes, tough, and driving, stayed at the helm, proud of the patch and all who wore it. He chanced one night into an argument with the generals of the army, the fabled 8th, and stopped them all and topped their boasts with his eulogy of his division.

"When I say 'go'", said he, "I just grab hold of something and hold on."

Another autumn came and the soldier thought of the other winter and, thinking of it, broke the Gothic Line, and broke his heart in the few miles that held him from Rimini and the Plains of Lombardy.

Fought With Skill.

The Germans fought with classic skill and held him back until the rains had come and then fell back into the muck of the plains and held him there, cursing. The winter came. The war went on. The patches fell as the soldiers fell but always there were more.

The soldier was tired of the war now. His lust was gone but his courage was great and he was happy when Smokey Smith won the V.C. on the Savio, Smokey who had come through it all, straight from 1939, straight from Sicily. There were few of them left now, few in the fighting companies from 1939 or from Sicily.

The soldier crossed the Rubicon, the Lamone, the Senio, the farmlands, the dykes, the endless miles, until at last they pulled him out and sent the red patch to the Western Front where the other soldiers called him a "D-Day Dodger,"—he who had fought twice as long as they had.

And, when six Christmases had passed since the patch left Canada, the war ended and, almost unbelieving, the soldier looked back along the corridor of the years and thought of those who had stood beside him and those who had fallen there.

And, when the seventh Christmas drew near, he came home and marched through the streets that once were thousands of miles and sometimes millions of miles away. He looked at the faces in the ranks around him, shuffled, cross-posted, transferred, and thought how few there were he knew and how many had worn the patch and gone their many ways.

Group Captain Fullarton Takes Over Command Of Trenton Air Station

While hundreds of officers, airmen and airwomen, stood rigidly at attention in the sports hangar, the command of the Trenton Air Station was officially handed over on Monday, in traditional ceremony from Group Captain A. D. Bell-Irving to the new commanding officer, Group Captain E. G. Fullarton, A.F.C., former commanding officer of No. 9 S.F.T.S., Centralia, Ont.

The parade consisting of two wings formed up at 9.30 a.m., and one-half hour later, the retiring C.O. arrived to take over.

In his farewell address to the men and women of the station, Group Captain Bell-Irving offered his sincere appreciation for the co-operation he received during the two years of office at Trenton, and expressed the hope that they carry into civilian life the qualities of loyalty, discipline, and good fellowship which they acquired while in the service.

He paid tribute to the RCAF at Trenton, and hoped all personnel felt a particular pride in having been chosen to serve at this important station.

At the conclusion of the address, the parade was called to attention and Group Captain Fullarton, the new commanding officer, arrived at the hangar. The general salute was played by the band of the station. The signing of the handing-over certificate then took place. The entire parade led by its new C.O. cheered Group Captain Bell-Irving as he officially took his departure from the hangar.

"Contact" Editor Accepts Position With the "Torch"

Sergeant William (Bill) Sargent, popular editor of the Trenton R.C.A.F. "Contact," sprightly monthly periodical of the station, is leaving the service and will take up residence on "Civvy Street" on October 15.

The Sergeant, whose artistic and editorial efforts have made the "Contact" one of the most popular and widely read publications of its kind in the district, has had his efforts rewarded with the offer of the editorial chair of "The Torch," official publication of the Canadian Corps Association. He has accepted the offer of the position and will assume his new duties immediately following discharge.

Bill joined the R.C.A.F. back in 1941 as air crew and in the vernacular of the service was "washed out." He remustered for a trade. Then he heard the service paper needed an artist and Bill was "in."

His clever caricatures of all branches of the service and personnel as well as illustrations for the various headings of his magazine mark Bill as an artist of exceptional ability. His editorial ability ranges from sparkling witticisms anent various situations in and around the station, to editorial matter that is clear and concise.

He is publishing his last R.C.A.F. edition this month and his literary and artistic abilities will be missed by outside readers as well as station personnel.

Mr. White appeared Monday at both Kinsmen and Rotary clubs luncheon meetings, where sub committee heads were appointed. He was scheduled to appear at Kiwanis today.

At Kinsmen meeting Monday evening Mr. White in reading excerpts from national campaign appeal publicity, told of the drastic need for clothing among the many ravished European nations. After six years of war the people of the liberated countries in Europe today find themselves deprived of many of the elementary necessities of life. Now is the time when steps must be taken to provide these destitute millions with clothing to meet the rigors of the approaching winter.

The National Clothing Collection is sponsored by the Canadian United Allied Relief Fund on behalf of the U.N.R.R.A.

A $15,000 flour and feed warehouse building planned for South John Street, by J. M. Wood and Sons, Evans Street, heads the September building list, it is revealed by records kept at the city hall. Excavation for the structure is already underway, while it is expected that the pouring of the concrete will be completed before the end of next week.

According to Mr. Wood, the building will be 100x32 feet with 40 feet of the structure being two storeys to accommodate elevator facilities. The building will be of frame construction covered with galvanized metal. A Peterboro millwright will supervise construction but it is expected local labor as far as possible will be used to construct the building.

For many years a resident, of Winnipeg, Mr. Wood came to Belleville three and one-half years ago to take over the flour and feed business formerly operated by Grant Coulter, North Front Street grocer. Two of his sons, Ray and Stewart, are now members of the firm, the latter being taken into the business recently following his discharge from the navy.

Conference Recesses

They argued that at Potsdam it had been decided that only the countries which fought against the Axis satellites should write the treaties for those countries. The opposing argument, as outlined by one delegate, is that the Potsdam decisions permitted the Big Three to invite other powers to the discussion of peace settlements.

At 2:45 a. m., the conference recessed. M. Molotov and his aides strode grimly from the conference room, and the other delegations followed a few minutes later.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With the R.C.A.F., Overseas, Sept. 29. (CP)—In four months more than 4,000 R.C.A.F. men in Europe looking forward to discharge talked over the prospects and problems of civilian life with their personnel counsellors.

There are eight "P.C.'s" at work among Canadian airmen in Belgium, Holland, Germany and Denmark, plus one "floater" who tracks down Canadians attached to R.A.F. stations.

"We find that Canadians serving on the continent take a more realistic view of civilian life and prospects than those in Canada or even England," said Sqdn. Ldr. Ernie Cripps of Hamilton, Ont., senior personnel counsellor in Brussels.

"Fewer men entertain dreamy ideas of becoming "big shots," but instead want to get a firm hold on a lower rung on the ladder from which they can work up." Many interviewers, he said, found that a large number of men plan to adapt their service training to civilian needs.

Two years ago, Cpl. Eileen Hasset of the Women's Division, a Vancouver girl, thought it would be a good idea to drop in on the boys in the R.C.A.F. Wing at East Grinstead Hospital to cheer them up.

She's been going there regularly once a week since, — on Sunday, her only free day—taking to the wounded and sick supplies of candy, razor blades and tinned foods given to her by Auxiliary Services.

Shortly after the first visit she was joined by Cpl. Beatrice Round of Toronto, and LAW. Shirley Chambers of Sarnia, Ont., and within the last six months by Sgt. Susie Oates and Cpl. Olga Klemm, both of Vancouver.

The story of this morale-building, voluntary job, done through the sacrifice of valued free time, was disclosed by an admirer in a letter to Maple Leaf.

"Shangrila"'. ."Tres bien!". . . "Bang on!" That is just a sample selection of the superlatives used by officers on leave in Brussels to describe their stay at "The Atlanta", a hotel for Canadians.

Since the idea of leave is to have an exhaustingly good time, the book also record such pithy farewell comments as "Feel no pain," "Whipped,"' a disgusted "Nuts!" or the more definitive "Sick of guilders, Brussels, everything."

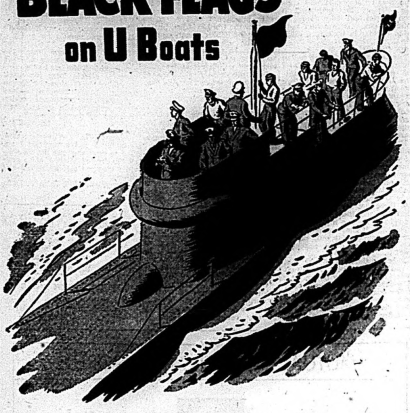
Boss of the bright, modern R.C.A.F. rendezvous on the Belgian capital's Boulevard Adolph Max is Flt. Lt. Harry Brown of Winnipeg. As a former banker, recruiting officer, intelligence officer and "angel" to liberated prisoners of war, Harry is well equipped to make the weary airman's stay in the big city more comfortable, or more exciting, according to requirements.

Why VICKS VapoRub Is So Good For Relieving Miseries of Childrens Colds

More than two generations ago—in grandmother's day—mothers first discovered Vicks VapoRub. Today it is the most widely used home-remedy for relieving miseries of children's colds. And here is the reason . . .

The moment you rub VapoRub on the throat, chest and back at bedtime it starts to work two ways at once—and keeps on working for hours—to ease coughing spasms, help clear congestion in cold-clogged upper breathing passages, relieve muscular soreness or tightness. It promotes restful sleep. Often most of the misery of the cold is gone by morning! That's why VapoRub is so good to use when colds strike. Try it!

BLACK FLAGS on U Boats



When Nazi U-boat commanders hoisted black flags of surrender, it was a "go ahead" signal to the three out of every eight Canadians who normally depend for their livelihood on export trade.

For five years the flow of foreign trade has been largely a government responsibility. But now, to help create peacetime jobs, Canadian enterprise must do its full share in finding customers abroad. This means doing business all over the world, in strange and distant cities, in a hundred languages and currencies.

Canadian banks have a key role in this complicated but essential peacetime task. Every day their foreign branches and correspondents arrange credits, handle documents and perform other intricate operations to bring buyers and sellers together across the obstacles of distance, language and custom.

This banking service is of primary importance to business and to every Canadian worker as Canada turns to the task of recreating trade abroad to provide jobs at home.

Canadians Badly Treated Working In Jap Alloy Plant

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press War ....de
(C. P. War Correspondent)

Guam, Oct. 2 (CP-Via U.S. Navy Rario)—Six hundred American, British and Canadian prisoners werej in full charge of the operation of a Japanese alloy factory at Oyama near Oskaka, Japan, when the war in the Pacific ended.

A group of Allied prisoners which included 150 Canadians were in control of the entire production sire of the factory with only the office work left in the hands of the Japanese.

The Canadians were in a draft of prisoners who left Samshuipo camp in the Hong Kong area in September, 1943. For about a year they labored in an iron mine, then practically all worked in the factory or hauled 20 tons of coal daily from a dump a half mile away.

Prisoners unable to work were put on half rations. During the first year some of them went down to 90 pounds in weight and anyone who weighed 120 pounds was considered in good shape. Twenty-five Canadians died of sickness resulting from malnutrition during the first winter.

The Canadians had no socks and because of the poor quality of the footgear with which they were provided, many suffered from frostbite and some of those now at Guam on their way home are missing several toes. There were fires at the mines and factory only for an hour a day and the prisoners, themselves, had to find the wood.

The prosiner-workers camp was on reclaimed land and their huts built of mud and straw with tin roofs. The men slept on mats on the ground. Japanese medical Sergeant Nakiama did not excuse the men from work even when they were suffering from such illnesses as chronic dysentry.

State Secretary Faces New Problems On Return Home

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

Washington, Oct. 2 (AP)—State Secretary Byrnes is expected back in the United States from London this week reports of newly-tangled Russian relations stamping the pattern of his main problems for the weeks ahead.

The tensions recently developed between Russia and the western Allies—Britain and the United States—are viewed here as springing mainly from two sources:

1. An evident desire of London and Washington to check the extent of Russia's direct control over countries in eastern Europe.

2. Prolonged uncertainty in the United States government over what to do with the atomic bomb secret.

Here are the main problems ahead for Mr. Byrnes as he returns to his desk—the first two directly involving United States friendship with the Soviet Union.

The Balkans—American policy always has recognized Russia's claim to primary interest in the countries along her borders for security reasons. Thus, while the United States has argued over the one-party political controls organized in Romania and Bulgaria, it has not directly challenged Russia's dominance there but based its criticisms on lack of a democratic setup.

Worsened Relations.

Now, however, the United States appears to be competing with Russia for favor in Hungary—which Russia has been treating as she treats the border states. The United States has offered to recognize Hungarian government formally if it will merely promise democratic elections. In the case of Romania and Bulgaria, this country has made such elections a prerequisite to diplomatic recognition.

The atomic bomb—the first great question of policy is whether to share its secrets with the rest of the world. Practically this means sharing them with Russia as the only great military power which does not now possess them. Prolonged debate on this issue is reported to have contributed considerably to the worsened relations between Russia and the western powers as reflected at London.

Japan—Mr. Byrnes also must arrange for a meeting there relatively soon of the Allied Commission for Japan. A new agency which he proposed at London to have the task of co-ordinating Japanese occupation policy.

RECONVERSION

London (CP)—Small boys with catapults have found that the rubber from gas masks gives an extra "flip" to stones they shoot at birds, cats and dogs. The secretary of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has complained aout it in a letter to the Times.

Claims Defence Against Atomic Bomb Devised

Hollywood, Oct. 2 (AP)—A defence technique has been devised against atomic bombs that is so simple that the bomb can be detonated without even knowing their exact whereabouts, Larry Crosby, head of the Crosby Research Foundation and brother of singer Bing Crosby, said.

Mr. Crosby declined to divulge the basic principles of the defence. The secret would be turned over to the proper authorities only on condition that it be used solely to compel fair treatment of the United States from other nations.

His statement said foundation officials have refuted claims that uranium atoms used in the bombs might ultimately be harnessed for industrial uses. These atoms were far too dangerous for beneficial adoption, and other and safer atoms were more readily available in quantity and more suitable for such purposes.

ORIGINATED WITH GREEKS

The origin of how a ship came to be called "she" can probably be traced back to the Greek mariners who gave their ships feminine names.

Russians Enjoy Night Life At Moscow Spots

By EDDY GILMORE

Moscow, Oct. 2 (AP)—Russians do not live on meat and bread and five-year plans alone—they employ a little caviar, wine and, of late, a little of what has become known as night life.

The brightest lights burn longest at two downtown establishments, the Moscow hotel and the Aurora restaurant. The Moscow is the city's newest hotel.

The Aurora is an old-time restaurant done in the grand classical style, with numerous statues of undraped ladies, and heavy dark furniture, stained glass and the best food in town.

Customers in these two big night spots are mostly in uniform—Red army officers, officers from the Red fleet or fliers. There's an increasing number of civilians but the men usually outnumber women two to one.

It is acceptable for a lone man to approach a couple at another table and ask the girl's escort—ask him, mind you, not her—if he can dance with the girl. If the escort consents, and he usually does, the consent of the girl is sought. After the dance, the girl is ceremoniously returned to her escort, who in the meantime may have gone through the same procedure at another table.

The small joy spots are little restaurants, usually representing some Soviet nationality, especially Georgian or Armenian.

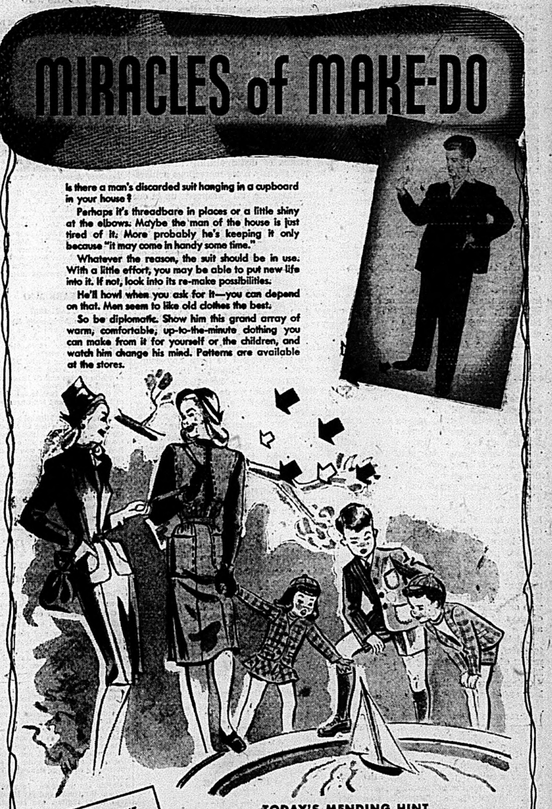
My Rheumatic Pains Have Practically Left Me"

Here is a saline treatment for the relief of rheumatic pains, which helped this Liverpool woman so much, that she wrote this letter of thanks:—

"For years I have suffered from rheumatic pains. My general health was gradually failing too, when I was given the tip to try Kruschen Salts. I got a small bottle and after taking it for about a week, the pain, which had often kept me awake at night, gradually subsided. Now—when I am on my second bottle—my health has improved and the rheumatic pain is negligible."—Mrs. H. H.—Liverpool

After obtaining relief from the first bottle of Kruschen, you can imagine how hopefully Mrs. H. H. started on the second. So follow her example if rheumatic pains are bothering you. Start taking the Kruschen saline treatment at once and continue until you give it a fair chance to help you. Like Mrs. H. H. you should soon feel improvement, because Kruschen is a combination of several mineral salts which aid the organs of elimination and in this way leads toward improvement in health and ease from rheumatic pains. Thousands have been benefited by taking Kruschen. Give it a trial in your own case.

Kruschen is 25c. and 75c. at all drug stores.



Is there a man's discarded suit hanging in a cupboard in your house?

Perhaps it's threadbare in places or a little shiny at the elbows. Maybe the man of the house is just tired of it. More probably he's keeping it only because "it may come in handy some time."

Whatever the reason, the suit should be in use. With a little effort, you may be able to put new life into it. If not, look into its re-make possibilities.

He'll howl when you ask for it—you can depend on that. Men seem to like old clothes the best.

So be diplomatic. Show him this grand array of warm, comfortable, up-to-the-minute clothing you can make from it for yourself or the children, and watch him change his mind. Patterns are available at the stores.

This Month

October, the month of nature's richest coloring in gold, brown and flaming scarlet in fields and woods, has come, wearing this year as it came the green attire of summer and early autumn. Its entry this year may rather be described in the words of one who says, "the weary rain falls ceaseless, while the day is wrapped in damp." That suited Monday's atmospheric conditions and not October in general.

This year has been abnormally contrary in its weather conditions or topsy-turvy since the second part of last winter upset the usual run of winter weather and turned mild very early, long before springtime normally appears. To pay for this nature delayed the spring breezes and atmosphere and a condition of general backwardness was complained of in the spring which was unfavorable for early crops. Even at this late time of the year October has showed trace of this still unsettled condition. But the tenth month of the year will display her wealth of gold and scarlet, it will have its frosts, its haze, its fading glories of the ruddy and gilded leaves, its farewells of the blackbirds which have been seen in flocks about the lawns and fields and in the trees these last few days. It will have its winds and breezes sending the falling leaves fleeing before them. This month will see rich pigments of autumn dissolving into brown and trees will become "the bare ruined choirs, where late the sweet birds sang."

October has attractions for a number of agricultural societies for it brings the nip in the air which is invigorating as patrons of rural exhibitions move about the fair parks in villages and towns. It also sees the last of the regular fairs and in this Province there will remain only two to be held, but these are special fairs in November, one a horse show and the other a Christmas fair.

It is the rural fall festivals which have intrigued the fancy and heart of mankind especially. There is besides the fair, the harvest festival or harvest home with large crowds enjoying the produce of the season.

But most of all autumn brings Thanksgiving, the national festival. Next Monday Canada observes Thanksgiving Day with scores of thousands of Canadian veterans home for the first time in years with their families and by the fireside in these staunch homes of the Dominion. This year the annual festival will be richer than it has been because the boys are home at this harvest fete. To them it will spell all that home means to them for they know what home is after being absent, some for nearly six years, in other lands across the seas, other for shorter periods but all separated from what they love best for what has seemed so long a period of time. So it will be high festival for these families so favored as to have their sons and the heads of their households with them in this true thanksgiving.

They will not forget the men who are yet to come back and they will hold in fond memory those who will not return because they gave all on the field of honor. Those who celebrate will think of families bereft of some who were at thanksgivings long ago.

October will bring that lovely season, all too brief, that second summer with the marks of the swift-moving year upon it—Indian Summer.

October marks the beginning of the long evenings of dark and the return from the great outdoors in which so many have lived for months into the home which takes on new appeal at this season of the year.

Should Have a Meaning

Emperor Hirohito's visit to General MacArthur is looked upon as likely to have far-reaching results. The Japanese who ascribe divinity to their Emperor must be profoundly affected by the realization that their leader has gone into the presence of the Allied Supreme Commander and has moved among Allied generals and staff in a manner that did not require of them what the presence of the Emperor requires of the Japanese themselves. The Emperor wore Western attire, which the Japanese have used for state occasions and which they used at the surrender signing, he took off his hat as he went into the American embassy in Tokyo and shook hands with the General and conversed with him on matters, the purport of which was not disclosed.

This should have a meaning to the Japanese for General MacArthur wore none of the dress trappings of authority, wearing the practical undress uniform without medals and with no tie while the Emperor wore diplomatic dress which the Japanese had adopted from the West. It should tend to detach the Japanese from some of their fantastic views. The Japanese will recall that it was the Emperor whom they look upon as a deity, who issued the rescript calling for the surrender of Japan without any conditions and that he takes orders from the Allied Supreme Commander.

Meanwhile the news from the Orient shows that the Allies mean stern business with Japan, that is to be made to realize that she has been beaten in war and that she will not be permitted to develop any aggression in future and that the occupation period may be long. The latest Allied step is to seek out the stolen wealth of lands which Japan overran and in this the Allied authority is dealing firmly. Japan must disgorge.

Atomic Bomb, the Universe

(New York Herald Tribune)

Quite aside from its possible military, political and economic consequences, the atomic bomb has said something presumably pretty important about the structure of our universe, about the nature of matter, energy, time and space. But even the well informed citizen has only the vaguest of notions as to what it has said upon these fundamental matters, and virtually no equipment for estimating the importance of the message. The world has received the atom bomb in the same rather baffling way that the modern child receives ahe marvels of the scientific age. Brought up in a motorcar to the crooning of a radio, there is nothing surprising to the modern child in an airplane, or radar screen; he accepts these extensions of the mechanical age without the slightest understanding of the subtle aerodynamic and electronic principles underlying their development, and therefore without any means of distinguishing them from the only slightly more marvellous achievements of Superman or the Magic Eye. Fact and fantasy are all wrapped up in one world out of which "the scientists" may be expected at any moment to produce almost any kind of a white rabbit; and the nature of that world, with its limits of the possible and impossible, its fruitful avenues of advance and its dead ends, its distinctions between myth and reality, is all but totally lost.

So the atomic bomb arrives, as merely the latest marvel cooked up by "science," and even well furnished minds have almost no idea what has really been cooked up, what are the probable and what the merely fantastic developments it suggests. Even less are we equipped to form any sound appreciation of the impact of the relevant discoveries upon established concepts of the natural world; we do not know in what way it may affect the accepted cosmology of today because there is so little general training in fundamental cosmological notions as they now stand. But there might well be. Every educated person could, without too much difficulty, be given a basic knowledge of the basic ideas which today govern man in his relations with his environment and his utilization of the physical forces within his universe. The atom bomb suggests that the training is rather badly needed.

Average Age of Cars

(Wall Street Journal)

The average mileage of the nation's automobile is about 56,000 miles and the average age is nearly eight years.

Nearly six million of the 24 million cars still operating are 10 years old or more, it is estimated. The oldest age average was found to be in the central west or "farm belt" area, and the youngest in the mid-Atlantic area.

District of Columbia cars had the lowest average of all at 5.21 years, with Massachusetts next with an average of 6.09 years. Nebraska cars had the highest aevrage age at 8.23 years.

If you can get him in his youth
Won over to the side of truth
And decent conduct, have no fear,
He'll be a man respected here.

If when he's eight or nine or ten
You teach him traits admired by men
And set example where you can,
Don't worry! He will be a man.

If you take time enough to train
That boy of yours in loss and gain
And how in life must both be met,
Don't worry! You'll have no regret.

So teach him now, and do not wait
'Till manhood comes, for that's too late.
So live that he in you will see
The sort of man you'd have him be.

YOU'D BE SURPRISED

By GEORGE W. STIMPSON

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

The common European plant known in America as catnip and in Great Britain as catmint has a stimulating effect on cats and makes them frisky and playful.

Cats, and even lions, tigers and other members of the cat family, are extremely fond of catnip and frequently may be seen sniffing at the plants or actually eating the leaves.

The odor of catnip is intermediate between that of mint and pennyroyal, and if a cat comes in contact with the bruised leaves it will usually first smell of them, then chew or claw at them and finally frisk about as if under the influence of a strong stimulant.

Just why cats and not other species of animals should be so affected by catnip is somewhat of a mystery.

Catnip is unknown in many parts of the world, and yet if cats from those regions are brought into contact with the plant they generally are affected in the same manner as cats that have been reared where the plant is common.

Artificial mice stuffed with catnip leaves are manufactured and sold to people for their pet cats to play with.

Catnip is a labiate plant and grows to a height of two to three feet. Botanically it is known as Nepeta cataria. Although "feles," from which we get "feline," was the normal Latin word for "cat," in later Latin "catta" was also used, and during the Middle Ages catnip was known as "herba catti."

The fondness of cats for this plant has not escaped the notice of other peoples and in French it is called "herbe du chat" and in German "Katzenmunze."

The root of the plant known as velerian has a similar stimulating effect on cats.

POLLEN SEARCH AIDS SUFFERERS FROM HAY FEVER

Winnipeg Woman Botanist Makes Survey to Ascertain Distribution and Quantity of Troublesome Plants

Yorkton, Sask., Oct. 2 (CP)—Summer sniffiers and sneezers have reason to thank people like Dr. Margaret G. Dudley, Winnipeg botanist who recently visited this eastern Saskatchewan town in her search for plants which distress hay fever victims.

This summer Dr. Dudley surveyed Manitoba to ascertain the distribution and abundance of plants thought to be responsible for all the mischief, and explored vacant lots and side streets while in Yorkton to see what plants grow here.

Since 1938 Dr. Dudley has been doing research work on hay fever plants. She learned the job of hunting pollens while studying at Minnesota University's department of botany. The survey, probably the first large-scale investigation carried on in Canada, first was sponsored by the Banting Institute of Toronto, and continued until the outbreak of war by the National Research Council of Ottawa.

It now has been resumed under direction of the Winnipeg Clinic, and the link between Dr. Dudley's work and medical treatment is that when complete the survey will be published and made available to all doctors. It will contain a list of plants prevalent in each district and their time of pollenization, information to guide doctors in making a diagnosis.

Work Completed.

The work of identifying pollen particles caught on coated slides and exposed on the roof of Manitoba University's medical college and at various other points in the province has been completed. This work began in 1938, when Dr. Dudley examined slides at 24-hour intervals through a microscope for pollen grain and fungal spores.

Then she identified and counted pollen particles, and, after checking wind and other factors, determined the direction from which they came.

No one has ever counted the Yorktonians who suffer from hay fever the probable reason being that those not afflicted are not interested and those who do get the sniffles are too busy sneezing anyway. So it goes on from summer to summer, with only people like Dr. Dudley doing anything about it.

Doctors estimate, however, that at least two of every 100 Canadians are allergic to pollen. If all sneezed at once they'd offer worthy competition to the atomic bomb.

Her research, Dr. Dudley said, is confined to a study of allergens—the wind-borne plant pollens responsible for the suffering of hay fever victims. The substance in the pollen grains which causes people to react is called an antigen.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

Signed Letters, Not More Than One Page or 100 Words Long, Pertaining to Personal Health and Hygiene, Not to Disease, Diagnosis or Treatment, will be Answered by Dr. Brady if a Stamped Self-Addressed Envelope is Enclosed.

YOU HAVEN'T ITCHED TILL YOU'VE HAD IVY POISONING

Once I was severely censured by an editor for using the term pruritus in my copy. Well, I suppose the editor's annoyance was justified. Some of our medical terms are funny that way. However, the term pruritus means simply itching without a rash or other skin lesion to account for it.

Other than mention one or two simple remedies for the relief of such itching I'm afraid I can do nothing for sufferers here, but I have a pamphlet about it that gives various remedies or suggests treatment, and any reader may have a copy on written request if he provides stamped self addressed envelope.

Of all kinds of itching I ever had—and I have had many kinds, including the seven (year, day, hour—depending on treatment!) itch, the most maddening itch — gosh all hemlock, I wonder if that wasn't what put me off my nut in the first place?—is ivy poisoning. I contracted it in the summer, the first and only attack I ever had, and the itching persisted pretty constantly till the next spring. I still feel like kicking the furniture when I recall that the ivy toxin treatment (daily intramuscular injections of homeopathic doses of ivy extract) was not introduced until after my bout—or if it was in use I had not learned of it.

I believe the best treatment for ivy poisoning is a daily intramuscular injection of ivy toxin, whether the trouble is just beginning or the itching lingers on long after the skin inflammation has passed. In many cases a single "shot" seems to bring the attack to an end within a few days.

Local physician gives victims of ivy poisoning Rhus Tox pills (homeopathic) internally and the trouble clears up promptly.

(H.C.C.)

Next time you have ivy poisoning (writes H. R. N.) put on the white of an egg in the morning and forget all about the desire to scratch.

Spread a slice of lel moistened white bread with a thick layer of baking soda and apply it to the ivy poisoning. It gives instant relief. (Mrs. J. M. C.)

I tried none of these remedies when I had ivy poisoning, the only relief I obtained from the itching was from sopping on the well known Calamine Lotion to each four ounces of which one ounce of 5 percent phenol (carbolic acid) solution in water was added. That makes a 1 percent carbolic lotion. (Druggists may sell 5 percent carbolic acid solution in water without prescription).

Calamine lotion itself is a popular lotion for the relief of itching irritation mild sunburn. It is a mixture of about two teaspoonfuls of calamine powder, two teaspoonfuls of zinc powder, one-half teaspoonful of glycerin, in enough lime water to fill a four-ounce vial. Shake it up well and apply as often as desired by dabbing on with fingers.

More about ivy poisoning to follow.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Poor Service

The doctor you recommended for ambulant treatment of piles is 20 miles away. This is not very good service. Try again, and this time kindly name one within a mile of my address. (H.J.G.)

Answer—Sorry, the war is still on, so far as the supply of good doctors is concerned. Can't you find some means of travelling the twenty miles without aggravating your trouble?

Allergy Alleviated

I wrote you about my husband's allergy three months ago and you sent the pamphlet. "Relief for Allergy." My husband finds the potassium with ascorbic acid a great comfort—he has had no unpleasant effects from his work (handling furs) since he began using a tablet or two daily.—does not sneeze, nor water and redden at the eyes, and in general feels fine. We feel deeply fratefuI.

(H. L. J.)

Answer—On written request (clipping is not a request) I am glad to send any one the pamphlet "Relief for Allergy" if he provides stamped self addressed envelope.

SUGGESTS CURFEW

Ottawa, Oct. 2 — (CP) — Introduction of a curfew in Ottawa to curb juvenile delinquency was suggested last night at a meeting of city council. Alderman E. Query said children of 16 years and under should be off the streets and out of "juke joints" by 9 p.m. in winter and 10 p.m. in summer. Their health would benefit and they would take an interest in home affairs.

SEPTEMBER 26, 1945

To The Citizens of Belleville and District:

This week some two hundred voluntary workers representing the Community Service Chest will appeal to you for funds required by the Children's Aid Society, Salvation Army, Victorian Order of Nurses and Young Men's Christian Association in serving our city and district.

The united appeal is approved. It makes for economy in collection and in administration. It conserves time of the worker and of those whose support is solicited. One appeal—one contribution—meets your financial obligation to all four agencies. In rendering service no need is left unattended and no useless duplication exists.

The need is great. We rejoice in Victory—all honor to our men. The present, however, is a time of readjustment with extra duties and responsibilities being placed upon these service organizations.

Financial support of the Community Chest is an insurance against deterioration in the quality of our city life. Think of nursing services, summer camps, recreation programs for young people, aid to the handicapped and to orphans. Think too, of the evils and sorrows of the less fortunate, of the sick, the friendless, the needs of our returning men and the protection of youth.

Our city is very fortunate. This district bears an enviable record in war—in support of Victory Loan Drives, of Red Cross and other service agencies and groups.

To retain our good name, raise the level of our city health, to meet the challenge of delinquency, to make our city the kind of city our returning men expect to find, to make Belleville one of the finest places in Canada in which to live and work, I appeal to you to give generous support to the organizations working steadfastly for the public good.

The end of the war brings a period of national, social readjustment and uncertainty.

The four agencies now asking your support render an enormous and unceasing service in the interest of the youth, the children, the sick, the friendless and the needy. They conduct, as well, a comprehensive program of positive character building activities. Backed by the hearts, the public spirit and financial help of the citizens of this city and district they will be enabled to continue their essential and invaluable service to our community.

They require your financial support. Give the canvasser, who comes to your door a courteous reception and a generous donation.

Make an investment in human happiness. Be a good neighbor.

Sincerely yours,

Charles A. Cameron
Honorary Chairman.

Engineer's Wife Relates Horrors of Panay Jungle

By KATHLEEN SINCLAIR
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Montreal-born Louise Reid Spencer, 33-year-old wife of an American mining engineer, tells in the new book, "Guerrilla Wife", (Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York), her own story of two years in the Philippine jungles, hiding from the Japanese.

The narrative is written with a childlike candor which underlines the horrors experienced by Mrs. Spencer and the members of the mining community of Masbate when they were forced to take to the hills a few hours ahead of the Japanese invaders.

Until she went to Manila with her husband in 1937, Mrs. Spencer lived in Montreal. The next four years, spent at a mining town in the Philippines, were pleasant and leisurely, and although the Spencers were always conscious of the nearness of the jungle, they were unprepared for the grim privations into which they were flung when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941.

The account of their trials is highlighted by little details which show Mrs. Spencer to be an acute observer of life. She describes the consternation of one woman who was worried about the clothes appropriate for the first air raid alert after Pearl Harbor. Ultimately, Mrs. Spencer says, she appeared in jodhpurs, which she had remodelled for the occasion, a tailored white shirt, a riding hat and a pair of white silk gloves. This woman and her husband were captured by the Japanese the day after the Spencers left Masbate.

Jump Ahead of Japs

The Spencers managed to cross to Panay Island only a few hours ahead of the Japanese. From there on the book is a tale of unrelieved and ever-increasing hardship in the jungle. For many months the Spencers, with twenty-three other refugees — miners and missionaries—led a precarious existence in a hidden valley almost in the centre of Panay Island. Food was monotonous and uncertain and the most elementary necessities of life were lacking.

Yet Mrs. Spencer writes with humor and courage of their wild and hunted life. One of the best incidents she describes concerns the native woman who tried to bargain with her for her lipstick. Finally Mrs. Spencer compromised by giving her a little bit on a leaf.

The tale of privation and terror mounts to a climax as Mrs. Spencer describes the birth of a child to one of the refugees during their last frantic bid for freedom. Mrs. Spencer herself reached Australia just in time for the birth of her son—the first child to be born in an army hospital in the southwest Pacific theatre of war.

Red Cross Report

The regular monthly meeting of the executive committee of the Belleville Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society was held on Sept. 27th with Mr. M. P. Duff presiding.

The treasurer, Mr. Zeran, reported: Receipts $452.97; Expenditres $1041.05.

Miss Barbara Graham reported difficulty in obtaining the required amount of honey for overseas shipment.

As Rev. Beauchamp Payne is severing his connection with the Belleville Branch Rev. J. G. Hornsby was appointed Liaison Officer and Mr. Harry Rollins assistant Liaison Officer for the reception of war wives and children coming to this district. This work is now well organized and Mr. Payne expressed especial thanks to Mr. Hornsby for coming to his aid last winter.

There is urgent need to procure other accommodation for work rooms.

Mr. F. H. Deacon, Mr. H. W. Ackerman and Mr. J. R. Bush were appointed a committee to look after the matter.

Mr. H. Rollins reported that the Reception Centre at the C.N.R. station is now complete except for furnishings.

Mr. Duff expressed the sincere regret of the executive at the departure from the city of Rev. A. B. Payne. The Belleville Branch of the Red Cross congratulates Mr. Payne on his new appointment and deeply appreciates the extensive services he has rendered the Red Cross in this district.

Report For June and July of the Women's War Work Committee

Sixteen cartons of Red Cross goods were shipped to Toronto in July containing 1294 articles of clothing for British Civilian Relief and for men of the services. There were 755 knitted and 539 sewn goods, consisting mainly of airforce socks, high neck and turtle neck sweaters, gloves, mitts, scarves, infant soakers and jackets, boys' and girls' sweaters and socks, quilts, afghans, leather jerkins, boys' and girls' Combinnations, girls' rompers, Boys' suits and girls' pantie dresses.

The groups discontinued meeting during July and August but many of the members took knitting and sewing home to do during the recess. The rooms opened again Sept. 8th and we understand the conveners of groups say the workers are not returning to the work as is desired. There is a great deal of sewing and knitting to do for civilian relief and it is hoped that the workers will appreciate the fact that much has to be accomplished yet.

The women of Belleville and district have done a grand piece of work during the last six years and it is impossible to say too much in praise. Yet we must realize that Britain and the European continent are suffering for need of comforts which the Canadian Red Cross Society has pledged its word to help supply.

In connection with the Women's War Work, we are asked to stress the necessity for the Women's Work Committees to keep active in order to complete work now on hand, and to be prepared for any emergency which may arise, particularly in the Far East.

Respectfully submitted,
Lilian E. Mikel,
Chairman, Women's War Work Committee, Belleville Branch.

Letter From Ontario Division.

A letter received from the Ontario Division contains the following:-

Firse we in the Red Cross must finish the war. Our workrooms must continue, for suffering abroad is desperate and the need is still great. In our own motherland it must be difficult for them to realize, in many respects, that peace is here. Trains are daily bringing back our thousands of Canadian wounded. Red Cross hospital lodges must be built and operated, for their health and benefit. Our visiting Committees must never allow a disabled man to feel forgotten. Soldiers and their dependents will be returning for months to come and many will need our guidance, care and assistance.

The overseas commissioner made a survey of the situation in Britain and reports the great need of all kinds of warm clothing and bedding.

Post-war plans of the Junior Red Cross should include the teaching of First Aid and Swimming.

MARMORA

Missionary Tells Of Work Done In Maynooth District

Marmora — An interesting address on her labors as a missionary in the Maynooth district was given before the W.M.S. of St. Andrew's United Church and other invited guests in St. Andrew's Hall on Wednesday evening by Miss M. A. Coultes, Reg. N., who has been stationed in the northern part of Hastings County since June 1944. Rev. E. M. Cadigan presided. After the singing of the opening hymn Mrs. E. C. Prentice rendered a solo. Scripture reading and prayer by Rev. E. M. Cadigan followed. Mrs. T. Dickson then sang "The Stranger of Galilee," after which another hymn was sung. The speaker was then introduced by the chairman.

Sketches Association.

In her opening remarks Miss Coultes spoke of her transfer from the Huron Presbytery to the Belleville Presbytery in June 1944 and sketched her associations with the W.M.S. until as she said, "I am now all time on this great work." When commencing her labors, she had three churches assigned to her charge, but as her work was extended later to embrace five churches, she received the assistance of a co-worker, Miss Widdows, who was also present at the meeting. This extension of her work came about in connection with the larger plan for missionary work between the ministers and women workers. Miss Coultes said she faces the possibility of having three more points opened in the near future. Personally, she believed more in concentrated work than the travelling further afield. She then told of the midweek meetings, home visitations, explorers work and the conducting of four Sunday Schools. Of the present five churches, that at Lake St. Peter is new, work on it having been started as recently as last June. It is hoped that the opening service will be on October 7th.

In its erection a work camp gave two weeks of assistance. Miss Coultes explained the origin of these work camps which she said were interdenominational. In this particular camp sixteen young people, including girls, put in long hours for two weeks and daily work on the building, exclusive of other activities, lasted from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The other churches where Miss Coultes holds services are at Musclow, Zion, Emmanuel Greenview (where an Anglican service is also held by the rector of Bancroft) and Maynooth where there are fifty families. She also spoke enthusiastically of a girls' camp which was held at Lake Baptiste and where assistance was forthcoming from two Picton ladies and also from teen-age girls who live outside of the territory covered by Miss Coultes. There are two W.A.'s in her territory and special mention was made of the one at Lake St. Peter. The speaker told of the various problems to be faced in carrying on her work. Her closing message focussed on the Crusade for Christ which has been launched by the United Church.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the speaker for her earnest and inspiring address upon motion of Mrs. E. M. Cadigan, seconded by Miss M. Brown. Light refreshments were then served and many of the goodly number present took opportunity to converse with Miss Coultes. The meeting was brought to an end with the singing of the National Anthem.

WAR EXPENDITURE

Not Justified

Mr. Tucker said he felt the government would not be justified in cancelling the existing debts of old veterans without doing something for those who had paid for their farms despite handicaps.

Previous parliaments had been honest in dealing with the cases of veterans. When the Soldiers Settlement Board was established there was no doubt that it would work. But an attempt was made to settle some 19,000 veterans on lands within 18 months and then unforeseen difficulties had begun to arise.

Of the original indebtedness of $109,000,000 some $45,000,000 was written off by previous parliaments. Another $988,205 was written off under provisions of an order-in-council by which the veterans could ask for an appraisal of their land and a reduction in their debt. A further $6,808,536 was written off under the Farm Credit Arrangement Act.

Only last week the government had passed an order-in-council making it possible for veterans who, through no fault of their own, did not apply previously for a reduction in their debt.

Definite efforts were made to get the debts down to a point where the veterans could pay them off in a reasonable period.

Thomas Reid (L — New Westminster) suggested that other cities could follow the example of New Westminster in doing something for veterans.

Maj. D. K. Mahony and Pte. Smokey Smith, both Victoria Cross winners of this war, were assured by their home city of New Westminster of an annuity of $100 a month each for life from the age of 50. The Province of British Columbia had set aside 1,000,000 acres of land that would be given outright to veterans who wished to settle on a farm.

Could Be Changed.

King Hazen (PC—Saint John-Albert) agreed of the need of sanctity of contracts, but he believed the contracts with the old veterans could be changed on the basis of mutual mistakes.

The government had made a mistake in valuing the land too highly and selling it to the veterans at too great a price. The veterans had erred in estimating that the farms could produce more than they did.

P. E. Wright (CCF—Melfort), himself a soldier settler, and Col. A. J. Brooks (PC—Royal) said they did not believe that one per cent of the veterans who had paid off their farms would object to the government granting clear titles to those still indebted.

Training of cadets at the Royal Military College, Kingston, Ont., is to be resumed in 1946 under conditions now under consideration, the defence department informed Gordon K. Fraser (PC—Peterborough West).

Of the 673 Canadian officers loaned to the British army 347 were casualties, it was disclosed in a return in Commons yesterday by Lt.-Col. Hugues LaPointe, parliamentary assistant to Defence Minister Abbott. Only 175 Canadian officers still are serving with the British army.

Returns Tabled.

Health Minister Claxton tabled a return in the Commons showing that family allowance bonuses would be paid to wards of the Children's Aid Society. Gordon Fraser (PC—Peterborough West) had sought the information.

No special provision has been made for the vocational training of physically-handicapped youths and adult civilians by the Labor Department, Labor Minister Mitchell said in a return tabled in the Commons today.

His statement was in reply to a question by D. J. McCuaig (CCF-Maple Creek). The question referred to "those mentally fit but handicapped in earning full maintenance by reason of amputation deformity, partial paralysis, etc."

Could be Given Training

Mr. Nitchell said such persons who have been gainfully employed could be admitted to training facilities which it is expected to provide through the provinces under the re-establishment training agreements, sent to provincial ministers for completion.

Also, they could be given training under youth training agreements in effect with the provinces "if the provinces wish to include training for such persons."

They would also be covered by Old Age Pensions, The Unemployment Insurance Commission had special sections concentrating on problems of the disabled.

Value of Canada's aluminum exports jumped from $26,428,186 in 1939 to $105,518,383 in 1944, Trade Minister MacKinnon said in a report tabled yesterday.

Value of pulpwood produced in Canada in 1944 more than doubled that of 1939 although in cords the increase was not nearly so great, Trade Minister MacKinnon disclosed in figures tabled yesterday in the Commons.

His statement, giving extensive figures for production and export of forest products during the war years, showed that in 1939 Canada produced 6,899,986 cords of pulpwood worth $58,302,688. In 1944 she produced 8,668,566 cords worth $124,363,926, the highest total of the war years.

Exports in 1939 and 1944 were almost identical, totalling roughly 1,392,000 cords, a drop from the peak of 1,808,000 cords in 1942.

Development of Timber and Mineral Resources in Ont. Post-War Project

Mining and forest development and social conservation all rank rich in plans for peacetime development of the province of Ontario. This is one of a series of stories by The Canadian Press on provincial reconstruction programs.

By TIM DICKSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 2 — (CP) — Development of rich timber and mineral resources in the north and conservation of its prosperous farmlands in the south are among aims of post-war policy in Ontario.

Both provincial and municipal governments have plans for extensive construction programs. Highways, bridges, schools and hospitals, recreation areas and community centres are all in the plans. Some projects are already under way.

Broad outlines of the province's plans are ready, and the planners are confident that peacetime enterprise will be capable of making wartime dreams come true.

Already work has started in Southern Ontario on reforestation, flood control measures, and means to stop erosion. Stock-taking is under way in the cut-over areas, such as Muskoka, to provide the basis for conservation and reforestation products.

In the north, big developments are planned, particularly in new mining areas, and officials say the mining towns of the near future will be vastly different from the tar-paper settlements of frontier days.

Model Town at Steep Rock

Typical of the new-style mining communities will be that at the Steep Rock iron mine in northwestern Ontario. A model town will be set up to take in the Steep Rock Mine and the present village of Antikokan. Farther west, at Red Lake, plans call for a modern year-round airport, a new hospital and a consolidated school.

A brand-new town, Marathon, is being built near a new pulp mill at Peninsula on the north shore of Lake Superior.

Resident geological engineers will be stationed at various points throughout Northern Ontario to assist prospectors, and field parties will make annual surveys of mineralized areas.

Ontario plans to spend $192,000,000 on a four-year program of highway construction and improvement. Officials estimate that 45,000 men will be given direct employment and 60,000 others will have employment indirectly. Paving of gravel highways, particularly in the north, ranks high on the program. New highways will be built from Hamilton to Windsor, from Parry Sound to Sudbury, and from Toronto to Barrie and in other areas.

Recreation areas are to be established close to large cities. Reforestation will be done where suburban forests have long ago been chopped down.

Information Service Set up

The province, through Ontario House in London, England, and its information services in Toronto, will help manufacturing concerns to establish factories throughout the province. Practically all private industry plans expansion, an official of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association said, to meet the demand for merchandise of which the output was restricted or stopped during the war.

Few cities, towns and villages have yet made up their minds about their reconstruction program although many of them are known to have set up funds for the purpose through a one-mill appropriation in their mill rate. School boards, hydro commissions and other municipal bodies have also established reserves.

Provincial officials said co-ordination between Federal and Provincial post-war planning has not yet been achieved, and final approval of many projects must await settlement of that question, probably at the adjourned Dominion - Provincial Conference later this year.

Manitoba Election—

COALITION SEEKS SECOND MANDATE IN OCT. 15 VOTE

Winnipeg, Oct. 2. (CP) — Born in wartime, the Manitoba coalition government seeks its second mandate from the electors at the polls Oct. 15.

The political history of Manitoba shows coalition administrations as far back as 1870, when the province entered confederation, but the modern non-partisan government was formed by John Bracken in 1940 when he was premier and two years before he became national leader of the Progressive Conservative party. Now it is under the leadership of 46-year-old Premier Stuart S. Garson.

Mr. Bracken formed the coalition with a government of Liberal-Progressives, Conservatives, C.C.F., Social Credit, and Independents. Each group was given representation in the cabinet.

At its formation he expressed the hope that union "will result in a spirit of unity". In the subsequent legislature session he had an opposition of only three—a Conservative, Social Credit and Independent member.

Mr. Garson has carried on with much the same administration, with the exception of the C.C.F. who withdrew support in 1943 after S. J. Farmer, the C.C.F. leader, resigned as labor minister. The withdrawal of support followed Mr. Bracken's acceptance of the Progressive Conservative party leadership.

At dissolution Sept. 8 there were nine opposition members in the legislature, including the C.C.F. with a group of three, a Conservative and independents.

Just before the 1932 general election, Mr. Bracken joined his Progressive followers with the Liberals. He kept his Progressive cabinet intact until after his government's re-election, and then made room for Liberal colleagues in the cabinet.

There were few party designations among Manitoba's early politicians. Manitoba's first government in 1870, under Premier Alfred Boyd, was a coalition administration and it was not until 1879 when John Norquay became premier that a political leader was identified by party affiliation. He was a Liberal-Conservative, but his supporters were identified merely as "government members".

The first regime with an official party affiliation was that of Premier T. Greenway who headed a Liberal government in 1900. Since then there have been two Conservative governments, a Liberal, a Progressive, a Liberal-Progressive, and finally the present coalition government.

The party standing after the Manitoba general election, April 22, 1941, follows: Government-Coalition—Lib. Prog. 26; Con. 13; C.C.F. 3; Social Credit 3; Ind. 6. Anti-Coalition—Con. 3; Ind. 1; Workers Committee 1.

Standing at dissolution, Sept. 8, 1945: Government-Coalition—Lib. Prog. 24, *Prog. Con. 12; Social Credit 3; Ind. 4. Anti-Coalition—C.C.F. 3; *Prog. Con. 2; Ind. C.C.F. 2; Lab. Prog. 1; Ind. 1. Vacant 3.

*Formerly Conservative.

English Railways Need More Teacups

London, Oct. 2 (CP)—A check-up of cups at English railway stations shows that if the present rate of loss continues there may soon me no cups at all.

One railway statistician said:-

Tigers and Cubs Work Out In Preparation for World Series That Opens Wednesday

Hal Newhouser and Hank Borowy Will be Mound Choices of Managers

By SID FEDER

Detroit, Oct. 2 — (AP) — The Tigers and the Cubs took their one and only pre-series look today at the baseball patch on which they start slugging tomorrow, leaving rooters by the thousands to finish the hottest 1945 World Series argument — how come all the Detroit optimism over what left-hand pitching can do to the Cubs?

The weather-man promised to keep the rain down tomorrow, when the first of three straight 55,000-sellout crowds cram the stadium here to see Lefty Hal Newhouser and Hank Borowy start the shooting. The forecast is for more rain Friday.

Since both teams have showed up, the rival managers weighed in with their predictions. Steve O'Neill tabbed the betting-favored Tigers in six games, and Jolly Cholly Grimm went for the Cubs, "but with none of this number of games stuff — we'll just play one game after the other until we're home."

It wasn't until the series clans started gathering last night and today that enough National Leaguers infiltrated Detroit to put up an argument concerning O'Neill's thoughts on how his southpaw service is going to break the Cubs' collective backs.

The Cub lineup sports a few ball-belters who hit from the knife side of the plate. Andy Pafko, for instance, has clouted a dozen homers and knocked in 111 runs; Peanuts Lowrey has sent 87 tallies home this year and Bob Johnson wound up with a .302 mark.

Detroit simmered down from its original delirium to simple insanity as it waited today, while the thousands pouring in hour by hour still spent their time looking for a place to hang their hats the next few nights.

Some half dozen of the baseball writers, whose reservations were made at one hotel three weeks ago, found themselves suddenly and summarily transferred to the two-lake steamers tied up along the waterfront handling the overflow.

ROYALS PLAYING LIKE CHAMPIONS, DEFEAT NEWARK

Jean Pierre Roy Allows Bears Two Hits and Mates Get 16 Safeties

Newark, N.J., Oct. 2 — (AP) — Montreal Royals and especially workhorse Jean Pierre Roy are beginning to play like champions again.

After losing three in a row to Newark Bears in the International League's final best-of-seven play-off, the pennant winners came back Sunday and last night to beat the Bears.

It was mainly through the efforts of Roy, a 25-game winner during the regular campaign but a bust in the play-offs until Sunday, that the Montrealers stood a chance to qualify for the Little World Series against the American Association's Louisville Colonels.

Roy stopped Newark cold with two hits while his mates were pounding three Bruin hurlers for 16 safeties last night for a 7-2 victory. Roy hurled a three-inning, no-hit relief job Sunday when Royals came from behind to win their first contest.

The teams travel today to Montreal. A seventh game if necessary also will be played in Montreal.

Joe Buzas' triple and Frank Drews' double were the only safeties made off Roy last night and both runs came in because of Salty Parker's errors. The Montreal second sacker made up his miscues, however, by leading the Montreal assault with three blows.

Roy pinned Newark for seven strikeouts and issued only three walks.

Canadian Sport Snapshot

By ALAN HARVEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 2 — (CP)—A 19-year-old Rumanian - Canadian, playing his freshman season in organized soccer after a couple of lack lustre years in high-school ranks, set one modern scoring mark in the Montreal League, is bidding for another as the season wanes and seems fairly certain to justify newspaper descriptions as the "soccer sensation of 1945."

Coming to Montreal from Cornwall, Ont., last fall, Andy Menyes brought an unimpressive high-school record and failed to impress in pre-season games with Montreal Wanderers. Suddenly, on May 20, Menyes started his streak. In a league game against Longueuil, he netted all seven goals as Wanderers took a 7 - 0 verdict and thus cracked the previous modern standard of 6 goals in a game.

Since then he's rolled the count to 45, two short of surpassing the modern season mark of 46 set by Paul Emile Castonguay in 1940. The all-time mark is believed to be the 60 recorded by a player named MacLaine with Montreal Carsteel in 1925.

Douglas (Montreal Star) Campbell says Menyes might develop into the most powerful scoring machine Montreal has even seen.

"He has everything it takes: — young, big enough to avoid being pushed around too easily; fast as a streak of lightning; willing to try anything once; a flair for being in the right place at the right time, and standing on the right foot; plus a fairly-accurate shot; that just about sums up the assets of the soccer sensation of 1945."

Around the Circuit:

Tommy (Windy) O'Neill, former National Hockey League forward with Toronto Maple Leafs, is bidding for a berth with St. Louis Flyers at Port Arthur. O'Neill came by the nickname after giving a professor at St. Michael's College in Toronto a lengthy harangue. The prof finally interrupted with a "sit down, Windy," and the monicker stuck . . . the box score of a New Brunswick baseball game between Saint John and St. Joseph must have been a headache for all concerned. The St. Joseph club had A. Gaudet in centrefield, J. Gaudet in right, R. Gaudet on first, P. Gaudet at short, Y. Gaudet in left, another A. — Albert this time — Gaudet pitching, R. Gaudet catching and still another A. Gaudet on third. Players named Belliveau and Leblanc, who somehow nudged into the lineup, must have felt out of place. Relationships between the Gaudets, incidentally, were not stipulated.

New York, Oct. 2 — (AP) — Ralph Ventresco, the only prewar player on the Penn State football squad, was declared ineligible the day before the opening game against Muhlenberg. The reason was that he had flunked too many courses in his last semester in college — in 1941 . . . in the interim he collected five battle stars fighting in Europe and once spent 115 days in a foxhole, but that won't get him back to the Varsity before Nov. 1 . . .

Mastering the Master Minds

Charley Grimm, Cubs — noted as a left-handed banjo player and a two-fisted conversationalist. Thinks he set a record in the Southern Association one year by playing second base left-handed and then catching with a left-hand mitt. That probably explains how he got through a couple of wartime seasons without being visible disturbed by left-handed thinking . . . Steve O'Neill, Tigers — not satisfied with coming from a town (Minooka, Pa.) and a family that specialize in producing ball players. Steve has a son-in-law, Skeeter Webb, playing shortstop (well, part of the time) on his ball club . . . maybe that's preparing an alibi the hard way. If the Tigers lose the World Series, O'Neill can blame his daughters.

Coach Happy Emms of St. Louis Flyers in the American Hockey League was not exactly happy last night at their Port Arthur training camp when he announced suspension of centre Maurey Rimstad and left-winger George Blake because of contract differences. Stan Robertson, centre, also left to join Hershey Bears.

Worth about $7,000, the American Stake for two-year-old trotters at Lexington, Ky., yesterday went to Deanna, bred, owned and driven by Gibson B. White, young harness devotee of Lexington. One heat was won in 2:04, fastest of the season for juvenile trotters.

The reinforcements comprised Reggie Hamilton, formerly of Toronto Leafs, Red Hamill of Toronto, late of Boston Bruins, Pete Horneck of Cleveland Barons, Dave McKay of Vancouver and Alex Kaleta, with the Hawks prior to army service.

Chips Off The Sports Block

Peterborough has been assured by the master-minds of the Toronto Maple Leafs baseball team that the Leafs will play in the Liftlock City next summer in a benefit game for the late Abbie Rose who died during the Josh Craig Memorial Game last summer..All the Petes have to do is get Riverside Park in shape as the Toronto management does not want to risk the limbs of high-priced help at a time when wins mean things in the International League..The idea should go over big and a large entourage from Belleville will likely make the trip....Don Boyle's fine hurling over the weekend drew the plaudits of the Hamilton sports writers..The kid was good letting the classy Hamilton youngsters down with four hits..But it should be remembered that the enemy has been "cold" for the past three weeks waiting for some opposition, and may pull a surprise here next Saturday when they play the return game at 3 o'clock. To offset that the Squires will have the added support of the home town and it is hoped a large crowd of fans..Word from Walt. Gerow, who with Leo and Vern Goyer is undergoing hockey training with the Providence Reds at Shawinigan Falls, says that forty hockey hopefuls are working out with the American Association League entry....Ralph "High Pockets" McCabe, ace hurler of the Wilksbarre entry in the Eastern Baseball Loop has been purchased by the Cleveland Indians with 1946 delivery..More about that later..Speaking of World's Series, the most boisterous World Series baseball game in history ended at Detroit 11 years ago today with the St. Louis Cardinals winning the seventh and deciding contest from the Tigers 11-0. Left-field bleacher fans, enraged after Joe Medwick's run-in at third base with Marvin Owen in the sixth inning, let loose a barrage of missiles and Medwick was taken from the game "for safety's sake."

John Katan, well-known villain of several wrestling drammers hereabouts is as mad as the proverbial damp biddy and threatens to throw everything at Earl McCready here on Wednesday night at the Hume Arena, including Walt Gerow and the box office.. "Fingers" claims he has several rasslin tricks at the bottom of the sack that as yet have not appeared and he will air them for the faithful in Wed's main go.. Knowing the "Moose" as we do, he won't take any of the Krafty Katans antics lying down (unless he has to) and it looks as though a lot of fur will fly in the get-together..Demitri of Montreal takes on Pat Flanagan, always a popular bloke with the fans here in the semi-final while the Ole Perennial Bunny Dunlop wil stage one of his shows with Walter Sirois. A pleasant evening wot? Larry MacPhail, has signed Joe McCarthy again, and hopes that Joe's popularity with the Yankee players will result in the welding together of a pennant winning gang come 1946.. It looks as thouh the "Lip" will stick with "dem Bums" again.. Stratford Kroehlers played Oshawa Mayfair Lanes, Point Anne conquerors in Oshawa yesterday.. No word yet as to the result.. Seems to be some hitch in the locale of the third Bata-Thornbury game..Oshawa was mooted but so far no word..The game was called off on Saturday here on account of wet grounds, but in the afternoon the sun shone and the game, according to those in the know could have been played Saturday gloaming....Or as in Hamilton a little "secret arrangement" for the game to be played the next day..Everyone being in the mood, of course.... McMillan, Oshawa's junior "B" hockey star has left for the Detroit Red Wings training camp... Six years ago, the New York Yankees, won their fourth straight world championship as they took advantage of a ninth inning collapse in the Cincinnati Reds fielding and won their fourth straight game in the 1939 world series by a score of 7-4. It was the ninth straight series game victory for the Yanks.

SPORT SHORTS FROM BRITAIN

By GORDON McKEAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

London, Oct. 2 (CP)—Norman Oldfield, noted Lancashire professional cricketer, is retiring from first-class cricket and taking over a hotel at Shaw near Oldham. He will play as an amateur for Crompton, where he played professionally for the past two seasons.

Oldfield's decision to leave first-class cricket came as a surprise. A stylish batsman, the 34-year-old player was a star on the Lancashire team for some years before the Second Great War. He was born at Dukinfield, near Manchester, and made his debut in first-class cricket 10 years ago.

Oldfield hit the highest score this season against the Australians—171—and was almost certain to have been given a place on the English team which will be chosen next summer for an Australian tour the following winter.

The New Zealand Services' Rugby Club, which will tour Britain this winter, is composed of players now in Italy. The men were scheduled for further service in Japan, but the war's end enabled them to arrange for the British tour.

After the tour the New Zealanders hope to arrange games on the continent with British Army of the Rhine teams and later an international game with France.

Recent alterations in rugby laws, announced by the Rugby Union, and confirmed by the international board, will come into force this season. Law 15, relating to the scrimmage, has been amended to read, "It is illegal for a foot of any player in either front row to touch the ball until it is fairly in. The far foot of the second player, of each front row on the side on which the ball is being put in, and the feet of the player beyond, may be raised and advanced until the ball has been touched by one of these feet."

Formerly it was illegal for any player in either front row to raise or advance his foot until the ball was fairly in.

Another change is in Law 27, concerning touch. Formerly the side not responsible for the ball going into touch could choose a scrum instead of a throw-in for restarting play but the amendment cancels the privilege.

The first greyhound hurdle race at White City since 1939 was won by Derryboy Jubilee, who covered the 525 yards in the fast time of 30.5 seconds.

Tynecastle Football Club players' wages were stolen from a safe in the club manager's office recently. Club officials said they believed five or six people were involved in the theft.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 796
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

A partner who shines in defence reduces your bridge loss expense. For, just when your luck seems forsaken, he steps out and brings home the bacon.

See the defence in this deal:

WEST	NORTH	EAST
	♠K 6 3 2 ♥Q 9 8 ♦9 5 4 ♣A 6 5
♠J 10 9 7 ♥J 4 ♦K 8 7 6 ♣Q J 9		♠Q 8 4 ♥7 5 ♦J 10 3 2 ♣10 7 4 2
	SOUTH ♠A 5 ♥A K 10 6 3 2 ♦A Q ♣K 8 3

South is declarer at six hearts. West leads a spade. There is a loser in clubs. If a diamond finesse fails, down goes the slam. Only a strip-and-endplay may avoid the finesse. He plans it.

The first trick is taken with the spade ace. After two rounds of trumps, dummy wins with the spade king and a dummy spade is then trumped by south. The club ace wins and south trumps the last dummy spade.

Taking the club king, south leads the third club. West wins with the club king and is endplayed. He must now lead a diamond right into the jaws of the south ace-queen tenace. That is how it is planned.

But west was an experienced defender when this deal was played. As declarer started stripping suits, the purpose was apparent to him. So, he worked a counter plot to frustrate the aim.

When the first club was led, west played the jack on it. On the second club trick, west dropped the queen. That left the way open for east to take the third club and lead a diamond. A bypass.

Where topgrade bridge is in session, such unblocks are not so surprising. When declarer begins stripping suits, opponents get a tip-off as to what they are likely to be up against.

That starts defenders signalling each other with discards. They tell each other what suits they can protect. Then the player who is likely to be thrown in takes steps to get out from under.

Of course, a defending pair must not be looking out of the window when all this is going on. Like in this case, east should be wise to the need of overtaking the west nine of clubs.

A hint to the wise prevents a surprise.

Eire Letter

By ALAN MONTGOMERY
(Canadian Press Correspondent)

Dublin, Ont. 2 (CP)—Eire is watching with anxious eyes the outcome of Anglo-American financial talks in Washington.

Financially Eire is just as much a part of the United Kingdom as, say, northern Ireland or Scotland. Her financial dependence on Britain has become intensified in the last six years. Many in Dublin believe that bomb-battered Britain is broke and many also elieve that she has had a "raw deal" from the United States as a result of the abrupt termination of lend-lease.

Eire has accumulated sterling assets in London to the tune of £154,000,000 ($693,000,000) although before the war she was a debtor country to Britain.

AT THE McCARTHY — Joseph Schildraut and Ona Munson in a scene from "The Cheaters," now at the McCarthy Theatre, a heart-warming, romantic comedy. The second feature is "The Road to Alcatraz."

The situation caused by the end of lend-lease will have a profound effect on Eire's economy if a settlement is not reached. All the post-war planning will come to nothing. Almost all Eire's foreign trade is done either directly through Britain or in British ships. And Eire, tied hand and foot to sterling, has no dollars with which to carry on direct trade with the United States.

The suggestion has been made that Eire might obtain a loan from the United States to buy American goods, but for a variety of reasons this is unlikely. Financially Eire probably will sink or swim with sterling.

Premier De Valera's recent declaration that Eire is a republic can hardly be fully appreciated without a little knowledge or recent Irish history.

Southern Ireland's Nationalist forces were united before 1921 in the fight for self-government. After talks with the British government, a treaty was proposed under which self-government was established for the 26 counties of Eire.

The treaty provided the Irish Free State should have autonomy in its own affairs and membership in the British Empire. The King was head of the empire in which Mr. De Valera's delegates in London had accepted membership.

Mr. De Valera opposed ratification of the treaty, which was approved by a majority. Bitterness betwen those for and against the treaty led to civil war and Mr. De Valera's irregulars opposed the forces of the infant state. He and his followers refused to attend meetings of the Dial after being elected, their chief objection being that they would have to take an oath of allegiance to the King.

In 1927 Mr. De Valera decided to enter the Dail, describing the oath to the King as "an empty formula." At that time he proposed an alternative to the treaty, his document No. 2 containing the novel proposal for "external association" with the British Empire. The proposal was scorned and Mr. De Valera's pride was hurt.

In 1937 when proposing his constitution for Eire he said, looking at the opposition benches: "This is like gall and wormwood to you and I am glad to administer it."

He has, then, got his document No. 2 under which has developed the comic-opera situation of being neither in nor out of the Commonwealth. The King is both accepted and rejected. People still are amazed that Mr. De Valera never mentioned the word "Republic" in the last 7 1-2 years either orally or in the written constitution.

Hamilton Actor Overnight Success In Bell for Adano

By NORMAN CRIBBENS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 2 — (CP)—Robert Beatty, 35-year-old actor from Hamilton, Ont., scored an overnight success in the play, "A Bell for Adano," adapted from the novel by John Hersey and presented to an enthusiatic first-night audience at the Phoenix Theatre.

Beatty, who began his theatrical career at the Little Theatre in Hamilton, gives a magnificent performance as Maj. Jopolo, an American in charge of Adano, a small Sicilian town, who brings food and water to the starving inhabitants two weeks after invasion.

His tactics, however, bring him into conflict with the military machine. He loses his job but retains the self-respect of one who has done his best.

Beatty took four curtain calls from a warmly appreciative audience the first night. It is his first major leading role.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma took me downtown in the car on account of having to do some shopping, partly for me, and half ways home ma stopped to give a soldier a lift, ma saying My, you seem to of won a lot of decoration.

Meening all the different color bars pinned on his chest, and the soldier said, Yessum, would you like me to tell you what some of the different ones are for?

Why yes, indeed but first I'd like to get something off my own chest, if you'll pardon a vulgar expression, ma said. Now that the war is finally over, I think I'll give way to the luxury of relieving my feelings. You boys went through practically everything, including shell shock, but did you ever hear of market shock? she said, and the soldier said, Mam? No mam.

Well, there are millions of women that can tell you all about it if they have recovered enough strength to speak, ma said. More than once I thought I'd never get out alive, with only 4 starved looking lamb chops visible in the butcher's case and 50 desperate women, all with hungry families hanging in the ballence, fighting to be the first one served. I've been stabbed in the back with sharp market baskits and I've had my one and only pair of nylon stockings torn, and if you dont realize the significance of that, it's only because of your innocence. You boys have done a lot of waiting in line for a lot of reasons, but did you ever forget to buy a loaf of bread and then have to go back and wait another full half hour more dead than alive while 10 heavily loaded women filed passed the cashier? she said, and the soldier said, No mam.

I thought not, ma said. You've been deprived of many things, but you've never been deprived of the odds and ends of rubber trimming so dear to a woman's wardrobe, and then been asked to be satisfied with substitutes that must of been made by some by product of chewing gum. But please tell me about your decorations, she said.

Which he didn't, claiming that was as far as he wanted to go.

Jap Sergeant, Mad as March Hare, Made Life Tolerable for Canadians

By WILLIAM STEWART
(C. P. War Correspondent.)

Guam, Oct. 2 (CP-Via-U. S. Navy Radio) — For a long while after the sergeant who was in charge of rations at Oyama prison camp introduced himself to the Canadians in good English, they feared and despised him. As months went by they realized he was their only source of comic relief and they would have been disappointed to lose him.

The sergeant who was as mad as a March hare, often lined the Canadians up for little quizzes with such questions as "how high is Mount Everest?" The quizzes invariably ended with the sergeant asking how many of the men wanted to go home.

When all the Canadians raised their hands at that, the Japanese would have them sing the National Anthem.

Sometimes, in a frisky mood, he would dash out of his hut and race through the snow to plunge headfirst over a fence into a drift. He then would pop out in front of the prisoners walking to work at the factory and lead them there prancing along on the double.

The sergeant, who favored the Nazi salute, once held a roll call of hospital patients with everyone stripped. Prisoners now at Guam on their way home, split their sides recalling how the sergeant would burst out on the parade ground in the early morning with his head close to the ground like a bloodhound, dash about aimlessly for a few minutes and then disappear again.

Nurse Tells of Eight-Hour Battle To Remove Children From Ship Afire

Port Said, Egypt, Oct. 2 (AP)—A 27-year-old nurse one of the last persons to leave the flaming refugee ship Empire Patrol, told of an eight-hour battle to transfor nearly 500 children and elderly persons to a British aircraft carrier in a rolling sea.

Lieut. Arlene M. Waldhous of Cleveland, of the United States Public Health Service, described the rescue work when the 3,300-ton ship caught fire Saturday off Port Said while returning refugees to the Dodecanese Islands. Officers of the British baby flattop Trouncer praised her efforts.

Lieut. Waldhous said fire broke out about noon. Hearing screams from the cabins, one deck below the promenade deck, she ran down and helped take out women and children. She took one badly-burned woman to the dining room and smeared her body with butter. The woman and her bay later were taken over the side in a stretcher.

The nurse said she was "reasonably sure" all the children were rescued. Many passengers jumped overboard before all the lifeboats were launched, she recounted.

Revised Royal Navy figures showed 522 rescued out of a total of 568 reported aboard. Two of the 49-man crew are unaccounted for. Salvage men reported that the ship, still on fire Monday, was in no danger of sinking, but practically beyond repair.

Globester Passes Half-Way Mark Around World

By PAUL MILLER

Manila, Oct. 2 — (AP) — The Globester "jumped the hump" of China today, passed the half-way mark in its flight around the world, and hit the long Pacific trail for the United States, reaching Manila at 1:25 p. m. Manila time (11:25 p. m. Monday E.S.T.)

Arriving here after their 1,415-mile hop from Kunming, China, passengers had a three-hour stop before boarding a new plane — the Bataan Meteor — for the 1,587-mile flight to Guam. The new plane took off for Guam at 4:46 p.m., Manila time (2:46 a.m. E. S.T.).

It was the second plane change since the Globester run started from Washington last Friday — the first flight in the first regular globe-circling service of the United States Army Transport Command.

Another change of planes will be made at San Francisco as the flight moves toward the conclusion of its race to circle the earth at 150 miles an hour.

CHAPTER 6

Elaine had stopped listening to him. With deep anger inside her, she picked up a pen and scratched her name on the agreement.

"There," she said, sliding it back to him. "Now it's all your play. You won't be embarrassed by having to put my name on the program, too."

Lee stood up and somehow his shoulders seemed to sag from an invisible weight. "We'll mail your check out tonight. You undertsand that this frees us of all claim you might make toward royalties."

"Get out," Elaine said in a rasping whisper. "Get out of my office."

The winter months moved quickly and the freshness and green that was spring had settled in its place. True, Elaine had to admit, she couldn't see much of the trees and the flowers from her office window overlooking W. 42nd. But there was the clean smell in the air, and somehow bits of it drifted through the haze and murk of the huge city.

She had just finished reading a play and preparing her summary of it for Brann. She was tired and glad that in a few weeks Brann would close the offices, take up his headquarters for the summer in the coolness and shade of his country home. Her assignment was to pick a summer stock show and scout it. If a play looked good, then she was to inform Brann. If an actor or actress showed promise, Brann was to know. Her salary continued. She liked the job and had a feeling of contented happiness.

That the fire, or spirit, or whatever it was called, was lacking, Elaine shrugged aside. But her pride was punctured whenever she saw the little ads Warren ran in newspapers and magazines about Lee's play. It had been a success and had run through the winter months with a good box office showing. The critics' reviews held mild praise, but it wasn't written for them. It was written for the customers, and there seemed to be plenty of them.

What really hurt, she guessed, was the success Karen was attaining as the star of the show. She had not seen Lee since the day she had signed the agreement. It had been even longer since she'd seen Karen. They had slipped out of her life. Or rather, she knew, she had been cut out of theirs. They were successes, and she, who had fought their ideas, was sitting in a quiet and cool office reading plays instead of having one of her own on Broadway.

She pinned the summary of the play she had just finished reading on a memo to Brann and let herself slump down in the desk chair. Slowly she pulled out a desk drawer, withdrew a script book and stared at it.

For a few moments she flipped the typewritten pages without reading them. Then she rose, her chin firm, her eyes brighter than they had been for months. She smoothed out her dress, cast a hasty glance in a compact mirror, and headed for Brann's office.

He was checking books with an accountant when she walked in. He smiled at her, waved her to a chair, then continued examining the figures.

Finally the accountant stood up, slammed the books shut, and grinned at Brann. "Year after year, Anthony, it's the same thing. You always show a profit. I don't know why you bother me. All you need to do is take the money from the cashier at the ticket window, keep out some for expenses, and walk to the nearest bank. Do that every day and you'll be president of a bank."

Brann grinned like a small school boy. "Confidentially, Roger. I'm a director at my bank. Well, it's been a good year. We'll hope for the same next season."

The accountant shook hands with Brann, smiled at Elaine and left the room.

Brann faced her. "Well, what's my favorite reader got to show today? Oh, before I forget it, Minnie wants you out for a few weeks before you hit the straw hat circuit. Call her before you leave and make a date. She'll either have house guests for you, or complete quiet and rest. Personally, I think you've had enough quiet—"

Elaine broke in. "Mind your your own business, pappy. But it's grand of Minnie. I'll call after I talk with you."

Brann leaned back, bit the end off a fresh cigar and looked happy. Elaine liked him tremendously. He had been good to her without seeming benevolent. And he had taught her much about the theatre without seeming like a school professor.

"Start talking. Have something hot for me to open with in the fall?"

Elaine shrugged. "I've got a play. How good I don't know."

Brann grunted paternally. "That's what I hire readers for. So I'll know without spending every night at home reading ham plays. What's with this play?"

"It's mine," Elaine said quietly.

Brann did not move except to chew his cigar into another corner of his mouth. His eyes were staring at the oil portrait of his daughter. His hands were clasped gently in front of him. He was motionless for so long that Elaine thought he had gone to sleep.

Finally he took his glasses off and rubbed the red spots on his nose.

"I've been wondering how long it would take you to bring it into me." He sat erect in his chair, held out his hand. "Give it to me. I'll read it through and let you know." His voice was busy and neat, like the first impression Elaine had gotten of him.

Elaine got scared for a moment and held the play stiffly in her hands. Then she rose, handed him the book and walked out of the office, the deep carpeting swishing softly against her shoes.

She did not see Brann settle back in his chair, loosen his tie, relight his cigar and open the script book. His face was shining a little and he looked pleased.

Minnie Brann looked a lot like her husband. Short, a little fat and quite friendly. She had thick black hair and a plain yet elegant face and she did not try to look young. She was comfortable to be with, and if she made you laugh she was happy.

Elaine was propped on a stool in the gleaming kitchen, watching her stir up a cake while a cook was busy with a roast on the other side of the large room.

"I'm glad you'll be here for a few weeks.. It's lonely sometimes without the children around. But Dorothy insisted on spending some time at this camp She's got to have a life saving badge yet." She sighed and fell silent for awhile.

Elaine stared at the spacious, landscaped gardens behind the house. The smell of flowers, of all kinds of flowers, of more flowers than she had known existed, rushed through the open window and back door. She sighed too.

Minnie Brann looked up. "What are you signing about? You haven't got children who don't want to come home, have you? So don't sigh. A girl your age should sigh over nothing, unless it's a nice young man."

Elaine chuckled. "Well, why doesn't your handsome son come home?"

Minnie stopped stirring the cake and leaned against the table, her eyes serious. "He's just like his father. Once they get their heart set on something they don't know what it is to rest until they've got it. Dick's got to continue with school this summer, he says to mama. If he's going to be a high-class lawyer with offices in the Empire Building, he says to mama, he's got nothing better to do than enter Harvard law school right away."

She paused, looked at Elaine "First Princeton, then Harvard. Anthony never had even a high school education. It's a big feeling inside of you, Elaine, to see your children have something you couldn't. It's a proud feeling."

Elaine watched the little woman return to mixing the cake. Maybe she hadn't had her play on Broadway yet, like Lee and Karen, but she knew people like Anthony and Minnie Brann. She had a proud feeling, too.

They called them barns, the places the summer stock shows were produced, and maybe they were. They were big, ugly, sometimes hazard buildings, and not always cool. They dotted the cooler sections of the New England states.

Elaine drove the little coupe that Brann had loaned her with steady monotony from one production company to another. She had watched old plays with amateurs and new plays with veterans trying for comebacks. Some had been good, most of them bad.

But they served their purpose of entertaining the rich and poor who lived near the theatres. They were summer entertainment once or twice a week that had a touch of Broadway.

It was a little town called Glendale in New Hampshire that she met Paul Mason. And didn't like him. She met him in the dining room of the little hotel. She met him quite by accident. He knocked her down the three steps leading into the dining room from the lobby and she had sprained her ankle.

It was hot, even for northern New Hampshire, that morning. And the glaring run in her expensive silk stockings did nothing to help matters.

She looked up at him from her half-sitting, half-lying position on the dining room floor, ignoring the diners who had rushed up to help, and rubbed her ankle.

"You are positively the most awkward man I've ever seen," she growled between winces of pain. "Any man who knocks a woman over while he is simply putting on his hat is downright clumsy."

"Look," he was saying from the top of the three steps, the embarrassed flush still reaching to the temples of his angular face. "Look, I've been standing here five minutes apologizing to you and calling a doctor, and time keeping your eyes glued on that—that—." He bent it has just occurred to me that you were marching in here like this was still the Civil War and you were Sherman and the dining room was Georgia—all the forward a little and looked at the opened play book by her side. "An actress!" He spat out.

The doctor came and Elaine was taken to her room and the ankle was beginning to throb less, although it still felt like somebody's head the morning after any particular New Year's eve.

She was propped up in her bed, staring crossly at the wall in front of her. A long distance call had been placed to Brann's home. He wouldn't mind so much, she knew, but it would be funny and she didn't feel very much like being funny for anybody.

It was while considering all this that Paul Mason tapped on her door. He walked in slowly, almost furtively.

"Look," he said.

"Must you always start talking by saying 'Look'?" Elaine glared at him, poked her ankle into plainer view.

He stared moodily at the ankle. He was a big man, tall and broad at the shoulders, narrow at the hips. His hair was dark red, auburn really, and he had clear brown eyes that smiled easily. He was neither handsome nor ordinary. His nose looked a little bent and his mouth was thin but with character, though a little wide. At the moment, his whole being looked sorry.

"I came here to apologize for what I said downstairs." His voice sounded a bit strained.

Had Headaches, Backache; Felt Fatigued and Rundown

Food Soured in Stomach and Caused Heartburn, Acidity and Headaches. Tells How Syntona Helped Him.

My system was rundown, I couldn't sleep well and felt terribly tired and nervous," said Mr. James Miller, a well-known citizen of Freelton, Ontario, in a recent statement.

"Food soured in my stomach, giving me a bloated feeling, with heartburn and shortness of breath. I seemed to be always needing something for constipation and I was subject to headaches and backache.

"Several weeks ago I started taking Syntona and I began to improve steadily. Even in a few days I noticed I was having less and less distress from sour acid risings and heartburn. Now, my appetite has picked up so that I relish my meals once more. Syntona relieved my constipation, along with that troublesome suffering with backache and headaches and my nerves are relaxed, so I sleep more soundly at night and get up mornings feeling more rested and refreshed.

"I gladly give my experience for the benefit of others who may be suffering in this same way."

If you, who read this, suffer as Mr. Miller did, get a bottle of Syntona today and find out how it can also help you. It is made from the pure liquid extracts of 12 of Nature's Finest Herbal plants and roots and acts on the stomach, kidneys, liver, bowels Aids in the elimination of excess acids and impurities from the system and promotes better assimilation of food for increased strength and energy.

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST. Find out how it can help you, too.

Canadian Bacon Needs Advertising In British Market

London, Oct. 2 —(CP)— Probably the most savory dish found in Britain's bare post-war larder is represented by the four ounces a person of bacon available weekly—usually by the grace of Canada.

The Food Ministry has recognized this appreciation of bacon in a series of advertisements suggesting recipes "to make a little bacon go a long way." One rasher of fat bacon, plus four ounces of plain flour, baking powder, salt and herbs is said—by the Ministry—to result in bacon turnovers sufficient for four. Three ounces of fat bacon, one-half pound of mashed potatoes, two tablespoons of chopped parsley and onions, salt and pepper make "a substantial and warming breakfast on a cold day" —for four persons.

Like Irish Hams.

Shopkeepers say that many British buyers do not know their treasured bacon comes from Canada. Even persons handling large quantities of bacon may fail to notice the "Canada" stamped on Wiltshire sides which of course disappears when the bacon is sliced for sale to the housewife.

One agent, who purchases for a large group of Glasgow stores, said he could remember Canadian bacon shipments during the First Great War and the quality of the Dominion product now on sale was "incomparably better."

Irish hams have been considered "tops" by some in the bacon trade with English Wiltshire sides running second. The Canadian Wiltshires, this agent said he believed, were up to the standards of the best English, and when Canadian hams became better known they would be accepted and approved as being as good as the Irish product.

During the height of the wartime food crisis some fat United States bacon was placed on the British market, and, being called "American," was taken by some housewives to include bacon sent from Canada. This was unfortunate, shopkeepers said. They recognized that the Canadian standard of quality had been retained and fat bacon had not been included in Canadian shipments.

Canadian firms producing bacon are anxious to have their packaged products appear on the United Kingdom market, but this will not be possible until relaxation of existing controls imposed to facilitate bulk buying.

Persons with experience in pre-war bacon trade said they were confident that Canadian bacon could compete with that of Denmark in the future, providing that housewives become aware that the bacon they have enjoyed in recent years usually came from the Dominion.

Some Danish bacon already is appearing on the British market, and Canada, anxious to retain at least part of the gigantic trade built up in the war years, looks on the Danes as her main competitors.

HITCHHIKING SOLDIER STEALS CAMERA

There is gratitude — and gratitude and various people have divers ways of showing it.

For instance there is the case of Charles Kery, Rossmore, who, when returning from a trip to Toronto yesterday, gave a soldier a lift from Cobourg to this city.

While in Toronto, Kery had purchased an expensive camera complete with case.

When he arrived at his home the case was intact — but the camera was missing. The soldier had got out of the car in Belleville, and while in the back seat of the car had apparently extracted the camera from its case.

Asks Hasty Pees 'Originals' March As Part of Unit

Lieut.-Col. Donnan, chairman of the Belleville and District Reception Committee, received a cable this morning from Major George Allen Ross, D.S.O., acting commanding officer of the First Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment en route to this city, to the effect that he requested the "originals" of the battalion who have been repatriated, to march as a "part" of the battalion and not with it.

In other words Major Ross desires that the originals already here will be absorbed into the various companies and platoons of the unit and march with their former comrades, instead of parading as a separate unit behind the regiment as was originally scheduled.

Lt.-Col. Donnan has made arrangements so that Major Ross' request will be carried out.

Manpower Picture Changing Rapidly In the Dominion

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP)—Release of war workers and the discharge of service personnel is rapidly changing the manpower picture to the point where the provision of jobs for workers is of more pressing importance than finding workers for jobs, the Labor Department said last night in a review of the employment situation.

The statement made these disclosures:-

1. The number of applicants for employment not yet placed had passed the 120,000-mark while vacancies available have decreased to 155,000.

2. Although salary adjustments are making placement of released war workers somewhat difficult, there is a growing tendency to accept employment in plants engaged in civilian production.

3. There now are more than 41,000 unfilled vacancies for women workers, with fewer than 31,000 unplaced applicants.

4. Many of those seeking employment at present are unsuited for the work offered or are unwilling to leave their homes in places where there is not sufficient local employment to ensure their placement.

Opening New Plants.

To meet the reversal of conditions, Arthur MacNamara, Director of National Selective Service, has directed all employment offices to transfer the emphasis of their activity to the finding of suitable openings for applicants.

Plans also are being made for the opening of new plants as well as the conversion of others from wartime to peacetime output.

The logging industry had unfilled vacancies for about 23,000 bushmen, of whom 8,000 were needed in Quebec and 7,000 in Ontario. There was "almost unlimited opportunity" for placement in woods' work in every province, particularly in British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec.

Recent mass lay-offs of highly-trained workers in Ontario war plants had swelled the numbers of unplaced applicants in the Windsor, Toronto and Oshawa areas. Almost 38,000 jobs were listed with employment service offices throughout Ontario against 27,000 applicants. However, many of the vacancies offered required only unskilled labor.

21ST BATTALION WILL HOLD RE-UNION IN KINGSTON NEXT YEAR

The 28th annual re-union of the 21st Battalion C.E.F., will be held in Kingston in 1946, it was decided during the last annual meeting held in Toronto at the Prince George Hotel on Saturday. A large gathering from all parts of Ontario and the United States attended the meeting.

With Kingston as the birthplace of the battalion, a large delegation from that centre was present at the meeting stressing that the Limestone City should be the scene of the 1946 re-union.

POLICE BLOTTER

Tire thieves continue to be active in the city according to complaints registered with the local police department. Stafford Holbert, Catherine Street, parked his auto on the Belle Theatre parking lot and when he returned for his vehicle both front tires and rims were missing.

A motorist driving down Charlotte Street on Monday apparently lost control of his vehicle with result that it mounted the curb and crashed into a tree. A woman passenger then took over the wheel and drove away before the arrival of the police.

Arthur Gordanier, Stirling, had the front end of his auto badly damaged when it went out of control on Dundas Street, West, striking a hydro pole breaking it off. The car then continued for a distance of 45 feet before it came to rest. The radiator and grill were damaged, while the bumper and right corner of the frame were bent.

80,000 Jews Gassed or Burned To Death in Belsen One Night, Jewish Physician Says at Trial

Lueneburg, Germany, Oct. 2 — (CP)—A Jewish physician testifying at the Belsen War Crimes trial said 80,000 Jews, representing the entire ghetto of Lodz, Poland were gassed or burned to death in one night at the concentration camp.

Dr. Sigismund Charles Bendell, the witness, said the Germans had designed a system of trenches with a capacity for the burning of 1,000 human bodies an hour. He said he was ordered to work in crematorium No. 4 in August, 1944.

Testifying that prisoners were herded unknowingly into the gas chambers, Bendell said:

"After the gas arrived, doors open leading to two rooms with low ceilings and for the first time victims in the waiting room realize they are going to death.

Crowded in Gas Chambers.

"They are crowded into the rooms by guards with sticks. The doors close. There are shouts, screams, cries and knocking on the wall. This lasts for two minutes—then complete silence. Five minutes later the doors open, but only after 20 minutes can special workers get near to remove the bodies.

"The bodies fall out and are almost impossible to separate from each other.

"They fought horribly against death.

"The workers begin removing bodies—still warm, covered with blyood, human excrements. Then the bodies must go to the barber and dentist. Hair is removed, all teeth aer pulled out before they are cremated. Those who were unable to enter the overcrowded gas chamber were lined to near trenches and shot.

Says Kramer Commandant.

Asked by the prosecutor who was commandant of the camp during this period, the witness replied: "Kramer."

Josef Kramer is the chief of 45 defendants.

Bendell said that 500 persons were shot in the neck by S. S. Guards and added that Kramer was present at the mass killing.

He described how S. S. Dr. Mengle carried on experiments in the crematorium before prisoners were put to death.

"He experimented with injections trying to discover a drug which would cause instantaneous death," Dr. Bendell said.

The S. S. doctor was also interested in experiments to find a formula which would guarantee that mothers would give birth to twins.

"He was especially interested in twins. He would experiment with them, but that was not enough. He wanted to see them dead and took delight in looking at them.

Prosecutor T. M. Backhouse announced he expected to wind up his case against Josef Kramer, Belsen and Oswelcim camp leader and other defendants by Wednesday.

Joe Louis Back In Civvies, Trim, Fit at 219 Lbs.

Heavyweight Champ Sure He Can Hit as Hard as Before He Went in Army

By JACK HAND

New York, Oct. 2 —(AP)— Joe Louis is back in civvies, trim and fit at 219 pounds, and sure he can hit just as hard as he could before he entered the army in January, 1942.

The heavyweight champion of the world celebrated his return to civilian life by attending last night's Freddie Schott-John Thomas bout at the St. Nicholas Arena, only six hours after his discharge at Camp Shanks, N.Y.

The champ's pockets bulged with his first pay day in a year, $1,422.59 plus $1.10 train fare from camp to city, and he had visions of cutting himself a piece of a $3,000,000 gate next summer for his return bout with Billy Conn.

"I don't feel no different than when I fought Abe Simon three years ago right after I got in the army," drawled burly Joe. "I might be a little bit slower but I know I can hit just the same.

"What'll I do first?" he answered a reporter. "I'm catching the first train to Detroit to see the Tigers clean up those Cubs in six games. Hal Newhouser is going to win two. After that I'm coming back here for a conference with Uncle Mike (Jacobs) and then I'm off to California for two or three months."

Joe talked in his customary short takes, prodded along by numerous queries from the boxing writers who wanted to know if he was going to have any tune-up fights before the Conn battle.

"That's all up to Uncle Mike," Louis said. "If Conn is going to have a warm-up, then I'll have one too."

Jacobs admitted he would be much happier if neither Louis nor Conn fights until they meet next June.

General Crerar Will Leave Army In Two Months

By JACK BRAYLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Oct. 2 (CP) — Gen. Crerar, former commander of the 1st Canadian Army, expects to have his desk cleared away in the next two months and has asked for his retirement to become effective as soon as this work is completed. He has no idea what he will do in the future, but is certain he won't enter politics.

The job of sorting official and personal documents and preparing a complete fyle both for the defence headquarters and the official war record is a tedious task and the painstaking general is doing his usual thorough job.

The documents tell the story of the Canadian campaigns and are thus a part of Canadian history. But they also contain the formation of the country's first full army organization in history and thus are a valuable library of information for army plans of the future.

The general would not speak of his future and said he had heard nothing of speculation on what he might do. This speculation had included appointment to the diplomatic service, presidency of a university and an official in veterans work.

"Those stories are news to me," he said. "Just now I want to get re-acquainted with my country." He has been out of Canada 18 of the last 30 years.

Gen. Crerar will be feted by his hometown of Hamilton, Ont., Oct. 10 and 11, while on Oct. 19 he will visit the Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont., of which he was a former commandant. The following day he will receive an Honorary Degree from Queen's University, Kingston.

Tentative dates—Nov. 6-7—have been set for a civic reception at Toronto. It is possible he may visit other Canadian cities and towns for appearances or receptions.

RepublicansClaim Roosevelt Played Important Part

Washington, Oct. 2 (AP)—Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee said Monday the late President Roosevelt "played an important part" in his son Elliott's $200,000 loan from John A. Bartford, grocery chain executive.

Further, the minority group said, Mr. Roosevelt "initiated" the $4,000 settlement.

The Republicans expressed their opinion in a dissenting report made public as the House awaited filing of the full record on the "bad debt" case. Advance copies of the minority report only were made available to newspapermen.

Committee Democrats told reporters the complete testimony—more than 1,000 pages—probably would be filed this afternoon. They said a statement by Elliott in the record would take an opposite view from that expressed by the Republicans regarding the role played by his father in the matter. No detailed information was made available in advance regarding this testimony, however, in a public statement several weeks ago young Roosevelt denied that his father ever "promoted or assisted" his business affairs.

Says Hirohito Much Impressed By MacArthur

By JACK SMITH

Tokyo, Oct. 2 (Reuters) — The text of the "most cordial" conversation which transpired between Gen. MacArthur and Emperor Hirohito during the Emperor's recent visit to Gen. MacArthurs residence was disclosed to be by a Japanese Home Office spokesman who hinted that the Allied commander will call on the Emperor at the Imperial Palace shortly.

The spokesman, who asked that his name should not be disclosed, said Gen: MacArthur had made "a tremendous impression' on the Emperor, who had availed himself of the opportunity personally to thank the Supreme Commander for the way in which he had carried out the occupation, "without a single incident."

"Gen. MacArthur in turn expressed the opinion that the smooth occupation was really due to the Emperor's leadership," the spokesman said.

"He added that he was most thankful it had not resulted in any bloodshed."

The Supreme Commander and Emperor Hirohito were in complete agreement that had invasion been found necessary, it would have resulted in the loss of thousands of lives on both sides and in the complete destruction of Japan.

"The Emperor was particularly impressed that Gen. MacArthur did not make any reference as to who was responsible for the war."

If the Supreme Commander returns the courtesy of the Japanese Emperor by calling on him at the Imperial Palace he will be the first foreign military commander to be entertained there since the present Emperor received Marshal Phillipe Petain in 1925.

British Children Can Leave School Up Till '47 at 14

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

London, Oct. 2 (CP) — Until 1947 British children will continue to leave school at 14 if they wish—simply because of the inability of the authorities to make arrangements to care for additional students who will remain in class rooms when the leaving age is raised to 15.

The new Labor Government of Britain has a legacy—which it appreciates—from the Churchill caretaker government, raising the school leaving age to 15. There were hopes this legislation could be made effective speedily. The education minister in the Labor government, Miss Ellen Wilkinson, has announced, however, that this cannot be done before April 1, 1947.

The number of children in England and Wales who will get an extra year's schooling when the age is raised, is estimated at 390,000 and the teachers required at 13,000. Provision for 50,000 additional students and 1,800 teachers must be made in Scotland.

Even if the leaving age is raised on April 1, 1947, the full effect on school rolls may not be evident until September, 1948.

20,000 Teachers needed.

English and Welsh teachers returning from the forces, likely to number 20,000, are needed to replace the abnormal wastage among staffs. An emergency teacher training course is planned for one year and if the target of 20 colleges is achieved by the end of January, 1946, the plan would produce about 3,500 teachers by early 1947. With another 20 colleges open in 1946, the total output would pass the 13,000 mark by mid-1948.

In England and Wales alone it is estimated that buildings required to accommodate the additional compulsory school year will cost £6,500,000 ($29,025,000).

Miss Wilkinson said that raising the school leaving age to 16 cannot be contemplated until the size of classes has been generally reduced and therefore it is impossible to set a date for this reform.

Hasty Pees Arrive At 9 A.M. Thursday At C. N. R. Station

Will Parade as Unit Thru City, Reception at the Armouries

The 1st Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment will arrive at the Canadian National North Station on Thursday at approximately 9.00 a.m. it was officially announced today.

The regiment will detrain at the Canadian National Railways Station at approximately 9.00 a.m., from two troop trains which will arrive within an hour of each other.

Originals and other active service personnel of the regiment who are already in the district will parade at the Armouries under Major R. J. Graham at 8.00 a.m. The parade will march to the C.N.R. station with the Canadian Legion branch and The Army and Navy Veterans to arrive at least thirty minutes before time of arrival.

The enclosure at the station will be roped off and closed to the public at least two hours before the arrival of the train.

Requested Not to Break Through

The general public is requested not to break through the roped enclosure as this will make difficult the forming up of the regiment following detrainment.

Following the marching on of the Colors including the Battle Flag, the regiment, other troops and the veterans will march down Station Street to Front Street; down Front Street to Victoria Avenue, east on Victoria Avenue to Pinnacle Street; south on Pinnacle Street past the reviewing stand in front of the County Court House to Campbell; west on Campbell to Front Street and south on Front to Bridge. The regiment will turn east on Bridge Street and form up in battalion line between Church and Pinnacle Streets.

Here a brief ceremony will be held and the regiment dismissed to join the next-of-kin.

Special Arrangements

Special arrangements have been made for the returning veterans to meet their families. Large alphabetical signs will be erected south on Pinnacle Street from Bridge Street. Next-of-kin are requested to gather under their name letter. For instance the "Adams" will remain under the "A" sign; the "Browns" under the "B" sign and so forth.

The regiment will be given instructions where to meet their next-of-kin.

Following the reunion the troops will be taken to the Armouries, where food and refreshment will be served.

Next-of-kin and friends are respectfully reminded that the Armouries accommodation will be crowded to capacity with the troops and limited space does not permit the entry of the general public. Only the troops and committee people, helpers, etc., will be admitted by special pass.

Following the ceremonies and reception for the troops, officers of the regiment will be officially greeted in the officers' mess of the Argyll Light Infantry.

Information Booth

An information booth will be installed in the Armouries for the accommodation of the troops such as furlough and transportation arrangements. City banks will remain open so that the returning men can cash their furlough cheques.

Transportation has been arranged to convey those returning men who wish to catch trains for their homes out-of-town.

Buses have been arranged to transport originals and other active service personnel coming from Picton, Madoc and Trenton and other points.

Admits Setting Fire to Vehicle

Montreal, Oct. 3—(CP)—Montreal police yesterday turned several suspects over to the homicide squad after they had been asked to keep a lookout for an airman, said to be demented, who terrorized Durocher Street residences during the weekend.

Maurice Day, 74, who suffered a brain injury when assaulted after the airman invaded his home and demanded the "secret of the atomic bomb," is reported to be in a "fair" condition at hospital.

One suspect had been transferred from a west-end station to detective headquarters. As he was being questioned, the detectives were told their car was on fire. Then the suspect, who told police he was in the pay "of a foreign power," admitted he had set fire to the car by placing a lighted cigaret in the upholstery of the vehicle.

Carp is Chased Up Middle Of Road by Car

Hamilton, Oct. 3 —(CP)— Listen, now, to this one: Highways Department Foreman James Scott said today that he chased a fish with his car on a suburban road during last night's rain storm.

"I was patrolling Highway 3-A near Chamber's Corners with the water about a foot deep on the pavement," he said, "when I saw a big carp swimming ahead of my car. I followed it right up the road to shallow water and then tried to catch it, but it managed to wiggle off the roadway back into deeper water.

"Because I didn't catch it, some people will not believe me, but that's exactly what happened."

MINISTERS HEAD HOME WITHOUT WRITING PEACE

Big Five Conference Ends in Complete Deadlock Over The Balkan Peace Treaties

London, Oct. 3 —(AP)— State Secretary Byrnes and Foreign Commissar Molotov brought into the open today a disagreement among the major powers whether a Big Three understanding existed for blanket participation by all five principal powers in European peace settlements.

M. Molotov, outlining to a press conference the Soviet stand on the 22-day conference which broke down last night in a debate over procedure, disclaimed any knowledge of an agreement for blanket participation of all five powers.

Mr. Byrnes announced that the deputies of the council would continue work here on some aspects of the conference which ended without agreement on any major issue.

M. Molotov admitted the existence of disputes within the council, but expressed hope for future collaboration to insure world peace.

Predict New Meeting.

With the breakdown of the conference, diplomatic sources here predicted a new meeting of Prime Minister Attlee, President Truman and Marshal Stalin would be necessary, but Georges Bidault, French Foreign Minister, said any meeting of the Big Three powers alone would be "disagreeable to France."

M. Bidault, addressing a press conference, made it clear France was determined to have an equal voice with Britain, Russia and the United States in drawing up the European peace.

M. Molotov was asked about the reported agreement early in the council conference which would have permitted all the foreign ministers to take part in the peace discussion.

"You show it to me," he retorted. "Could there be such an agreement without signatures?"

M. Molotov said he suggested that separate protocols be signed. Russia and Great Britain would sign for peace with Finland; the same countries plus the United States would sign for the defeated Balkan States; and all five foreign ministers would sign the protocol for other decisions. He said repeatedly that the Potsdam agreement confined immediate discussions of peace treaties to countries signing armistices.

"We hold that ministers are not entitled to violate decisions by the heads of their government," he said. "It is not the habit of the Soviet Union to violate its obligations and I do not recommend to others to do so."

M. Molotov said the 33 meetings of the foreign ministers were not "held for nothing;" that in fact intense work was done.

"There were questions which were agreed upon by all five members including the reparations in Germany, on the control of Austria and on certain other questions," M. Molotov said. "Unfortunately, we did not discuss the question of an Allied control commission for Japan."

He said Great Britain, the United States, Russia and France had agreed on certain questions about a peace treaty for Italy and that the Big Three nations had resolved certain questions about peace treaties for Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary. He said Russia and Great Britain "without difficulty" had reached an agreement on Finland.

Marine Deserts Unit to See Action, Wins Congressional Medal of Honor

Washington, Oct. 3 — (AP) — Seventeen-year-old Jacklyn H. Lucas deserted his Marine unit because he wanted to see action—and won the Congressional Medal of Honor.

He's coming to Washington to receive it from President Truman in a White House ceremony Friday.

Jack, whose home is Belhaven, N.C., is the youngest soldier in this war to win the highest decoration for bravery. He won it in his first and last battle — on Iwo Jima — for smothering two Jap grenades with his body, thereby saving his comrades.

Jack, who joined the Marines at 14 because he craved action, became fed up with light duty at a Pacific supply depot and stowed away on a ship taking a combat unit to Iwo Jima.

In his first and only battle a Japanese grenade fell near him and some other Marines. He covered it with his body.

As he lay there another grenade flew toward him. He reached out, speared it and put it too under his body. Both exploded.

It seemed certain death for Lucas, but he lived to return to North Carolina and be a civilian again. He was discharged last month because of his injuries.

No Hope of Settlement Of Western Coal Strike

(By The Canadian Press)

No hope for settlement of the strike by almost 9,000 Western Canadian coal miners in protest of meat rationing was apparent today.

While the Dominion's rationing authority — the Prices Board — said the black-diamond diggers are not entitled to preferred treatment. A representative of the United Mine Workers of America, C.C.L. Union, retaliated with "our miners say they can't dig coal on the present ration of meat and they say further they won't."

The strike, which started last Thursday when 4,500 men from the Drumheller and Crow's Nest Pass in southern Alberta walked off their jobs in protest of the rationing, continued until yesterday when 300 Edmonton district miners voted to join their fellow workers. In the period between, most Western coal miners had gone out in support of the strike.

Coal-diggers in the Nanaimo, B.C., area and the Coleman, Blairmore and Belevue districts of Alberta joined in the stoppage —which they called a holiday— because they say they cannot work on the present 1 1/3 pounds of meat allowed weekly under the token and coupon rationing system.

Last night representatives of miners in the Alberta area along with delegates from Michel and Fernie, B.C., met to discuss a wire from the Prices Board which rejected requests for increased rations and suggested the men return to work. However they decided to remain idle while the board reconsidered their demands.

The Prices Board said in a statement the Advisory Committee on Nutrition reported that differential rationing on the basis of occupation, is unnecessary from the viewpoint of nutrition.

Prices Board Chairman Donald Gordon told Union heads at Calgary the government would consider the miners' requests "only after the men return to work".

Robert Livett, president of District No. 18, U.M.W.A., quoted Mr. Gordon as saying the government will not consider the matter until the men return to work "because it was a principal involved as to whether the miners were going to run the country".

Mayor Enoch Williams of Blairmore who is secretary of that town's union said the miners "are incensed at the statements. .and with the attitude of Ottawa. . ."

GOVT. WATCHES GATHERING CLOUDS ON LABOR HORIZON

Dominion Well Into the Headaches of a Reconversion Period

By JACK WILLIAMS

Ottawa, Oct. 3 — (CP) — The ~~government and its labor officials~~ today had a sharp eye on the clouds gathering on the Canadian labor horizon.

Among the indications of a troubled time ahead were these conditions:—

1. Demands of the United Packinghouse Workers (C.I.O.) for a 30 per cent increase in wages.
2. A narrowing of the margin between available jobs and unplaced workers, accompanied by increasing applications for unemployment insurance benefits.
3. Continued strike of 10,000 Ford Motor Co. employees at Windsor, Ont.
4. A steady flow of demands from labor organizations for a 40-hour week with no reduction in "take-home" pay.

The fact that, officially, Ottawa is silent on these developments in no way detracts from accumulating evidence that Canada is well into the headaches of a reconversion period, and at a time when there is usually a seasonal reduction in the demand for workers.

Outside the current work stoppages which are attributable to what are commonly regarded as labor conditions is the strike of 7,700 Western coal miners in protest against meat rationing provisions.

The demand of the 12,000 packinghouse workers, coupled with a growing pile of resolutions from organized labor for a 40-hour week without reductions in income, constitutes the most serious threat the government's anti-inflation policy has faced.

The government had made it clear it has no intention of abandoning its price and wage control regulations which it considers inseparable in fighting inflation. Introduction of a 40-hour week, with the same take-home pay workers previously received for 48 hours, would mean increasing wages on a major scale.

On the other hand spokesmen for labor are claiming that some employers are using the post-war job-changing period as an opportunity to reduce wages.

The fact that National Employment offices now are under instructions to centre their attention on finding jobs for workers, rather than workers for jobs, is clear-cut evidence that the government accepts the fact that the turning point has been reached in the employment situation.

The Labor Department now is in the midst of a campaign to obtain 50,000 workers for the bush but such jobs hold little appeal to men who a few weeks ago were employed as skilled or semi-skilled mechanics in a war factory.

Latest unemployment insurance figures show that in August the number of applicants for benefits was double that of July and more than six times that of August, 1944. Increases in the average amount of benefits paid individuals point to a lengthening of the periods of unemployment.

SOVIET REQUESTS 4-POWER CONTROL GOVT. FOR JAPAN

Wanted to Direct Long-Range Policy Toward Defeated Pacific Enemy

London, Oct. 3 — (AP) — The Moscow radio announced today that Russia has informed the United States that the formation of a four-power control government for Japan should precede organization of a Far Eastern consultative commission to direct long-range policy toward the defeated Pacific enemy.

The Russian view was set forth, the radio said, in a letter handed State Secretary Byrnes by Foreign Commissar Molotov in London yesterday.

Mr. Byrnes announced September 29 that the formation of a consultative commission in which other countries that fought Japan would be given a voice had been agreed to by Britain, Russia and China.

Mr. Molotov's letter, the broadcast said, reaffirmed Russia's agreement with such a project but added that Mr. Byrnes' announcement "does not reflect the present position."

Situation Unchanged

"Since the creation of the advisory commission had been delayed and since the situation in Japan had undergone changes," the letter said, "the Soviet government on Sept. 24 handed the council of foreign ministers a memorandum containing the proposal for creation of a control council for Japan with its seat in Tokyo and composed of representatives of the United States, Britain, the Soviet Union and China, and under the chairmanship of the representative of the United States.

"The Soviet government considers that while the military period existed and the Japanese armed forces were not disarmed, there was a reason for the concentration of all functions for the control of Japan in the Allied Commander-in-Chief.

"However, when the military phase ended, the Allies were faced with tasks chiefly of a political, economic and financial character, and to deal with such questions it is imperative to create an Allied organ which would enable the 4 Allied Powers which played a decisive role in the defeat of Japan to carry out an agreed policy and to shoulder common responsibility . . .

"However, the Soviet government considers that the creation of such an Allied Advisory Committee must be preceded by the formation by the government of the four Allied powers of a control government for Japan, since the postponement of this decision creates considerable difficulties."

NAVY REDUCTION TO TEN THOUSAND BY NEXT APRIL

Peacetime Strength Will Be 8,000 Over Number In Navy at Outbreak Of Second Great War

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 3 —(CP)— Peacetime permanent strength of the Royal Canadian Navy likely will be in the neighborhood of 10,000 men, Defence Minister Abbott intimated Tuesday night in presenting to the Commons naval estimates for the current fiscal year.

Mr. Abbott said that by March 31, 1946, the strength of the navy will have been reduced from its peak of 95,000 to 10,000. This figure would include members of the permanent force supplemented by members of the reserve who have engaged for service during a two-year period.

The statement was taken to mean that the permanent peacetime strength will be about 10,000 compared with 2,000 men at the outbreak of the Second Great War.

The size of the reserve that will stand behind the permanent force and the number of ships to be retained are expected to be disclosed when Mr. Abbott concludes his address.

Unable to Conclude.

He was unable to conclude before the 11 o'clock adjournment and he said after the House rose that he might not get the floor again until next week. Wednesdays are set aside as private members' day.

Mr. Abbott began his address shortly before the adjournment and following these developments:—

1. Justice Minister St. Laurent said a bill to extend certain wartime controls and emergency powers will be presented to parliament as soon as possible.
2. Mr. St. Laurent said he understood that the date from which would run the two-year period for repayment of the refundable portions of the income and excess profits taxes would be announced by Finance Minister Ilsley in the budget.
3. Mr. Ilsley announced the organization of a Canadian information service to replace the wartime information board and to provide information about Canada to peoples of other countries.
4. Angus MacInnis (CCF—Vancouver East) criticized Rev. E. G. Hansell (SC—MacLeod) for saying in the Commons that the Christian democracies could not co-operate with Russia.
5. Stanley Knowles (CCF—Winnipeg North Centre) urged the government to support the opening of Palestine to free immigration of Jews from Europe.

38,000 Volunteered.

Two American Women Reach Manila After Exciting Rescue by Guerillas

By JAMES J. HALSEMA

Manila, Oct. 3 (AP)—Two American women have reached Manila after dramatic rescues by guerilla troops.

Mrs. Herman Kluge of Schenectady, N.Y., was hidden by Ifugao tribesmen in the mountains of northern Luzon for 41 months while the Japanese searched for her with a price of 35,000 pesos ($18,500) on her head.

Mrs. Helen J. McQuaid of Los Angeles spent three years in Japanese prisons before being "kidnapped" by Filipino soldiers just before she was about to be beheaded.

The Japanese chased Mrs. Kluge from village to village in a 200-mile circuit. They wanted her and they wanted her husband, an American lumberman who had become a guerilla captain. He made life miserable for Japanese truck drivers and convoy guards with frequent ambushes along the trails.

Kluge surrendered when the Japanese threatened to kill every inhabitant of a village near his headquarters. Then he underwent months of torture and finally disappeared behind the grim walls of Fort Santiago.

Mrs. Kluge said she sought refuge, with Ifugao tribesmen in a mountain village. The elders decided they would have to curb loose tongues to guard her from capture.

Squatting around a sacred polished rock and smoking their tiny brass pipes, they proclaimed that anyone who talked about an American woman being there would be fined 50 centavos in pre-war money, or a three-peso dog.

Real money was non-existent but the people were too hungry to risk losing a fat dog, so there was no idle word to reveal Mrs. Kluge's whereabouts. The village medicine man, who had been her houseboy, provided her with a house.

Mrs. McQuaid was captured when the Japanese invaded the Cagayan valley port of Aparri in the first week of the war.

She was suspected of being a spy, and was subjected to unspeakable indignities which left her with trembling hands and haunted eyes.

Finally she was confined in a hospital in the town of Bayombong.

They told me I was sentenced to death by beheading," she said quietly. "The guerillas contacted me and said they would rescue me but I told them no—too many people would suffer from reprisals. They told me they would fix that."

On the night of Oct. 30, 1944, the 14th Philippine infantry regiment took the entire hospital — doctors, nurses and patients — to safety in the hills. Mrs. McQuaid went along in a basket hammock.

Truman States Development Will Expand Trade

Plan Part of Program Of International Co-operation

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Oct. 3 — (CP) — President Truman today urged Congress to enact legislation speedily to carry out construction of the St. Lawrence waterway and power project.

In a special message, he recommended approval of a Canadian-United States agreement of Mar. 19, 1941, for development of the St. Lawrence Basin as a part "of our program of international co-operation, expanding foreign trade and domestic progress in commerce and industry."

The president described the vast seaway power project, rejected by Congress in the past, as one of the "great constructive projects of the North American Continent, in fact, one of the great projects of the world, which was delayed by the exigencies of war."

The president said the power facilities are to be constructed by the Federal Government and turned over to New York State under an agreement dated Feb. 7, 1933 between United States Army Engineers and the Power Authority of New York State. Under this agreement, which the president described fair and acceptable, that state would pay $93,375,000 as its share of the construction cost.

The move to get started on the development was launched yesterday in the Senate and House of Representatives. It is headed for certain strong opposition but it is believed to have greater chances of success than previous similar attempts in the United States.

2,200,000 Horsepower.

The project envisages completion of power and navigation resources in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence river between Cornwall and Prescott, Ont., to generate 2,200,000 horsepower of electric energy and link up the 27-foot seaway connecting Montreal with the head of the lakes.

The President told Congress that when the project is approved Canada and the United States will be able to harness for the public benefit one of the greatest natural resources of North America. He said it would open the Great Lakes to ocean navigation. The 2,200,000 horsepower of hydro electric capacity created would be divided equally between the United States and Canada.

Hydro-electric development of the river, he added, would give the United States power for distribution within a radius of 300 miles, including most of New York State and its neighbors to the east. He said public and private agencies will be able to pass on to consumers in that area "all the advantages of this cheap power."

The President said that any agreement with New York to turn over the water power project must protect the interests of the United States as well as the interest of neighobring states. This, he said, would have to be submitted for Congressional approval.

Globester Flight Near Honolulu

By PAUL MILLER

Kwajalein, Marshall Islands, Oct. 3 — (AP) — The United States Army Transport Command's first world-circling Globester flight, driving to make up nearly 3½ hours lost time, left Kwajalein for Honolulu shortly after 7 p. m. local time today.

A.T.C. officers said the big transport will skip its scheduled stop at Johnston Island, and make the 2,200-mile trip to Honolulu non-stop.

The Globester plane reached Kwajalein at 6:30 p.m. today, local time, in its second-try flight from Guam.

The big plane, after being 315 miles out of Guam earlier on its 1,551-mile overwater hop, had to turn back because of engine trouble.

Another transport was waiting at Guam but the delay put the Globester three hours and 28 minutes behind on its 151-hour globe-circling schedule.

German Liner Europa Still in New York

New York, Oct. 3 — (CP)—The New York Times says in a newspage story today that conversion to a troop transport of the 50,000-ton German liner Europa, captured at Bremerhaven and brought to the United States, has not yet begun and a "strong possibility" exists that it may be used as a premier American trans-Atlantic passenger liner.

The vessel now is at Bayonne, N.J., for reconditioning. If used in the trans-Atlantic passenger trade, the luxurious vessel would be a direct competitor of the giant British liners, Queen Elizabeth and Queen Mary.

$661.66 COLLECTED FOR BLIND INSTITUTE

Fine weather and the splendid co-operation of the citizens of Belleville combined to make the annual tag day of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind held on September 22, the most successful so far held in Belleville. The total receipts for the day were $661.66. Organization for the tag day was under the direction of Mr. P. I. Timmins, field secretary, and Mrs. Harry Rollins, local tag day convencr. Thanks of the Institute are extended to Mrs. Rollins and all those who gave of their time to tag and to those who assisted at headquarters on tag day.

SHORT CIRCUIT IN CASH REGISTER CAUSES $200 BLAZE

This is the story of the cash register that got hot.

There is no suggestion that cash registers in beauty parlors are ringing more merrily than in any other business, but the fact remains that shortly before midnight Monday the electrically operated cash box at Leeman's Hairdressers, 247 Front St., got shortcircuited with result that approximately $200 damage was caused.

A passerby fortunately noticed flames and smoke coming from the register as he passed the door and after notifying the fire department kicked in the glass of the door thinking to get the door open. Upon arrival of firemen wires of the cash register had burned to the floor and the cash box itself was over heated and had become seized. Walls and ceiling of the premises were damaged by the smoke.

COMMITTEE MEETING OF CITY COUNCIL WILL BE HELD ON FRIDAY

Holidays, both proclaimed and national, are entering the picture to disrupt the customary schedule of council meetings for the city fathers. As result of the return of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment and the consequant holiday in the city, the regular Thursday evening committee meeting of the council will be postponed until Friday night, while the Monday evening council meeting will be postponed until Tuesday evening because of Monday being Thanksgiving Day.

HEAVY RAINFALL HOLDS UP HARVESTING OF CORN AND BUCKWHEAT

With over two-and-one-half inches of rain having fallen in the Bay of Quinte district within the past week, farmers are beginning to wonder just what will happen to their buckwheat and corn crops.

Corn and buckwheat fields in the district are either in a quagmire or are under water and according to reports there is little chance of machinery being operated on them for days. Neither corn binders nor grain binders can be used because of the mud, it is stated.

Plowing operations are in some instances also being held up owing to fields being under water. As result of the rain the Moira River has risen perceptibly during the past few days and is now much higher than is customary at this time of year.

BREAD WAGON UPSETS IN MIDDLE OF STREET

Front Street pedestrians observed more than the usual amount of excitement and motorists were delayed because of the resultant traffic tie-up this morning, when a bread wagon owned by the Harris Bread Company upset in the middle of the street to scatter bread and glass over the pavement.

In charge of Hubert Wagar, 369 Charles Street, the wagon had been driven up Front S., where a delivery had been made. In turning around between Bridge and Campbell Streets, the horse cramped the front wheels too sharply and the wagon tipped over onto the pavement spilling its contents. In the excitement the horse was slightly injured and its harness broken, while it was some minutes before the street was cleared to permit normal resumption of traffic.

Air Commodore Ross Appointed To Staff College

Air Vice-Marshal E. E. Middleton, C.B.E., Air Officer Commanding, has announced the following R.C.A.F. appointments in No. 1 Air Command.

Air Commodore A. D. Ross, G.C., O.B.E., Winnipeg, first member of the R.C.A.F., to be awarded the George Cross, has become head of the War Staff College at Toronto. He was formerly Chief Staff Officer of No. 1 Air Command, with headquarters at Trenton, and won the George Cross, when he led the gallant rescue of Canadian airmen trapped in a burning and bomb-laden aircraft in R.C.A.F. Bomber Group, Britain.

Air Commodore J. G. Kerr, A.F.C., Ottawa, had replaced A/C Ross as Chief Staff Officer at No. 1 Air Command. Commanding Officer at Topcliffe and Skipton stations of R.C.A.F. Bomber Group in Yorkshire, he latterly commanded the Canadian bases at Topcliffe and Linton. When VJ-Day came, he was Officer Commanding 861 Wing of the Canadian heavy bomber group then training on the Atlantic Coast of Canada for service against Japan.

Group Captain E. G. Fullerton, A.F.C., formerly Commanding Officer at Centralia, Ont., and Summerside, P.E.I., has replaced Group Captain A. D. Bell-Irving, M.C., Vancouver, as Commanding Officer of Trenton Station. A last war veteran, G/C. Bell-Irving has retired to civil life.

14 Years' Service

With 14 years' service in the R.C.A.F. the return of AirCommodore Kerr marks his fourth posting to Trenton. Born at Arnprior, Ont., and educated at Ottawa and R.M.C., Kingston, he joined the Air Force in July, 1931, as a provisional pilot officer, after getting his wings at Camp Borden.

At the outbreak of war he was in command of a training squadron at Camp Borden and in July, 1940, he went with Air Vice-Marshal, F. S. McGill to open No. 2 S.F.T.S. at Uplands, one of the original service flying training schools set up under the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan. Latterly A/C. Kerr organized a party to open six service training schools across Canada. Before going overseas, he was 16 months in command of No. 4B and G. School at Fingal, Ont.

Served in France

A last war pilot and one of the first of Canada's famous breed of bush pilots, Group Captain Fullerton served in France with the Canadian Signal Corps before transferring to the Royal Naval Air Service. In 1920 and 1921 he was flying instructor at Camp Borden. With Imperial Oil in 1921 and 1922, he was the first pilot to fly into the Northwest Territories, and the newly-discovered oil lands of the Mackenzie River.

He rejoined the Canadian Air Force in 1923 and has been in the service ever since. Twice he has been chief flying instructor at Camp Borden and in 1931, attached to Britain's Fleet Air Arm, he gave deck-landing instruction on the aircraft carrier "Courageous". In 1935, he was awarded the McKee trophy for the greatest contribution to Canadian aviation, the only officer in the permanent R.C.A.F., to have received this award.

Tested Hurricanes

At the outbreak of war he commanded No. 1 Fighter Squadron at Calgary, Vancouver and Montreal, and he was the first pilot in Canada to test the then new Hurricane eight-gun fighter.

As Commanding Officer of No. 9 S.F.T.S., Centralia, at Summerside, P.E.I., he founded the R.C.A.F. pipe band, whose tartans in air force colors have brightened parades in so many communities throughout Ontario. The band now is stationed at Trenton.

Special Tribute Paid Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Wm. Myers

Sincere appreciation of the congregation of Tabernacle United Church to Dr. and Mrs. A. J. William Myers for faithful discharge of duties pertaining to the work of the Church, was expressed at the parsonage Tuesday evening when the departing minister and his wife were presented with a special tribute from the congregation.

Owing to the serious illness of Mrs. Myers a special committee representing the church congregation met at the parsonage to tender the tribute and to present to Mr. and Mrs. Myers a purse of money.

In expressing appreciation to Dr. Myers, the congregation added a special tribute to Mrs. Myers who, through her vital personality, gift of song and genius for friendship, had endeared herself to the members of congregation.

Representatives of the congregation attending at the parsonage included Mrs. Harry Moorman, Mr. T. G. Bell, Mrs. M. C. Burgess and Mrs. G. W. Sprackett.

Tomato Crop Damaged by Frost Last Sat. Night

Approximately one half of the tomatoes still unpicked were damaged last Saturday night by the frost which descended over the Hastings area, it was stated this week by officials of the Canada Packers' plant in Belleville

No estimate of the percentage of total crop still in the fields at the time of the frost, was forwarded by canning factory officials. It was thought that the damage by frost to tomatoes in the Prince Edward area would be less than in Hastings.

Generally speaking the tomato crop in the Belleville area is below normal and of poor quality, it was stated. Also the crop is much later than usual owing to adverse weather conditions earlier in the season.

No corn is processed at the Belleville plant, while pumpkin canning has not yet commenced. Pumpkin acreage in the district is smaller than usual owing to the comparative little interest of farmers in this cash crop last spring.

Traffic Restrictions Placed On Certain Downtown Areas

Certain areas of the city will be placed under a traffic restriction ban during the parade and reception of the 1st Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment tomorrow, (Thursday) morning city police announced today.

No parking will be allowed on: Pinnacle Street between Victoria Avenue and McAnnany St.

Pinnacle Street beween Dundas Street, and the Police Station will be reserved for the next-of-kin

The route of parade, that is, Station Street, to Front Street, Victoria Avenue to Pinnacle, south on Pinnacle to Campbell, west on Campbell to Front Street, south on Front to East Bridge Street.

There will be no parking on East Bridge Street from Front to Church Street.

Chief of Police Walter Probert and Police Inspector Clare Hayes, respectfully request the general public of the city of Belleville to refrain from taking their automobiles to the Canadian National Railways Station on Station Street. Motor cars will serve to congest traffic further. The police also suggest that city residents leave all motor vehicles in the garage during the time of the parade and reception ceremonies.

Major Percy Gray, Canadian Provost Corps, arrived in the city today with thirty personnel. The provosts will form a flying squadron mounted on motorcycles and in general assist in the policing of the city.

Chief Probert today requested the co-operation of the general public during the parade and general festivities. "This city and its public as a rule are well behaved, and I would like to show the returning veterans that Belleville, while rejoicing in their homecoming, can conduct itself along orderly lines", he said.

Parks Board Delegation Seeks Information From Utilities

A deputation from the Parks Board including Cleo B. Colling, chairman of the Board and Orland Pinkston, secretary, appeared before the Public Utilities Commission at their meeting on Tuesday afternoon seeking information as to how to obtain the finances to instal floodlights at the fair grounds. Mr. Colling stated that the time had come when the lights must be taken into consideration if the youth of Belleville are to progress in athletics and better physical health. F. R. Wotten, chairman of the commission, explained to the delegation that it was impossible for the Commission to use their surplus funds for the financing of this project because of a ruling of the Ontario Hydro Power Commission of Ontario but he suggested that the Parks Board go to the council and have that body finance the project over a period of years taking the money from the appropriations due the Parks Board until the debt is liquidated.

Spoke on Water Rates

Mr. Colling also spoke about the charge to the Parks Board of the water rates for the parks. "This is just like paying money out of one pocket into another," said Mr. Colling. The chairman of the Commission suggested that the Board put their request in writing respecting the water rates and that the matter would be given consideration. The City Engineer forwarded a plan to the Commission respecting the laying of a sewer on Purdy Street and requested that the Utilities share the cost of digging and back fill and have the sewer laterals laid at the same time. The Commission voted that a share of the cost would be paid but that only laterals be laid where dwellings now existed.

Application Refused

An application from residents of Bull Street for a sewer down that street was received and the Commission passed the following recommendation: "That whereas it is becoming increasingly evident that all water extensions to suburban areas surrounding Belleville should be more satisfactorily planned to take care of future needs, the Belleville Utilities Commission directs that all applications and petitions for water outside the city limits shall first be presented and dealt with by the Township council involved and satisfactory plans regarding financing and construction shall be arranged with the Township council and further, that all construction plans etc. should be submitted by the township council to the Belleville Utilities Commission to ascertain its ability to supply the water and also get its approval of construction plans." The members of the Commission with the manager, O. H. Scott, will attend the Eastern Ontario Municipal Electrical Association meeting in Brockville on Thursday.

Increased Horsepower

It was shown by the charts at the Commission office that on September 14th last 9,300 horsepower passed through the Reid Street sub station, this being the greatest amount of electricity to pass through this station in its history on one day. The normal capacity of the station is 6,000 horsepower so it can be seen there was a 13 per cent overload on that date and it also shows the necessity of the proposed sub station at the top of Catherine Street, which will not be started until next spring due to the fact that materials are almost impossible to obtain for this work.

Repatriated 'Originals' To Report at Armouries Not Later Than 8.00 A.M.

Will March in Parade Through City With Former Platoons and Companies

Repatriated "originals" and other returned veterans who served with the 1st Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment overseas are requested to report at the Armouries no later than 8 o'clock tomorrow (Thursday) morning.

The parade under the command of Major R. J. Graham will move off so as to be at the Canadian National Railways station approximately thirty minutes before time of arrival.

Major Allan Ross, D.S.O., acting commanding officer of the 1st Battalion has wired Lieut. Col. B. C. Donnan requesting that the originals and others who will be on parade will be absorbed into the unit and march as part of the 1st Battalion instead of parading as a separate unit.

In other words, if Private Joe Seames was a member of "A" Company in the original battalion, he will march with that company. If C.S.M. Jack Hill was a member of "C" Company he will march with that unit, and so forth.

To repeat, all original members of the battalion and other active service personnel who served with the unit overseas are ordered to report at the Armouries at 8 o'clock Thursday morning on the hour.

Permission has been granted for all discharged personnel to wear uniform. Those who have not their uniform will wear "civvies" with medals and ribbons. Uniform dress is battle or walking out uniform, battle preferred, with black boots, anklets, and web belts.

POLICE BLOTTER

Complaints of two peeping toms having been seen peering through windows in the Dufferin Avenue district were received by the local police department shortly before the midnight hour Tuesday. Officers were dispatched to the address given but upon their arrival the two men had disappeared.

Otherwise police circles were very quiet over the night, even the number of inebriates apprehended being fewer than usual.

A 1940 Ford which had been parked on Bridge Street near Arnott's barber shop since Sept. 28, was towed away to a garage. Police this morning had not yet determined the owner of the vehicle.

A resident of Dundas Street near William Street complained to police that a local bread truck had driven over her lawn leaving deep marks from the loaded truck wheels. Manager of the bread firm concerned promised payment of any damages.

SAYS GERMANY NEEDS MORE COAL

London, Oct. 3 —(CP)— Field Marshal Montgomery said today that "unless coal production can be maintained and increased, nothing can stop the economic collapse of western Germany and a famine which would cost the Germans many lives."

A. & N. Veterans Prepare Welcome For Hasty Pees

Belleville Branch Army and Navy Veterans in Canada are preparing to give their comrades of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment a royal welcome.

The veterans of the last war, reminiscent of those grand days of 1918, will parade with medals and berets with their younger comrades of the war just ended and the Canadian Legion.

The Army and Navy Veterans have done yeoman service during the war years and maintained a constant stream of cigarettes flowing overseas to the Belleville and district soldiers, sailors and airmen.

When the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was mobilized representatives of the Army and Navy Veterans here motored to Picton and presented each soldier with cigarettes and a one-dollar bill as a momento of Belleville's war veterans.

Up to the time of V-Day the local organization has sent one million, four hundred thousand fags to the boys of the Hasty Pips and other units.

The Army and Navy Veterans extend a cordial welcome to the returning heroes of the "Hasty Pees."

POLICE COURT

Charges of drunk driving against three local motorists took up most of the time during the regular Tuesday morning police court before Magistrate T. Y. Wills today, with the conventional ten days in jail with licence suspended for three months being the penalty given in each case. Charges of dangerous driving against two of the motorists were dismissed at the request of the Crown.

"These charges of dangerous driving should be very carefully considered and should not be just automatic in the case of drunk driving", stated Magistrate Wills as he granted dismissal of a dangerous driving charge against one of the accused. "Very obviously this man had not driven his car a foot".

Drunk driving charges against two other motorists, a man and a woman, were laid over for one week at request of counsel.

Defence evidence brought into court by Orval Laird, defendant on a charge of intoxication which had been laid over from last week, did the accused but little good as he was convicted of the charge and given thirty days in lieu of the payment of a $50 fine. The charge was one of a second offence against Laird. Pleading not guilty to the charge last week Laird stated he had been painting and hanging wallpaper all day and stated that the odor which police officers maintained was liquor, actually was the smell of turpentine.

A Marmora resident will be given the opportunity to contact relatives re the payment of a $50 fine plus $3 costs on a second offence drunk charge, or in the lieu of payment will spend 30 days in jail. On another charge of intoxication heard in court a Bancroft youth was sentenced to ten days. He was found in an intoxicated condition causing a disturbance in a local dance hall.

Five other persons paid fines and costs of $13 out of court, while three infractions of parking bylaws were also settled out of court.

Fred Rawson Lands 22-Pounder In Moira River

Moira Lake cannot claim all the honors for 'lunge because the Moira River near O'Brien's bridge yielded a 22-pounder last Sunday, Fred Rawson being the lucky angler. He was fishing with Percy Langton and using a casting pole with a 25-pound test line and small spoon. In the early part of the afternoon Fred was casting with a mouse-colored plug and one 'lunge made a rise but would not take the bait so the two started to troll and very soon a strike was made and the fun began. Mr. Langton unfortunately was on the end of the oars and was ordered to deep water and told to row in a large circle in the river. This rowing kept up for almost a half-hour and Langton was nearly all in when the man with the 'lunge took a look at him.

The angler by this time was getting pretty tired and was afraid he would lose his fish so he ordered a quick retreat to the shore but Fred was in a bigger hurry than the rower so he left the boat and wading ashore in 18 inches of water dragged his 'lunge with him. The fish was apparently in a bigger hurry than Fred and was catching up to him so Mr. Rawson put on a little more power, made the bank, struck for a ploughed field and the 'lunge after him. That is how the 'lunge was landed all other stories to the contrary. At that it was a beautiful fish and some excellent photographs were taken to prove, that the catch was made.

BURRS

Cows Act Queerly After Feeding In Field of Corn

Burrs—We are inclined to agree with W. H. Robb, who in the last issue of "The Canadian Countryman" refers to cows as being wayward, cantankerous, unpredictable and maddening." A recent experience with a herd of seventeen has convinced us of the above opinion. This herd had been carefully guided in and out of a sweet corn field each morning after about an hour's feeding. Warning had been given of its drastic effects on cows if allowed to forage at will. One farmer lost seven from a herd of twelve.

Now imagine our consternation after this supposed timed feeding to find on about the fifth morning preceding milking the whole herd prone in the night pasture in various stages of inebriation. On being urged first gently and finally in a more forceful manner all except one arose and staggered with a very rolling and ungainly gait to the stable door, where they were again very uncertain as to their ability to gain its entrance. All but one reeled in, it falling in the doorway and refusing to move for several hours. The one remaining in the field stayed immovable for that day and the following night.

Milking Down

A thirty gallon can that had on previous mornings been filled within ten or twelve inches of top was just about twelve inches from the bottom. The flow of milk has continued to be greatly reduced. However none of them died and in some way still unsolved they gained admittance to that corn field, ate to their heart's desire came down the road to drink where a neighbor on passing fastened them in where they were found at milking time. We just hope their appetite for alcoholic foods won't grow on them and become habitual or another source of income other than dairying will have to be found.

GRATEFUL FOR UNCLE SAM'S HOSPITALITY

These eleven Winnipeg Grenadiers who arrived in Vancouver late Friday evening were full of praise for the treatment accorded them by the U. S. Army since they were liberated from Jap prison camps. Before continuing their journey home they will be outfitted in Canadian battledress at the Little Mountain army depot in Vancouver. Pictured here, from left to right, (front row), are Pte. W. 'Pete' Beach Tells Of Fighting Fronts At Kiwanis Club

A word picture of the fighting fronts was given to members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon at the Quinte Hotel on Tuesday by N. A. "Pete" Beach, athletic director of Albert College. He has recently returned from overseas where he served for some four and one-half years as Y.M.C.A. supervisor to the troops. His talk of the war front was most interesting and "Pete" being one who is quite observant and who studied the peoples of Europe during his stay was able to make some comparisons of the countries in which he was stationed. Introduction of the speaker was made by Taylor Franklin and Kiwanis appreciation was expressed by Albert Jones.

The luncheon was presided over by President Lorne McDougall, while Eddie Shapiro collected the fines and Vic White led the community singing. Jack White, Chairman of the National Clothing Collection Drive, that runs from the first of the month to the 20th, told the members of the urgent need for old clothing to keep out the cold in Europe this winter. He stated that the organization was almost complete and that the members would be asked to assist the drive by helping to make the collections and bundling the parcels for shipment to the stricken countries.

Went Overseas in 1941.

Mr. Beach went overseas with the First Canadian Armored Brigade in June of 1941 and stated that the convoy was well protected and an uneventful trip. The brigade went to Salisbury Plains and the humor of Brigadier Worthington was told in a number of interesting stories. He told of the mud of the plains and how the men who had been taught how to camp fared much better than those who did not know the rudiments of camp life. The speaker thought it would be a good thing to have the fathers of the club send their boys to camp because at some time in their lives it might be useful. Mr. Beach went to the Mediterranean area in June of 1943 and went to Algiers and later the Canadians landed in Sicily on July 10. He described his sojourn at Phillipville in North Africa, where he stated there was wonderful swimming but plenty of scorpions, lizards and all kinds of insects. The speaker moved into Sicily in August and stayed with the troops until they left the country in March of 1945.

Symbol of Might.

On exhibition in the room was a symbol of the might of Mussolini that was carried by the troops on all parades. He stated that Il Duce had done many good things for Italy and he was well liked but that from his observations and conversations he had had the Italians had no stomach for actual fighting. "They liked the pomp and glory but not the penalties of war," said the speaker. He stated that Mussolini made the mistake of going to war but the Italians still think he is a great man and they still hate the Germans but on the whole the people lacked sincerity and he believed that had the Germans come back they would have acted towards them as they now do to the Allies. He described the development of the marshes into arable land but stated that those put on the land did not know how to use the implements that were sent to them. "That was the trouble with the whole Fascist system," said Mr. Beach. "It worked all right at the top but was bad at the bottom."

Saw Hasty Pees.

Mr. Beach stated that he met many of the Hasty Pees in Italy and he stated they were referred to as the "Middle Regiment," they pulled the 48th and pushed the R.C.R.'s. "At that the Regiment acquitted itself like men and proved most gallant on the field of battle," said the speaker. Mr. Beach told of his sojourn in Rome for nearly a year and of his trip from Italy into France and through that country into Holland and Germany. The talk was given in a breezy offhand manner that captivated his audience and the time was all too short and "Pete" will be welcomed back again to continue with a few more details of his sojourn in France, Holland and Germany.

Alaskan Highway Pictures Shown Kinsmen Club

Construction and engineering difficulties confronting intrepid builders of the famed Alaskan Highway route back in 1943 when the Japanese threat seemed imminent, were pictorially described to members of the local Kinsmen Club Monday evening when Rev. Don C. Amos, minister at Bridge Street United Church, showed a series of colored lantern slides.

The pictures were taken by Mr. Amos during his one and one-half years as itinerant United Church minister along the famed route during its construction. The part of the road where civilian workers were under the ministry of Mr. Amos was in the heart of the Rockies.

Contrary to the general conception that the route of the highway was planned entirely as result of aerial survey, Mr. Amos stated that ground survey parties working partially upon the advice of resident guides were in some measure responsible for the route. Proof of this was in the fact that every 20 miles or so along the length of the highway would be signs of habitation of some sort or other. Some trappers now have their shacks alongside the highway making it convenient for them to hitchhike to the nearest trading centre, possibly several hundred miles away.

Route Very Scenic

Towering grey rock mountains of the Rockies along the highway make the route very scenic, while the deep gorges and dried-up river beds along which the highway follows add to the natural beauty of the setting. Length of the highway from Dawson Creek to Fairbanks is approximately 1,500 miles.

Future of the Alaskan highway route, according to Mr. Amos, would in all probability be that of a supply and feeder route for the airline through to Alaska. He emphasized, however, that the highway had splendid possibilities as a tourist attraction. With permanent bridges and a well graded roadbed, the construction of the road was such that in the opinion of Mr. Amos the highway would require but a limited amount of maintenance work.

The speaker was introduced to the club members by Kin Newton Wilbur with Kinsmen appreciation being expressed by Kin Cleo Colling.

Says Germans Picked John Amery Head Prov. British Govt.

Westgate-on-Sea, Kent, England, Oct. 2 —(CP)— L.-Cpl. Roy Nicholas Courlander of the New Zealand forces, accused of aiding the enemy while a prisoner of war, testified today that John Amery had been picked by the Germans to head a provisional British government.

Amery, 33, son of a former British secretary of state for India, has been held since July on charges of treason. He was on the Continent when the war started.

Courlander made his accusation in a 13,500-word statement to a court martial which is trying him.

Courlander, who has pleaded innocent, quoted Amery as saying that an English committee "composed of anti-Jewish interests had placed at his (Amery's) disposal about £300,000 pounds ($1,350,000)." The New Zealander added that Amery frequently was seen in Paris with Max Schmeling, former heavyweight boxing champion.

Courlander was captured in 1941 while fighting against the Germans in Greece.

Westgate-on-Sea, Kent, England, Oct. 2. (Reuters)—L. Cpl. Roy Courlander, native of London, who said he was captured by the Germans in 1941 while fighting with the New Zealand forces in Greece today faced general court martial here on charges of joining the German army and helping organize the so-called British free corps to fight Russia.

The prosecution said Courlander was taken to Germany and later became a propagandist and war reporter for the enemy. In November, 1941, Courlander allegedly suggested the "Free Corps" to a German general, and subsequently was said to have helped organize the body.

(The British Free Corps was the organization with which Pte. Edwin Barnard Martin of Riverside, Ont., was associated while a prisoner of war in Germany. Martin, convicted of treason by a general court martial, was sentenced to a long term of imprisonment.)

Courtlander was captured in Western Europe, Sept. 3, 1944, by British forces.

Laval's Wife Set Free From Prison

Paris, Oct. 3 — (Reuters) — Madame Eugenie Laval, wife of Pierre Laval, the former Vichy Prime Minister, has been set free from Fresnes prison where she had been detained since she landed at Le Bourget with her husband two months ago.

Her dossier has been marked "concluded," following investigations by the examining magistrates into accusations of intelligence with the enemy made against her.

Her husband is scheduled to go on trial Thursday on charges of betraying France.

Laval and his wife were arrested when they returned to France from Spain and were confined in different sections of Fresnes prison. When examined by high court magistrates, Laval declared: "I don't see why you've arrested my wife — she was always pro-British and in addition a deGaullist." The magistrates said their investigation had proved this statement by Laval.

THIEVES ENTER COTTAGES

Peterboro, Oct. 3 — (CP) — Thieves entered six cottages in the nearby Clear Lake district during the last several days, police disclosed today. Loot included canned goods, clothing, small radios and small electrical appliances.

The cottages reported entered belong to Melville Turner and T. H. Glover of Peterboro; E. Peardon, B. Budreau, H. Edwards and E. L. Shipp of Toronto.

HAPPY REUNION

Almost four years of uncertainty about the fate of her husband ended Friday night for Mrs. W. A. Shayler, 2521 East 7th St., Vancouver, B.C., who is shown here with L/Cpl. Shayler and their son Garry in the sleeper that bore the Hong Kong hero from San Francisco. A member of the Winnipeg Grenadiers, Shayler was the only "stretcher case" of the 23 who arrived on Friday's train. His brother, Sgt. Edward Shayler of Winnipeg, reached Vancouver last Monday in the ever-growing stream of Canadian soldiers returning from the Pacific theatre.—(Canadian Army Photo.)

Ancient Tower of London Sods New Stones to Legends of Ages

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadina Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 3. (CP) — The Tower of London has added to its long list of legends in the years of this latest war—stories of Hess, Hitler's man Friday who came by airplane and was prisoner for a few days within walls old 800 years ago; of the German spy, Joseph Jacobs, who came by parachute and died before a firing squad in the miniature rifle range Aug. 15, 1941; of the crunch of bombs that shook stones the Romans knew and of eerie nights when the White Tower of William the Conqueror gleamed in the light of burning London.

Night of April 16, 1941

But, among the beefeaters, the men with strange uniforms of the nearly-forgotten past blazing with the ribbons of honorable service in wars since 1900, the proudest story is of the night of April 16, 1941. On that night German airplanes came. Bombs fell and fires raged. Within 14-foot-thick walls the Tower guard, soldiers in khaki and steel helmets, waited for the "ceremony of the Keys", a hidden pageant during which the gates were locked, a task which has been done faithfully during the centuries.

The guardsmen were joined by the chief warder and watchmen, wearing their scarlet coats but with steel helmets instead of Tudor hats.

Punctually at 9.53 p.m., the little procession moved off, led by the chief warder. Between the Byward and Middle Tower they heard the familiar sound of an airplane diving before releasing its bombs.

No man broke step.

"Had I been alone I'd have dived for cover", said Chief Warder Cook.

The guards went on with firm step, chin up, chest out, right arm swinging, bayonets gleaming in the light of the city's fires.

The guards at a gate presented arms to the Keys.

There was a terrific crash, something flashed through the escort, struck the ground sending up sparks, and disappeared.

"The next moment we were all sprawling on the ground", said Chief Warder Cook.

Rifles were picked up, the escort fell in, and off it went, heels clicking on the stones.

The locking of the gates went on, with dignified ceremonial and no haste, while London burned.

When the Boys Come Home

Reunions are taking place in every part of Canada these days as ship and train bear home their precious cargoes and loads of veterans, sons, fathers, brothers, and members of the women's services. From the Continent of Europe they come, yearning to meet their loved ones after the long years of separation while the home folk yearn for that great hour when families and friends will be reunited. On these occasions emotions run high, stirred by anticipation and realization of meeting.

This outpouring of love and friendship and admiration and rejoicing is one of the blessings of this time for the family as the old associations become again dominant. The thought of relative for relative and friend for friend swells the human heart.

Those who have been in welcoming throngs of thousands of the homefolk greeting returned relatives and friends know the spirit of such a crowd and that of the people who constitute that crowd, which is guided by one thought, reunion and the clasp of the returned. There are waves and cheers as emotion sweeps the gatherings for thoughts run deep and true at this hour of reunion and the human heart will have its way in the wise provision of nature and all, those who are demonstrative and those who are more staid, yield to the noble promptings and urgings of human nature as hearts speak to heart and soul to soul. In these crowds the expression of feelings has free scope, they are not hidden. It is a time when people give the rein to their emotions and there may be a catch in the voice or a sense of choking of feelings. For one great impulse sways all. The joy and happiness may cause a sigh or draw a tear and the tongue may falter slightly in uttering the words of greeting, while the hand of greeting is extended. The crowd is filled with emotion, Hundreds of small groups form within the large group and the gathering then becomes one great happy, rejoicing crowd, taking to its heart the service folk, responsive to the love of their dear ones.

No gatherings can be richer in fervor and joy than these for the dangers the men have passed through, for the mutual sense of absence and separation which has been felt by the members of the families and their members abroad and for the joy of reunion in victory.

This district is proud of its servicemen and service women. It greets them on their return with joy and thanksgiving.

Proud of Them

The home front has done nobly in support of the gallant citizen soldiers Canada sent to the fronts of the world. Now these men are coming back. Most of the First Canadian Division are back and the Second Division units are gathering in Britain from Europe soon in turn to be coming home.

What these men have done overseas is the source of great pride to the home folk and what with the united effort of the veterans and the home front, Canada can do nothing else but make great strides forward. The support of the returned men will be of invaluable aid to those who have been on the home front in building for a noble and great Dominion. The returned men of this Second World War give the people ahe greatest confidence for the future, for they have greatly impressed everyone.

Jam Donations Used for Foods

Ontario Division Red Cross has on hand donations of money from individuals and groups for the purpose of sending jam to Britain. Because of the shortage of sugar, however, the Wartime Prices and Trade Board has been unable to permit the Red Cross to export any commercially made jam this year.

In view of this fact Red Cross, with the permission of contributors, will use the money to send other such allowable food stuffs as dried milk, concentrated fruit juices, dehydrated vegetables and a limited quantity of meats. Food for children in nurseries and home will be supplied.

A letter has gone forward to Red Cross representatives in Britain, asking what foods will be most appreciated. When the reply comes, shipment will immediately be made.

Mercy Ships of the Atlantic

The corvette—the Royal Navy's little ship, which played such a great part in the guarding of convoys throughout the world has turned from its war-time role of U-boat killer to that of mercy ship. Many of these little ships which battled Atlantic gales, Arctic cold and Tropical heat are now patrolling the trans-Atlantic air routes ready to go to the assistance of any aircraft which might come to grief in the vast ocean.

The corvettes are fitted with complete rescue apparatus and carry medical personnel. They remain on their assigned station for 14 day patrols maintaining constant radio communication with shore bases and contacting each aircraft which passes overhead. One corvette returning from a recent patrol reported she had made contact with more than 660 aircraft; many, because of their height of visibility, could not even be seen.

Nuggets in the Hills

(Christian Science Monitor)

The long-handled potato fork long since has been put away in favor of the mechanical digger. Yet anyone who has harvested potatoes with this fork can testify that it offered something more than just digging in the dirt. It required extreme skill to keep the prongs from piercing the tubers. It required a deft touch to nudge the fork under the hill and then "snap" the potatoes into the open.

Even now there is a certain lure to harvesting potatoes with a hand fork. The opening of each bulging hill is an exploration into the unknown. How many will there be in this hill? How big will they run? If the row is long and the work becomes tiring, one does not have to dig for potatoes at all. One can turn them into gold nuggets. Each hill then becomes a miniature gold mine. This incentive makes forks fly in an effort to see who can pile up the biggest gold reserve.

But don't get us wrong. We're not in favor of doing away with the mechanical digger. Not unless, of course, there was really gold in them thar potatoe hills!

The Schnorkle

(Christian Science Monitor)

Arrival of four German submarines at Portsmouth furnished the navy with much valuable information.

Of prime interest was the "schnorkle," a device which permitted the submarines to "breathe" while submerged at moderate depth, so named because in operation it sounded like a lusty snorer.

Like a section of metal chimney in appearance the "schnorkle" could be raised or lowered as occasion demanded. When raised, the submarine could operate her diesel engines and charge batteries without surfacing. Fresh air was pumped through the vessel and to the motors. Foul air also was expelled through the tube. When not in use the "schnorkle" nested in a recess in the deck.

Good Street Lighting Saves Lives

(The Municipal World)

An analysis of street lighting and traffic safety by a large insurance company reveals the significant fact that cities having the lowest per capita cost of street lighting consequently the poorest conditions for night visibility, have the highest night fatality rate, also the highest public liability insurance premiums.

Another analysis showed that the more light there is on the roadway the lower are the accident insurance rates, the rate in the best-lighted city was less than half that in the poorest.

The rates are based upon the amount of money that has to be paid out in payment of claims for damage.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

(Copyright, 1945, Edgar A. Guest)

"I WILL!"

Some other boy, with a level head
And a pair of arms and pair of eyes
And a grin like yours, and a similar tread,
Out of his group has managed to rise.
And, the price he paid for his strength and skill
Was the courage to think and to say: "I will!"

No better, no more were his gifts than those
Which you, for your future, today possess.
With the same equipment as yours he rose
And earned his right to the word: Success.
But, he paid this for the post he'd fill:
The courage to think and to say: "I will!"

So up and at it and work away
And never given in to the timid thought
That you have been fashioned of weaker clay.
All that God gives to a man you brought.
You can climb to the top of the steepest hill
With the courage to think and to say: "I will!"

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Who first made maple sugar?

The maple sugar industry is believed to be of American Indian origin.

There is ample evidence that the Iroquois and other northeastern Indians were in the habit of preparing maple syrup and it is probable that they made maple sugar in small quantities before the coming of the white man.

Of course, these Indians had very unsatisfactory equipment for making sugar and their methods were naturally primitive.

But it is supposed that the whites learned the art from the aborigines and imitated their process of tapping the trees and boiling down the sap.

Among the earliest extended notices of maple sugar is "An Account of a sort of Sugar made of the Juice of the Maple in Canada," published in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society for 1684-85.

There it is stated that "the savages have practiced this art longer than any now living among them can remember."

Joseph F. Lafitau, writing in 1724, declared that "the French make it better than the Indian women, from whom they learned how to make it."

The evidence indicates that the northeastern Indians made both syrup and cake sugar of the most delicious kind.

In the Southwest the root of the mescal, a kind of agave, was roasted and eaten as a sweet.

A brownish sugar of excellent flavor was prepared by the Indians from the native cane growing in many of the Western states.

MINISTERS HEAD

Flying to Moscow.

M. Molotov and his staff went to an airfield to fly to Moscow after his press conference.

M. Bidault said French proposals for Germany—mainly for internationalizing the Ruhr and Rhineland—had not been adopted, but he said he saw no reason why they could not be worked out.

Terming M. Molotov a "redoubtable dialectician," he took issue with the commissar's assertion that there had been no decision to allow France and China to participate in Balkan treaties. He said M. Molotov's statement "applies to the difference of interpretation of the meaning of words."

M. Bidault said France would consider a separate treaty with Italy.

Foreign Minister Wang Shih-Chieh of China issued a brief statement in line with Secretary Byrnes' declaration.

Britain's Foreign Secretary, Ernest Bevin, was reported considering whether he should hold a press conference or wait and deliver a report to parliament next week in accordance with British custom.

Mr. Byrnes, who had not hidden his disappointment at the results of the conference, appeared optimistic that difficulties among the Big Five would be resolved.

He said the deputies would continue studying the work of the five-power council in such matters as were not involved directly in the writing of Europe's peace treaties, thus correcting an impression which arose from his official statement last night that the council's work would be held in abeyance. He said he had referred to the matter of peace treaties alone.

Statement More Optimistic.

The deputies, he said, would continue studying such matters as food for Austria, restitution of property stolen by the Nazis during the war and the future of the Ruhr and the Rhineland.

The peace settlement, Mr. Byrnes said "cannot be based on battleships—it must be based on justice."

"We hold the power as trustees and when we fail to remember that, power can be a menace."

Mr. Byrnes' remarks, made to a press conference before he boarded a plane for Washington, were more optimistic than the statement he had released last night. But he stated plainly his position on the issue that broke up the conference — the matter of the Balkan peace treaties.

He said the United States considered it essential that the nations which participated fully in the war be allowed to participate fully in making the peace.

Big Three May Meet.

He said Foreign Commissar Molotov raised no objection in principle to his insistence that a European peace conference be called for the final drafting of each treaty, but that the Soviet minister could not discuss the proposal without a personal consultation with Marshal Stalin.

It seemed obvious that President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee and Premier Stalin would be obliged to achieve a basic meeting of minds before work could be resumed on the writing of the treaties.

One high United States source predicted that the firmness displayed by Britain and the United States in dealing with insistent Russian demands eventually would result in an agreement with Moscow. This source recalled that this was the first time since 1941 that major Russian demands with regard to Europe had not been met.

Won't Bar France, China.

Secretary Byrnes' statement disclosed that the main issue was Russia's insistence upon barring France and China from discussion on the Balkan peace treaties, but he added that "there is good reason to believe that with continued patience and understanding on all sides the essentials can be attained. We are determined upon that outcome."

Mr. Byrnes said there had been "a considerable area of agreement" during the conference.

It foundered, however, on the question of how broad a basis should be used in drafting treaties. The Russians held that only the signatories of the armistices should write the treaties; the British and American delegates insisted that all five principal powers must draft them.

Door Still Open.

A factor behind Mr. Byrnes' optimism was said to be Foreign Commissar Molotov's position that he could not alter his stand without consulting Moscow personally. Thus it was felt the door still was open for Premier Stalin to reverse the stand.

It was pointed out, also, that a few days ago, while the diplomats argued heatedly in London, Premier Stalin himself reiterated to visiting United States Congressmen in Moscow his desire for a United States loan of $6,000,000,000.

Difference of Opinion

Mr. Byrnes disclosed there was a difference of opinion among the Big Three leaders on what had been decided at Potsdam. President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee understood that France and China would be permitted a full share in the discussion of treaties, but would not be allowed to vote, he said.

Premier Stalin, he said, understood France and China should be excluded even from the discussions.

Mr. Byrnes said the American position was based on the premise that as prominent members of the United Nations Security Council, France and China would have to vote upon any decisions to enforce the peace settlement.

John Foster Dulles, member of the United States delegation and foreign affairs adviser to the Republican Party, said he fully supported Mr. Byrnes' policies during the conference, and added that "in my opinion we made a sound beginning in the difficult task of achieving a durable peace."

Mr. Dulles attended the Versailles Peace Conference in 1919.

TO OPEN PALESTINE?

After receiving a report from Earl G. Harrison, ABOVE, U. S. representative on the intergovernmental committee on refugees, President Harry S. Truman made a request to the British government to open doors of Palestine to displaced German and Austrian Jews. The President also sent a letter to General Dwight D. Eisenhower, directing that he see that better living conditions are provided for Jews in the American zone of occupation.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

Signed Letters, Not More Than One Page or 100 Words Long, Pertaining to Personal Health and Hygiene, Not to Disease, Diagnosis or Treatment, will be Answered by Dr. Brady if a Stamped Self-Addressed Envelope is Enclosed.

PLEASE, MA'AM, NOT SO FAST!

Five months ago I went on the diet given in your pamphlet (How to Lose Weight—copy available on written request if you provide stamped envelope bearing your address. I have lost 60 pounds to date. I would like to lose 20 more, which would make me weigh 140, the correct weight for my age and height. . . I feel wonderful. I swim now and take a sun bath every day . . . My nails and hair have taken on new growth and life, it seems, and I feel ten years younger — perhaps because I am so proud of my new figure. . . . . I know you don't like long-winded letters, but I could write a book about what your diet and my will power have done for me.

(Signed, Mrs. ——)

At first blush it seemed you were tearing down in a tearing unwise, I assure you. A reducing hurry, Ma'am, and that is always regimen should be not only rational, physiological, practical and easy to follow, but, if it is to be successful it must tend to build-up general health, vitality, well being, vite and never impair or destroy health. The test of reducing regimen is just this: It should leave the individual not just six, sixteen or sixty pounds lighter in weight but feeling and looking better and actually fitter than at any time while carrying the handicap.

Any one who contemplates reducing, whether his or her motive is health, good looks, comfort, efficiency or longevity, would do well to learn this elementary lesson thoroughly before adopting a reducing regimen of any kind: If one does not feel and look better after losing any number of pounds, there is something wrong with the regimen and it is dangerous to continue with it.

In the pamphlet "How to Lose Weight" I suggest that a loss of from two to five pounds a week is within reason. But I do not say for how many weeks such reduction should occur.

The correspondent lost sixty pounds in 21 weeks, or not quite three pounds a week. That is plenty fast enough for any one to reduce, and for most persons one or two pounds a week is better. Remember, you didn't accumulate the excess faster than a pound a week or more likely a pound a month. It will go as easily as it came, if only you keep your head and don't fall for the Hollywood hokum.

Persons with glandular obesity will find special chapters on the subject in the booklet "Rules for Reducing" (for copy send twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope). There is a description of the basal temperature method of regulating the use of tyroid extract, and a chapter telling how one with hypopituitary obesity may reduce on four square meals a day.

Mrs. Geo. G. Ostrom, Sidney, Celebrates Her 97th Birthday

One of the oldest residents of Sidney township, Mrs. George G. Ostrom, 2nd concession of Sidney, was the recipient of congratulations from her many friends last Friday on the occasion of her 97th birthday. She resides at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frances Eggleton, 2nd concession of Sidney.

Mrs. Ostrom (nee Mary Jane Bird), was born on the 9th concession in Thurlow township on September 28, 1848, and was one of a large family. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Bird, were among the first settlers of the district.

On December 26, 1870, she married George Ostrom and took up residence on a farm in the Holloway district, north of Foxboro, which property she still holds. There were five daughters, Mrs. Frances Eggleton, 2nd concession of Sidney; Mrs. Edith Irvine, deceased; Mrs. Ernest Snider, West Huntingdon; Mrs. Ed. Phillips, Sidney, and Mrs. Robert Wenthrop, Mich., U.S. There is also a wide connection of grandchildren.

Mr. Ostrom died in 1927, and was buried in the family plot in Zion Hill Cemetery. During his lifetime he took a deep interest in the building of the present Holloway Church and was a trustee until his death.

Mrs. Ostrom retains all her faculties and is a very interesting personality. She has a native wit which keeps her bright and happy. As a young girl she was very fond of singing, especially the hymns of the Old Methodist Church, and loves to sing them to this day. Her favorite hymn is "O for a Thousand Tongues to Sing" and the 91st Psalm is a favorite passage of Scripture.

Recently asked what is the secret of her happy disposition, Mrs. Ostrom replied "I try to be content no matter what happens". Many friends join in wishing her continued good health.

No pigment on the shutters of the soul windows; that is for more elaborate attire. It belongs with evening attire. It belongs with evening dry goods. Mascara? Oh, of course, if eyebrows and lashes are lacking in coloring, but not so much that artifice is apparent.

Purpose of Make-up

Make-up was designed for the purpose of enhancing, to compensate for coloring that nature does not supply. If it is delicate and subtle, it produces an attractive, dramatic effect; if it goes on in blobs and blotches, if it is laid on with a heavy hand, the result is anything but glorifying.

There is an appearance of fatigue. The feminine portrait looks hard and brittle. Why do they do it? The more some women do to make themselves beautiful, the worse they look.

Lipstick Shade.

The lipstick should make the mouth portals appear lustrous. What shade you select depends of course upon the coloring of the skin. There should be a bond between lipstick and rouge. Nearly all complexions call for a powder that carries an ivory cast, even the delicate pink and white skin of the true blonde.

This year's girl is dashing, but not exotic. The exotic type with crazy eyebrows, the severe hair-do, somehow does not suit the times. Yes, we know, little one, that the top knot hair dress is gaining popularity by leaps and bounds, and that it is not flattering to many who are affecting it. But to add excess make-up is to make a woman look lithographic.

We observe that, in this trend towards natural effects, there is an inclination to chuck nail polish of wine shades, to revert to opalesque tints and fainter colors. Men will be pleased. They've always hated blood red talons.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Superfluous Hair.

How the bearded lady got that way is a mystery. The medical profession doesn't offer any explanation, though some electrolysis specialists seem to be of the opinion that a growth of hirsute spinach on a woman's face may be due to some slight irregularity of a ductless gland. This of course, is nothing more than a guess. Heredity may have something to do with the appearance of this affliction. If both parents have an abundant growth of coarse hair, it is possible that daughter will have more than she wants—some of it where she doesn't want it, on her face.

A growth of fuzzers may appear on the chin and lip at the age of eighteen. The facial covering may be flawless until the age of sixty, even seventy, when horrid bristles pop out. The venerable victim feels that she looks like an old witch and is pretty unhappy about it. No matter how many birthdays are recorded in the family Bible, good-looks griefs are hard to bear.

There is no trustworthy evidence to prove that cosmetics of any kind promote such a growth. Specialists whose business it is to remove incipient moustaches and beards claim that the worst cases they have treated have been on clients who never used cosmetics. Also, they notice that skins of fine texture are less likely to show these blemishes than those that are coarse and have enlarged pores.

A method for removal that has been in use for more than forty years is the electric needle. In olden times, when a stiff steel needle was used, tissue was burned away; often, scars resulted. Now many operators use a gold needle, almost as fine as a thread. Being soft and pliable, it follows the pore in its deviations, burrows down to the papilla. The electric current is turned on, the papilla—from which the hair emerges—is destroyed. With that little creative machine put out of business, a new shaft will not appear. Properly accomplished, electrolysis effects permanent removal.

How the bearded lady got that way is a mystery.

As each shaft must be treated separately, treatment is slow. If the tissues are not punctured, there is no pain, only the slightest sting. An experienced, conscientious operator will cause no scars. Many beauty shops employ these operators.

For heavy growths on legs and arms, there are various means of removal. Depilatories can be used, or the horrid hirsute weeds can be removed by means of waxy applications that yank them out by the roots.

A light, fine growth on the face—too fine for the electric needle to remove—can be bleached; it will then be less noticeable. Apply peroxide with a pledget of cotton. Do this once a day until the growth is almost white.

OTTAWA TO RECEIVE GIFT

Ottawa, Oct. 3 — (CP) — Mayor Stanley Lewis said yesterday 100,000 tulip bulbs will be sent from Holland to beautify Ottawa's garden spots. He said the offer was made through T. N. The letter said the Kingdom of the Netherlands wished the bulbs to represent "appreciation of Canada's share in the liberation of Holland."

The Marry Go Round

MIXED GRILL

When a prospective bridegroom drinks to his approaching wedding he is a little vague as to whether he is celebrating his happiness or trying to forget that he is about to sign away his freedom.

Never turn your back on a woman friend. Keep your eye on her—particularly if any of your men friends are around.

The modern girl does not have to fear the "heavy villian", who pursues her. Today's "villain" doesn't bother to "pursue". He just lolls back in her most comfortable chair, borrows her cigarettes, and begins talking this plausible "Live-your-own-life" stuff. Then it's time for her to cross her fingers—especially her wedding-ring finger.

When will girls cease to hope fondly that the marriage ceremony is a magic incantation whereby a Casanova with an eye for every woman is transformed into a blind man?

Almost any attractive girl can awaken a susceptible man's heart interest. Her Big Feat consists in keeping it from rolling over and going right back to sleep again.

Never let a woman make you seriously jealous, says a man who knows. Remember that all women are actresses; and they have to assure themselves, every now and then, that they have not lost their histrionic flair for arousing a man's admiration.

When a girl and a man part bitterly and angrily, there is often a chance of a quick and tender reconciliation; but when they say farewell cheerfully and politely, their romance is beyond the help of a pulmotor.

It has been said that every wife is either a mother, a pal, a mistress, or a dictator to the man she married. But I have seen lots of wives who could double for any two of these roles and still be a charming wife.

Sometimes, half the world doesn't know how the other half lives, even after she has been married to him for twenty years.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Amenities are 'Good Companions' for You

The word amenities is a heart-warming word—stimulating, radiant, full of charming meanings.

Your dictionary will tell you that amenity means "the quality of being pleasant and agreeable"; that amenities (and we usually use the word in the plural) mean "acts, pursuits, civilities, or the like, expressing or furthering pleasantness or smoothness of social intercourse".

"The quality of being pleasant and agreeable". . . ."acts expressing or furthering pleasantness or smoothness". . .here are words that suggest the grace and beauty of life as it can be lived.

Amenities are the Big Little things that pleasant people do and say, the graces that make these people artists in living.

The people who practice the "civilities that further pleasantness or smoothness" are those who have consideration for other people. Who spontaneously and charmingly do and say the agreeable thing. Who know that mannerliness and kindness and courtesy soothe and heal and inspire those who walk with them or pass them in the pathway of their lives. Who have caught the rhythm of beauty in life and walk gallantly with this song in their hearts. Who are sustained in the faith that life is good, and who deeply feel the responsibility of contributing their generous quota to this goodness.

To make the machinery of the dailiness of living run more smoothly to make life pleasanter, to make others more comfortable and thereby to make ourselves more comfortable, let's resolve to pay deep attention to practicing "those little acts of kindness and of love". . .the amenities. Let's not be thick-skinned or callous or smug or indifferent to other people, to their happiness and to their comfort and well-being. Let's not brush by people in life with never a by-your-leave. Let's not grump our way along.

Let's oil the machinery of life with a pleasant and polite 'Please' to the bus driver as well as to Mrs. Personage, to a child as well as to a grownup. Let's spend our 'Thank-you's' prodigally and spontaneously and naturally. Let's recognize another's courtesy and say 'How kind of you to say that', or 'You were very good to do that for me.' Let's rise when we should rise, to pay respect, compliment, honor. Let's give up our seats when we should, to someone who needs them more than we do. Let's quickly and graciously yield to the rights and conveniences of others. Let's step aside when we should step aside. Let's do courteous services to our family, to our friends, to our acquaintances, to strangers who need our help. Let's be quick to apologize for any omission or thoughtlessness. Let's promptly write our notes of thanks, of good wishes, of congratulations, of sympathy for those who are ill or bereaved.

All-Time Record Ball Crowd Likely to be on Hand When World Series Opens in Detroit

No Last-Minute Changes in Batting Orders or Choice of Hurlers for First Game

By SID FEDER

Detroit, Oct. 3 — (AP) — If the weather man only co-operates, Detroit Tigers and Chicago Cubs meet here today in the first game of the 1945 World Series, before what is likely to be an all-time record Detroit baseball crowd.

With 5,000 standing room tickets to be added daily to the completely snapped-up 44,000 reserved seats and 10,000 bleacher benches in a pennant-wacky city that takes its baseball as seriously as its automobile building, the chances are all in favor of a jam-packed turnout within shouting distance of the 60,000-mark. Thus, the local series record crowd of 55,189 would not only be eclipsed, but a new all-time high in attendance here would be reached.

If this fall frolic should go the full derby distance of seven games, no one would be flabbergasted to see the customers kick in more than the $1,322,328 which made the Tigers-Reds 1940 series the highest of them all.

No Changes

There were no last-minute changes in the lineup and batting order of either of the teams as they worked their way through overloaded Detroit and headed for the ball park to pry the lid off the series that has its first three games here — today, tomorrow and Friday — then goes to Chicago to complete its run. Lefty Hal Newhouser, the 25-game winner and most-feared pitcher in the American League, goes to the post for the Tigers in the opener, a 5-7 favorite to come home galloping. Opposite him, the Cubs called on Hank Borowy, the likeable right-hander they bought from the Yanks as "pennant insurance" in mid-season. Hank paid off his $100,000 'premium' by winning 11 games for Chicago, including the National League pennant-clincher in Pittsburgh Saturday.

Detroit Team Old

With his 10 triumphs as a Yank, before he was mysteriously given up, Hank is the only two-league 20-game winner since Iron Man Joe McGinnity turned the trick 43 years ago. Despite Newhouser's flashy form, the Cubs figure Borowy can hang it on him, simply because he knows what the Detroit batters do not like, having won 11 and lost only three against the Bengals while in their league. And, as a social note he wouldn't be surprised if Mrs. Hank presents him with a new heir, even while he's hurling the opener.

Back of Newhouser is probably the most ancient ball club ever to work its way into the series, an all-over-30 lineup with right-fielder Roy Cullenbine, the baby, at 30, and Doc Cramer, in centre, the "grandpappy" at 39.

However, on the strength of Newhouser's wing plus a five-barreled batting "cannon," the Tigers are the betting choice to win their first world championship since they took these same Cubs just 10 years ago.

From second-sacker Eddie Mayo, hitting second, down to Rudy York, who's up sixth, only one flailer finished the campaign with .300 batting mark — Hank Greenberg did .310 for 80 games since getting out of his soldier suit. Yet, as a group these five hammered 67 homers this year and knocked 360 runs home.

Cubs Have Good Outfield

On the other hand, the Cubs present a fast, more youthful outfield, headed by Handy Andy Pafko, probably the fanciest flychaser to come down the pike during the war, along with pitching strength in depth and a balanced hitting power that sports three .300 hitters for 1945.

Looking for their first world title in 37 years, the Cubs boast an outer-garden trio which can run off and hide from the slowed-down Detroiters. First-baseman Phil Cavaretta came roaring back this summer to win the National League batting crown with .355. Veteran third-sacker Stan Hack hit .322 and Don Johnson, a sure second-baseman, wound up with .302.

Against the left-handed pitching they'll face in Newhouser and, behind him, stumpy stubby Overmire, they have right-hand hitting strength in Johnson, Pafko, who drove in 111 runs, and little Peanuts Lowrey, the left-fielder, who accounted for 85 of the Cub markers.

With both clubs primed to take a shot at what may be a bigger winning player's share than the $6,544 each Tiger pocketed for clouting the Cubs a decade ago, everything was all set to spring the barrier on sport's first big post-war circus.

Topnotchers

The Sporting News, baseball's bible announced today that Tommy Holmes, slugging outfielder of the Braves and Eddie Mayo, Tiger second sacker have been selected as the most valuable players in the major loops for 1945. Supplementary choices of outstanding pitchers, placed in a special merit class, apart from other regular players were Hal Newhouser, picked in 1944, American League, and Hank Borowy of the Cubs, National League.

Mayo was given the nod because of his hustle and efficiency in the field and is regarded as the main cog in the Detroit machine. A discard of the Giants and Braves as too slow for an infielder and of the Athletics because of defective vision, occasioned by being hit by a thrown ball, Mayo was rescued from the minors by the Tigers to develop into one of the outstanding stars of the year.

Tommy Holmes was nosed out of the league leadership yesterday by Phil Cavaretta, but was given the accolade for his hitting and fielding with a team that was never in the pennant race. He led the National batting list for the majority of the season and finished far ahead of others in home runs. He established a modern league record for batting safely in consecutive games, 37 in a row from June 6 to July 8 during which period he clouted 66 hits.

Newhouser, Pride of Detroit, is hailed as the outstanding hurler of the major leagues. While he fell short of the 29 victories registered in 1944 he again topped the league in wins and in surpassing his 187 strikeouts of last season, far outdistanced all pitchers in whiffs this year. He led the league in low earned run average.

Borowy, who made the sports headlines this year when the Yankees sold him to the Cubs, despite the waiver rule, gained the National League honors because of his sterling work with the Cubs. He won three against the Cardinals, losing one, that being a 1-0 defeat on an unearned run while he yielded but three hits.

Borowy was definitely on the spot but came through with almost a flawless record in the National League after hanging up ten wins and five losses in the American.

Ferocious John Katan arrived in the city this evening with blood in his eyes and mayhem in his heart. He figures on a re-match with Whipper Billy Watson who defeated him some time ago for the Empire crown, and is all set to blast any pachydermic opposition that Promoter Tunney tosses in his path. His big barrier tonight at the Hume Arena is Earl "Moose" McCready, the darling of Aurora, who scoffs at Katan's threats and promises to rend him limb from appetite. McCready disposed of Doc. HANK BOROWY SOON A FATHER

By JERRY LISKA

Detroit, Oct. 3 — (AP) — Hank Borowy will have a lot on his mind besides the Detroit Tigers and some $6,000 series swag in his opening duel with Hal Newhouser today. The slim right-hander will become a father any minute now which is why Mrs. Borowy isn't here cheering hubby. The Borowy's have a daughter.

The former New York Yankee tosser was calmly confident as he took on the Bengals. "I know how to pitch to them and my arm is stronger than it has been all season," said Hank quietly.

The Tigers, to a man, faced Borowy without any false illusions. "We know he's tough, but we're counting on Newhouser to be just a little tougher," said Roy Cullenbine. Hank Greenberg who clouted a homer off Borowy last July when the latter was still a Yankee, rated the ex-American Leaguer as the one Cub pitcher who may bother the Tigers.

Greenberg still likes to talk about that four-run homer that clinched the pennant for the Tigers against St. Louis last Sunday. "It was inside the foul line by only this much," grinned Hank extending hairy arms a yard apart. "It was a screw-ball I hit and I knew the minute I connected that it was going places."

King's Park Track Sold to Montreal Construction Firm

Montreal, Oct. 3. (CP)— Lou Smith of New York and Frank Reitman of Newark, N.J., have sold out the King's Park race track here to the Marten-Wilson, Ltd., construction firm, and it is reported that a number of apartment houses will be built on the site. Purchase price was said to be in the neighborhood of $100,000.

The track has not been in use for several years and the owners decided against making it serviceable, as cost of necessary repairs would have run about $10,000. Smith and Reitman held onto the charter of the track.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.

New York, Oct. 3 — (AP)—Minor league baseball men likely will be making a special effort to peddle players during the World Series before the market collapses . . . With a lot of real big leaguers coming back from the armed forces, the major clubs will hesitate to buy or draft anyone who doesn't look like a real prospect . . . and to take the prospects from just one league, some of the best the American Association produced this year were Lew Flick, 30-year-old Milwaukee outfielder who has a reputation as a weak arm guy; Henry Nowak, Steve O'Neill's son-in-law who hit .329; Bud Kimball, St. Paul third baseman who is tipped as "possibly a better outfielder," and 2nd-sacker Bob Wren of Toledo, described as a "lot better ball player than people think he is."

One-minute Sports Page

Mrs. Charley Grimm plans to spend the winter making a crazy quilt from the ties and shirts the Cubs ripped off one another during their pennant-winning celebration. That should be an appropriate memento of a crazy season . . . When Chick Evans accepted an invitation to the Sonny Fraser golf tournament at Atlantic City next week, he added: "I'll qualify with anyone at any time." That probably explains why 55-year-old Chick retains his popularity as well as his golfing ability . . . Marcel Boussac, the French horseman, plans to ship his star four-year-old, Arden, to Mexico City for the winter racing and possibly for two or three races in the United States. He hopes to arrange air transportation . . .

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

Lester Patrick of the New York Rangers has arrived in Winnipeg with Coach Frank Boucher and says his Club will be stronger than in the past two years. The Rangers' annual hockey school opens this week and Patrick expects about 25 or 30 amateur hopefuls to show up. He had no definite information whether these include Cpl. Edgar Laprade, Port Arthur Star who is due to get leave of absence from the army.

With only 14 days left of the 98-day Ontario racing season Chris Rodgers, with 74 victories, leads all jockeys on provincial tracks. Joe Cowley has 65 winners and Eric Barber 54.

Toronto Oakwood Indians meet Hamilton Wildcats under the floodlights at Hamilton tonight in a Senior O.R.F.U. fixture and the winner will be undisputed league leader. Coach Eddie McLean says the Wildcats will play a wide-open game. When Wildcats beat Windsor 6-0 last Saturday McLean complained the Windsor team forced Hamilton to the old two-bucks-and-a-kick style.

Al Lenard, high-scoring threat before enlisting in the navy, joined Hamilton Tigers at the Big Four team's practice last night and is expected to play against Ottawa Saturday. Lenard earlier had been reported a prospect for Toronto Balmy Beach of the O.R.F.U.

The Maharaja of Rajpipla paid top price of 4,200 guineas (about $19,850) yesterday for a yearling colt by Blue Peter, one of England's biggest money winners.

Two Toronto golfers, Bob Gray and Bill Kerr, yesterday defeated Quebec representatives Stan Horne and Jules Huot one-up in an 18-hole four-ball match at Toronto Cedarbrae in a warm-up for the Canadian Professional 72-hole championship opening today.

Errol Hanover at 25-1 outclassed the favorites at Lexington yesterday to win the $9,000 American stake for three-year-old trotters. The winners covered the first heat in 2.04 1-2, driven by Fred Egan, for a season's record for three-year-old trotting geldings.

At West Springfield, Mass., last night Frankie Donato, of Philadelphia, fighting at 134 pounds, won not one but two bouts. Substituting for fighters who failed to appear, he knocked out Billy Marcus, 133, of Hartford, in the second round and later kayoed Redcap Cooper, 143, of Springfield, also in the second.

At Buffalo Cliff Beckett, of Sudbury, knocked out Johnny Clements, Detroit, in the first round of a six-rounder. Beckett weighed 160, Clements 158. Pat Kelly, 139, Niagara Falls, Ont., outpointed Charley Hall, 140, in four rounds. But the third Canadian, Len Watsworth, of Hamilton, at 164, was outpointed by Johnny Clark, New York, 163, in eight rounds.

OIL STRIKE IS GETTING ROUGH

While one C.I.O. picket stands by in the manner of an umpire, some of his fellow-pickets rough up two members of the rival independent union who were attempting to go to work at the Standard Oil Company's big plant at Whiting, Ind. Isolated battles like this were in progress all around the plant and the 18-man Whiting police force was powerless to stop it. Whiting's Mayor James T. McNamara said that Governor Ralph Gates of Indiana would intervene.

Baseball Fans Pour Into Detroit

Detroit, Oct. 3. (AP) — Some 1,000 red-hot baseball fans, sports writers and just plain tried businessmen took to the Detroit River today as this city bulged at the seams while more and more World Series enthusiasts poured into town.

The 1,000—representing a fraction of the overflow from the city's overburdened hotels and rooming houses—were lodged on a large Detroit and Cleveland Navigation Company Steamship, which was tied up near the downtown area.

Today they're bringing in a smaller ship and that is sold out too.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 797
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

If you insist on bridge that's wrong, this warning may be fitting: Unless your heart is strong, you'd better take up knitting.

There is no excuse for wrong bidding in this deal:

NORTH
♥J 8 7 4 2
♦9 2
♣A 3

WEST	EAST
♠J 10 9 8 2	♠4
♥9	♥10 3
♦Q 4	♦K J 8 7 6 5 3
♣K 9 8 4 2	♣J 10 5

SOUTH
♠7 6 3
♥A K Q 6 5
♦A 10
♣Q 7 6

The bidding should go like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 H	2 S
3 H	4 NT
6 D	6 H

Five tricks are shown by the opening one bid. The bid of three hearts by that hand is a raise in contract. So, it shows a sixth trick. Bidding hearts twice admits that suit is rebiddable.

The immediate one-jump to two spades admits six tricks with two sure tricks. By the time south rebids, north can see 12 tricks in their pair for a possible slam and decides on hearts as trumps.

Four no-trump is the ace and king asking convention. Response of six diamonds is merely The Kibitzer's convention signal for the showing of two aces and only one king.

With two kings now known to be in the hands of opponents, north certainly does not want his partner to tackle a grand slam. His six heart bid is the only practical one under the circumstances.

West leads the spade jack and it looks as if declarer may lose two tricks; one in diamonds and one in clubs. How will he save one?

He hopes opponent spades are divided three and three. If they are, he can get a sluff of a south diamond on the fourth dummy spade.

But after two trump rounds and two spades, east shows out of spades. So, that dream is off. He must pin his faith on another plan. And the strip-and-end-play seems to be it.

Can the defenders upset that plot? We'll see.

Little Benny's Note Book

I woke up in the middle of the night thinking, G roozlem I left my baseball bat leening against the wall at the top of the stairs instead of putting it away in my closit. Good night somebody's libel to trip over it and blame it on me, or somebody's even libel to hide it somewheres to teach me a lesson. I better go and see if it's still there, I thought.

Which I did, sneeking through the hall easy in my pidjammers and feeling for the bat in the dark, and it was still there all right. Making me feel lucky, only I gave it an accidental push while I was reaching for it in the dark, and it fell all a ways down stairs, banging against the bannisters about every 2nd stair as if it was delibritly trying to make even more noise than necessary.

Making me feel unlucky, and I waited a while to see what would happen, which nothing did so I snuck down and got the bat and snuck up again and put it in my closit, and this morning at breakfist pop said to ma, I had the darndest dreem last night, I dreemed we were blocked in the house by an avalanche, but it didn't come from outside, it seemed to come from inside and went thundering right down the front stairway, what a dreem.

What a strange coincidence, ma said. I swear and declare I dreemed that Benny rolled himself into a ball and went cattapulting down the front stairs making the most deffening explosions. We probably ought to consult a syko annalist to see if there's a dubble meaning in a dubble dreem, but he'd probably just make up something out of his imagination and charge us a big fee, she said, and I said, Well, G, ma, gosh, pop, I bet I could imagine a meening for it without charging you anything.

Save your mental struggles for school, pop said.

Making me feel lucky on account of nobody could say I didn't try to confess, and it wasn't my fault if nobody didn't want to listen.

Fat German Prisoners Of War Cause of Disgust

Gravenhurst Internment Camp — I stood in the mess hall of this German officer prisoner of war camp Saturday noon and watched 350 tanned and healthy German officer-prisoners eat a noonday meal of bread and stew, reports D. Brown, staff writer in the Windsor Star.

A GOOD STEW

The stew was well nourished with meat, potatoes, onions and other vegetables, making a plain but wholesome and nutritious meal.

As I watched these former submarine commanders, army colonels and air force fighter pilots stand rigidly at attention and then sit down to their meal I could not eliminate from my memory a picture which The Windsor Star carried in an edition a few months ago. Possibly you will remember it—you should.

It was a picture taken shortly after V-E Day and it showed what was left of an American soldier who had been a prisoner of the Germans since the Battle of the Bulge last winter.

It was a picture which told only one story—starvation. I forget now the details—how much he weighed when taken prisoner and how much he tipped the scales when that unforgetable picture was taken—but I shall never forget how that unknown American soldier looked.

That picture flashed time and again through my memory on Saturday noon as I watched these thoroughly-defeated "supermen" eat their noonday meal.

THE LUCKY GERMANS

And it left only one thought. The prisoners of war in World War II who were lucky were the German prisoners.

There, before my eyes and the eyes of other reporters and photographers permitted to visit an internment camp for the first time, was the evidence of Canadian treatment of war prisoners as regulated by the Geneva Convention.

The comparison between that American soldier and these Nazi fighters was amazing and disgusting.

It disgusted me to think that while our boys were being treated like swine their counterparts in Allied prison camps were getting the best that the Geneva Convention would allow. It disgusted me to think that that American soldier could have returned home looking as fit and healthy as these ersatz "supermen" had a dishonorable enemy been honorable..

I purposely closely watched dozens of these German prisoners while they consumed their food. There wasn't a skinny or anaemic looking one in the whole lot. They looked like a gang of lumbermen following a season in the bush—bulging muscles, rosy cheeks and a body framework well-padded with sinew and fat.

No wonder they called this a decadent democracy. They made a fairly-healthy looking group of newspapermen look like candidates for a glue factory.

WELL-FED KILLERS

And it was these same well-nourished Nazis killers who scoffed at the suggestion of Hunnish brutalities in such concentration camps as Belsen and Buchenwald butcher shops.

Previous to the visit of newspapermen to this camp they had been shown photographic evidence of these atrocities. At first their feelings were mixed, but the majority of them—although they didn't admit it—seemed to realize that the pictures were authentic and there was no faking or propaganda connected with them.

However, when the subject again was broached by other reporters and myself they hedged for an answer but when they found it it always was in the same vein. They could not believe the German people doing such things.

I told one tow-headed Luftwaffe pilot that Poles, Jews, Czecho-Slovaks and other opposers to Hitler's will and might were put to death by the thousands in gas chambers and by shooting and the administration of acid.

"JEWISH PROPAGANDA"

He paused, bit his lip, and answered: "Germany fought a clean war. That is nothing but Jewish propaganda."

"But," I protested. "What explanation can you make for the moving pictures you saw and the photographs printed in the papers. That should be evidence enough to convince even the most skeptical of you."

"You were not there—I was not there when those pictures were supposed to have been taken. That is my answer," he concluded, speaking in perfect English.

Admittedly he was speaking for the minority group in this prison camp, but he also represented an ever-present stigma which will be the prime concern of the commanding officer until it is eliminated. This will not be easily eliminated.

Until such time as the inmates of this internment camp refrain from putting pictures of Herr Hitler and his crooked pictures on their dormitory walls, the stigma wil remain and with it will remain a definite connection with a smouldering ritual and belief—Naziism.

Joint Resolution Before Congress

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Oct. 3 — (CP) —A joint resolution for approval by simple majority of the Canadian-American agreement for completion of the Great Lakes St. Lawrence Seaway and power project was before Congress today.

Headed for certain strong opposition but with greater chances of success than previous similar attempts in this country, the move to get started on the St. Lawrence development was launched in the Senate and House of Representatives yesterday.

The project envisages completion of power and navigation in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River between Cornwall and Prescott to generate 2,200,000 horsepower of electric energy and link up the 27-foot seaway connecting Montreal with the head of the lakes.

Senator Alben Barkley, Democratic leader from Kentucky, introduced the resolution in the Senate with collaboration of four other Democrats and five Republicans.

White's District

White's District.—A few from this district attended Stirling Fair last week.

Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Wadsworth (nee Miss Mabel Yateman), who were quietly married at Bayside parsonage by Rev. A. C. McCallum.

The Sunbeam Mission Band for September was held on Friday afternoon at Quinte View School with Milton Saylor as president, and Betty Westfall as secretary. The Senior pupils sang "Wood Fairies" while the Junior pupils sang "Wave Your Hand Policeman". Joan Adams, Sheila Moore and Betty Westfall gave the story of "Ruth and Naomi" in parts, while Amy Robbins gave an animal story for the Juniors which showed that even the smallest can help others. "A Great Man is Great Anywhere", was given by Mrs. Young. It was a story of Dr. Taylor, a missionary, who gave up all else to cure leprosy in Japan until the outbreak of the present war. The oil of the chaulmoogra tree was used for the cure. At the outbreak of the war in Japan, he returned to Canada and was asked to be resident doctor at Bonnyville, Alberta, a missionary community of only seven houses including the hospital.

The meeting was closed with prayer and the National Anthem.

There was a good representation from this district at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wilson on Saturday afternoon and evening on the occasion of their 25th wedding anniversary.

Mass Protest Against Layoffs

Toronto, Oct. 3 —(CP)— A mass protest against layoffs, low wages and housing conditions will be staged under trade union auspices tonight at Maple Leaf Gardens. Labor leaders, civic officials and a representative of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture are scheduled to speak.

Representatives of the 10,000 employees of the Ford Motor Company of Canada on strike at Windsor, Ont., and other unionists from Kitchener, Guelph, Hamilton, Welland, St. Catharines, Brantford and Port Colborne — more than 900 in all — are expected to reach Toronto early this evening in a motorcade of more than 900 private cars and chartered buses.

Heading the Windsor delegation will be Mayor Arthur Reaume of Windsor, President Roy England of Local 200 of the United Automobile Workers of America (C.I.O.), and Alex Parent, president of U.A.W. Local 195.

The motorcade will pause a short time in Hamilton to hear Mayor Samuel Lawrence of Hamilton address a similar but smaller protest rally.

NAVY REDUCTION

"Actually, some 38,000 had volunteered for Pacific duty. Of the remaining 7,000 in the service on VE-Day some would have been required for continuing commitments elsewhere than in the Pacific; the balance were to be discharged.

"On Sept. 26, more than 19,000 personnel had been discharged from the navy, and almost 22,000 were on leave awaiting discharge, representing in all close to one-half of the total strength as it stood on VE-Day. Within the next four months an average of 10,000 should go out each month, and by March 31 next the size of the service in men should be down to approximately 10,000."

About 2,800 members of the Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service would be retained until the end of this year and then the service would be completely demobilized.

Carry Out Program:

Mr. Abbott said the government's program for the building of four tribal class destroyers would be carried out. One had already been accepted, two would be ready by 1946 and the fourth by 1947.

Canada's fleet on VE-Day — the fourth largest of the United Nations — included some 374 fighting ships and more than 566 auxiliary craft. Twenty-four Canadian ships had been lost up to VE-Day but Canadian ships destroyed or assisted in the destruction of 75 enemy surface craft and submarine vessels and in the damaging of 43 others.

About 60 ships were scheduled to participate in the Pacific War and the remainder, with the exception of a few training, patrol, auxiliary and harbor craft were to be paid off. To date 178 ships have been destroyed and laid up and 100 auxiliary and harbor craft have been removed from service.

Mr. Abbott said the main fleet base on the East Coast at Halifax would remain in operation. On the West Coast the main base would be at Esquimalt. Main ammunition depots would be at Renous, N.B., and at Kamloops, B.C. Navy headquarters would remain in Ottawa.

The House interrupted the war expenditures discussion briefly to debate a bill which would allow a woman to sue for divorce in the province to which she had gone and spent two years after being deserted by her husband. Now a woman must sue for divorce in the province in which the desertion occurred.

George Black (PC—Yukon) said that the existing legislation was causing hardship to some women.

Objections came from four Quebec members J. A. Dion (L—Lake St. John Roberval); Eugene Marquis (L — Kamouraska); E. Marier (L — Montreal Jacques Cartier), and Bona Arsenault (Ind.—Bonaventure).

They argued that women from Quebec where there are no divorce courts would be able to cross into Ontario, remain two years and sue for divorce. The bill would facilitate the obtaining of divorces.

CHAPTER 7

"I suspected as much." Elaine let her eyes roam over his rugged frame. "What were you in school? A tackle or fullback?"

"Fullback."

Elaine nodded, gently rubbing a bruised portion of her anatomy. "You must have given the opposition some rough moments."

"I like to think I did." He was fumbling with his hat.

"Well thanks for apologizing."

"Oh, sure." He took a step toward the door. "Sure you feel all right?"

"Ask the ankle."

He looked at her ankle. "It will be all right in a couple of days. You can use a cane."

"I was reserving that pleasure for my old age." Elaine shifted her ankle to a more comfortable position.

Paul looked at the script book on the night stand next to the bed. He bit his lip. "I'm really sorry that I've caused you to miss the show tonight. I know how you people feel on the straw hat circuit. Always hoping an agent or producer will be in the audience to see your acting. Well, don't get any ideas about the show must go and that sort of thing. Just stay off that ankle. I'm sure they won't take your part away from you. You have an understudy, don't you?"

"No," Elaine answered.

Again Paul bit his lip. "Look," Then he reddened. "Well, what I mean—perhaps I could talk to the manager and explain it to him."

"He wouldn't be interested," Elaine answered, the slightest trace of a smile playing on her lips.

Paul Mason looked puzzled. "He wouldn't?"

"No. You see, I'm not acting in any show tonight—or any night."

"Oh." Paul's voice was flat, a little hollow. He looked as if he might get mad.

"You didn't ask, you know."

Paul nodded, staring at the ankle. "That's true. I simply took it for granted." He glanced at the script book.

Elaine followed his eyes. "I work for Anthony Brann."

"Well!" Paul grinned and put his hat down on a chair. "So you know Annie Brann?"

"He is my boss. I should know him. And we do not speak of him as 'Annie'."

He looked around the room for another chair, then took his hat off the chair behind him, dropped it on the floor and pulled the chair up to the bed and sat down.

"You haven't known him long then. What do you do for him?"

"I read plays. At the moment I'm scouting for him. What do you do that you should know Mr. Brann?"

Paul crossed a long leg over his knee, took out a cigaret case, offered Elaine a cigaret and lighted it. He answered her with his own unlighted cigaret bobbing up and down between his lips. "I'm with International."

Elaine said nothing and Paul looked a little disappointed.

"You know, International studios. Hollywood."

"Yes," Elaine said. "That's in California. And this is New Hampshire. What happened? Take the wrong train?"

"I'm in the exploitation department. We've got a young actor we're building up. They sent me back here to get some stuff on him, a few pictures and generally make him known to the public."

"What's exploitation department'?"

Paul appeared a little disgusted. "That's the publicity department. You don't know much about Hollywood. do you?"

"Oh. I go to the movies now and then. When there's something good." She paused, watched her cigaret burn. "So the fullback turned out to be a press agent."

He did not like that and his lips grew firm. There was a knock on the door before he could retort to Elaine's comment, and she motioned him to answer it.

She could hear the rustle of tissue paper, the clink of a coin, and then Paul returned from the door holding two dozen huge red roses wrapped in flimsy paper. He looked embarrassed.

Elaine's eyes widened and she grinned beautifully. "How wonderful! Hand me the card, please. I think you'll find a vase over there." She pulled the white card from its envelope, then looked at Paul's back, bending over awkwardly arranging the flowers.

He turned and picked up his hat. "I'd better go." His eyes looked at the door, and then at the card. "I didn't intend to be here when the flowers arrived. I hope you like roses. I didn't know what else. . ." His voice trailed off and he looked uncomfortable.

"They're beautiful," she whispered and gave him her nicest smile.

The summer had passed, as summers will, a little slowly and sometimes unbearably hot. She had finished her scouting tour with another few days at the Brann country home.

She was watching Brann pace the length of his office, a scared lump in her throat. He had her play book on his desk. He wore a busy and neat face and Elaine wondered how he was going to let her have it.

"Ankle ever bother you any more?" He asked abruptly.

"The ankle? Oh, no. Some roses cured that." She smiled, a little wistfully.

"Roses?" He shrugged and continued his pacing. Then he stopped, turned to her and was silent for a long time. "You got something good there." And in a few steps he was at his desk again, opening the script book, looking at a page here and there. "I can open with it at the Berkshire in a month or six weeks, right after we get Bradley's going at the Guild. That "I need a good cast, though," will give me two for the fall openings." He stared at the ceiling, his eyes thoughtful. he mused. "And they're hard to get." He looked at Elaine. "What's the matter, child? Don't you feel well? You're white as a sheet."

Elaine's eyes blinked and the taste in her mouth was hot and dry. She gripped the chair arms. "Anthony, I think I'll faint."

He smiled and nodded. "Okay, but while you've got your eyes closed maybe you can dream up somebody good I can use in the lead."

She was standing by the desk, leaning over, her eyes jubilant. "You're really going to produce it?"

Brann waved his hand. "Now, don't give me that. You knew you had a good play when you walked into my office last spring. Now, have Susie call Lassen and we'll get busy on the set decorations."

Elaine was at the door when she turned and asked: "Anthony, do they sometimes call you 'Annie'?"

Brann looked up and smiled. "Sometimes. A few people I know well and like have that privilege. Why?"

"I met a Paul Mason."

Brann smiled. "Sure, I know Paul. Swell kid. In Hollywood now. Will probably own International studios some day at the rate he's going. How'd you meet

Elaine winked. "Roses. Ankle. Paul?"

Get it?"

Brann furrowed his brow for a minute, then returned the wink. "I get it."

"He was a fullback. I'll bet he was a beautiful fullback," Elaine said, closing the office door. "Good by. . Annie."

Brann winked again.

The play was what they called a smash hit. It was a sellout at the box office and the critics' raves were delightful to Elaine Grayson. Brann was enthused publicly predicted, the play would run forever if the cast and publicly predicted the play lived that long. And Elaine's bankbook suddenly took on new life.

It was while she was glancing through the dramatic section of one of the newspapers that she read an item about Lee in a gossip column. He was writing a new play for Karen, and John Warren would again produce it. It looked like another hit for the season, the item concluded.

Elaine put the paper down and stared unobjectively at her desk. It had seemed a long time since she and Lee had been close. It was almost nothing more than a memory. She hadn't seen him during the summer; hadn't heard of him or from him.

She wondered if maybe she still loved him, and the tight feeling inside her told her that perhaps she did, just a little.

Restlessly she got up, put on her coat and left the office. The sharp twist of fall brushed the city street and she ducked her head against the wind. She had no intention or purpose in leaving the office, no particularly important place to go. She did not feel like shopping or even going to a show.

She wanted to think. To think about Lee and drive the restless, empty ache out of herself again.

She turned in at Ricardo's, felt the warmth of the little cafe ease through her. It was clean and noisy and smoky. The wood-paneled walls were crowded with autographed pictures of theatrical personalities. There was no one she was meeting in Ricardo's. It was just a place to turn into. And there was always somebody seated at one of the tables that she knew. There was always talk of one thing or another—always leading back to a subject they'd just left: the theatre.

She wanted to sit someplace and listen idly to somebody who wouldn't care if she didn't answer. There were always people like that at Ricardo's.

Lassen, the designer, was sitting at a little table near the wall, eating scrambled eggs. He saw her and motioned to the empty chair opposite him.

"Hey, beautiful," he said. "Talked to Anthony a few minutes ago. He wants me to do stuff for him, only I can't. Do you suppose he'll be mad?"

Lassen was a tall, thin, stoop-shouldered young man with an old-looking face. He was an artist and a genius. He designed stage sets that were outstanding. He made a lot of money at it.

"I don't think he will be mad," Elaine answered, ordering a cup of coffee.

"Well, I hope not. I'd rather design sets for Anthony than anybody in the business. Only John Warren got to me first. Hey, beautiful. Who is this John Warren? I mean, where did he get the savvy to stage hits? I thought I knew them all."

"You're still a young man yet," Elaine chided.

So Warren was getting the best of everything for Lee's new play. She was glad, but Lassen wasn't doing her any good by talking about things and people connected with Lee.

"Well, I'd rather be doing a job for Anthony. Hey beautiful, your play's a smash, huh? Maybe you'll have a new one soon?"

"I suppose so," Elaine said vaguely. "Have you read the play Warren's putting on yet?"

"No. He's bringing an outline of it over here," Lassen said, pushing aside his plate. "Here he comes now."

Elaine twisted around in her chair and saw Warren, his shoulders straight as always, push open the door of Ricardo's and let Karen and Lee walk in. He followed them, motioned them to Lassen's table.

It was Karen who spoke first. "Why, Elaine, darling! So nice to see you." She was dressed as she always dressed—with gracious beauty and excellent taste.

Elaine did not hear Warren's greeting or congratulations on her play. She was looking at Lee. He was standing there, smiling down at her, his face freshly massaged, his clothes immaculately tailored, as if an artist had deftly applied his brush.

"Good work, Elaine," he said softly, holding her hand.

She wanted to jump up and run out of Ricardo's, away from his touch, from his voice, from his entire being. She smiled mechanically at him.

"I never had the chance to congratulate you on your play, Lee."

Karen cut in her eyes alert, a little wary. "He's writing a new one for me, darling. I had such great luck in the other that I insisted John have Lee write this one for me, too." She smiled prettily at Lee, put her arm through his. "We make a beautiful combination, don't we, darling?"

1,600,000 Tons Sugar Found In Java Ports

Washington, Oct. 3 — (CP) — Rationing officials who had predicted that sugar rationing in the United States would remain thru 1946 were revising their estimates today in light of statement by Agriculture Secretary Anderson last night that 1,600,000 tons of sugar had been discovered in Java ports.

Mr. Anderson said this would greatly ease the world sugar situation.

(In Ottawa, Prices Board officials said they had no information on the reported find.)

Beaver Plentiful In Albany R. Area

Toronto, Oct. 3 (CP)—Back from a tour of beaver sanctuaries on James Bay, 900 miles north of Toronto, Provincial Secretary George Dunbar last night said that he and his Deputy, James Taylor, shot their quota of wild geese but failed in attempts to get a white whale and a hair seal.

Mr. Dunbar and Mr. Taylor flew from South Porcupine to Moose Factory, piloted by Gordon Mitchell of South Porcupine, and then went 110 miles northwest to the Hudson's Bay post on the north bank of the Albany River six miles from its mouth.

They visited the Kapisko beaver sanctuary between the Attawapiskatt and Albany rivers. They found 500 beaver there, and decided that the area should be kept closed to trappers for another three years.

They reached Hudson Bay just after an official of the department of Indian Affairs had arranged to pay family allowances in groceries.

They saw an elderly Cree wearing an R.C.A.F. sergeant's cast off uniform and were told Indians liked to wear the uniforms and the more stripes and buttons they had the better.

Tiger of Malaya Will be Tried As War Criminal

By ROBBIN COONS

Tokyo, Oct. 3 — (AP) — Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita, the surrendered "Tiger of Malaya," will be tried in Manila by a United States Military Commission as a war criminal, Gen. MacArthur's headquarters announced today. The announcement said the trial, which will proceed immediately, will be open to the public.

Yamashita will be permitted to choose his own counsel if he wishes, headquarters said.

Specifically, the charge is that between Oct. 9, 1944, when he assumes command in the Philippines, and Sept. 2, 1945, at Manila and other places in the Philippines, he failed in his duty as commander "to control the operations of members of his command, permitting them to commit brutal atrocities and other high crimes against the people of the United States and of its Allies and dependencies, particularly the Philippines; and he, Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita, thereby violated the laws of war."

Turkeys Scarce For Thanksgiving

Turkeys and Thanksgiving, synonymous though they may be, will probably be separated this year. That's the word from the Wartime Prices and Trades Board, which announced last night that turkeys will probably be more notable by their absence than their presence over the holiday. Some stores may have small stocks on hand, but generally it is regarded as more than a month too early for fresh turkey production to reach the market. Chickens, the board says, should be available in reasonable quantities; a few ducks may be on sale, but no geese.

Maximum prices for poultry have been set. Roasting and frying chickens in the Grade A milkfed class are pegged at 43 cents a pound, while straight Grade A chickens are 41 cents. Capons are two cents a pound higher. Grade A milkfed broilers are 47 cents a pound during October. Prices will be slightly higher in November and December.

Hen fowls may sell for 36 cents during October and November, while for the few turkeys available in young hens or young toms, during October, the price will be 50 cents a pound for Grade A. Grade A geese, if you can find them in October, will sell for 39 cents per pound, with prices dropping in November and December. Grade A ducks, during October, can be sold at a ceiling price of not more than 41 cents. These prices for ducks and geese are for heads off and feet on.

Retailers, incidentally, can charge 10 cents per bird for drawing.

Six Feet of Snow In Banks Seen In Saskatchewan

With the weather suddenly turning disagreeable and much colder, local residents will be trusting that the Bay of Quinte district is not scheduled for the same turn of climatic conditions which have been experienced in northern Saskatchewan and Alberta areas.

According to a letter received from her aunt by Mrs. Donaldson, North Charles Street, on the 21st of September a heavy snow storm was received in the Flaxcombe district in Saskatchewan and on the 28th, when the letter was written, there was still six feet of snow in banks. Temperatures of 18 degrees frost were experienced damaging much of the crop which had not been threshed.

Flaxcombe is on the Goose Lake branch of the Canadian National Railways running between Saskatoon and Munson, Alta. It is approximately 125 miles from Saskatoon.

Ottawa Has First Fall of Snow

Ottawa, Oct. 3. (CP)—Ottawa had its first fall of snow of the season this morning—earliest snow in 55 years. The earliest measurable fall previously reported for the period was on October 18.

A strong circulation of cold air over Ontario points which caused a fall of snow at North Bay and at Killaloe, 100 miles west of here, was reported by the Dominion Meteorological office. Toronto also had a trace of snow.

Snow traces were also reported in the Muskoka Lakes region and at London. Similiar traces were predicted for the Ottawa region today.

HOGS

Toronto, Oct. 3 —(CP)— Grade A, dressed, were down 25 cents cwt. at London and 20 cents cwt. at Peterborough, in bacon-hog markets reporting early today; London $17.10 plus transportation, Peterborough $16.90 plus transportation. Hull later reported prices unchanged at $17.50 delivered.

Manitoba's Post-War Projects Call for Huge Expenditures

By GEORGE FINLAY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Winnipeg, Oct. 3 (CP)—Millions of dollars will be spent in Manitoba in a post-war program calling for industrial and agricultural development in which government and private industry will co-operate to provide economic security in urban and rural communities.

The Manitoba government has blue-printed a long range 10-year program involving expenditures of some $279,000,000. It includes development projects to cost $113,240,000 including power projects, estimated at $89,350,000, to be undertaken when markets are available.

Many civic and private developments are planned, the city of Winnipeg leading with a program of nearly $15,000,000 for public works and town planning, including a $4,000,000 plan for slum clearance.

Govt. Plan.

The government plans include a $60,000,000 highway construction program; $41,510,000 for development of natural resources; $168,800,000 for rural electrification to supply power to 25,000 farms, and $10,500,000 construction program for education and health divisions.

Many of the projects are dependent upon decisions to be made at the Dominion-Provincial Conference, and the part the Dominion plans to share in the costs.

A $6,265,000 program for immediate projects, designed to give early employment in the transition period, and to provide urgently needed services has been placed before the Dominion government. It includes farm electrification, buildings and schools for agriculture; hospitals, drainage, highway reconstruction, schools and mining development.

2,000 Homes For Winnipeg.

In greater Winnipeg it is expected 2,000 new homes will be ready by the end of the year, costing more than $10,000,000 an all-time home-building record here. In addition Wartime Housing Limited is constructing more than 500 homes in greater Winnipeg for rental to war veterans.

The possibility of new industries in urban centres, to provide for 10,000 workers from war plants and the many thousands of servicemen returning to civilian life, is being surveyed.

The Industrial Development Board of Manitoba, with government co-operation, is conducting a $30,000 three-year survey of natural resources, raw materials and available markets as a basis for establishing additional industrial production in Manitoba.

A post-war plan to establish Winnipeg as a key centre in aviation, both international and domestic, is included in the plans of the Winnipeg-St. James Airport Commission.

St. Lawrence Project Will Provide 2,000-Mile Waterway

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Oct. 3 (CP)—Along the long front of the St. Lawrence River, in the ports of the Great Lakes and in the freight-cost conscious western provinces many Canadians are watching with interest as a new move is made at Washington to obtain Congressional approval of the St. Lawrence waterway project.

With the principle of deepening the waterway generally accepted in Canada it is taken for granted that this country will go along with the United States either on the basis of the existing unratified agreement or on any other arrangement considered fair to Canada.

The present agreement was made in 1941 and contemplated works estimated to cost $500,000,000 on the basis of wage and price scales then prevailing. The cost now may be considerably higher.

For this sum the two countries would get a 2,000-mile waterway for ocean-going ships into the heart of the continent and some 2,100,000 horsepower of Hydro-electric energy for distributing in Ontario and New York State.

132 Millions Already Spent.

The $500,000,000 over-all cost estimate includes $132,000,000 already spent by Canada on the new Welland canal for which this country would get credit in apportioning the costs as between the two countries.

The really big job will be in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River where the river forms the boundary between the two countries and plunges down to lower levels in a series of foamy rushes.

Ancient, narrow and shallow canals on the Canadian side now enable smaller vessels to pass along the river between deep water at Montreal and Lake Ontario.

Cost of making this stretch of water navigable and developing the power which is available there was placed at $266,000000. The work involves erection of a main dam at Barnhart Island, 80 feet high, and a control dam further up. The main would raise the level of the river, flood 20,000 acres of land and provide a smooth water surface where the river now tumbles in spectacular rapids which attract thousands of sightseers. A canal with locks would carry ships over the 80-foot elevation.

Estimates of Costs.

The estimates apportion the cost of work in the International Rapids section as $38,000,000 for works pertaining solely to navigation, $99,000,000 for works pertaining solely to power and $130,000,000 for works pertaining to both power and navigation.

When the agreement with the United States was drawn up the Dominion government also concluded an agreement with the Ontario government whereby Ontario would get the Canadian share of the power developed and pay the Dominion $64,125,000.

The United States would finance work on the International Rapids section which would be carried on jointly by the two countries. Parts of work in other sections of the long waterway under the 1941 agreement would be apportioned to either country.

Thus Canada would be obliged to deepen the channel in the Canadian section of the St. Lawrence River below Montreal and also deepen the Welland canal while the United States would deepen channels where required in the Upper Lakes and build a new lock at Sault Ste. Marie.

Value of Canada's Aluminum Exports Increases Steadily

Ottawa, Oct. 3 — (CP) — Value of Canada's aluminum exports jumped from $26,428,186 in 1939 to $105,518,383 in 1944, Trade Minister MacKinnon said in a report tabled in the Commons.

The report was in the form of a reply to a question asked by Stanley Knowles (CCF — Winnipeg North Centre).

In the first eight months of 1945 the value of aluminum exports reached $96,066,868, less than $10,000,000 short of the figure for all of last year. Bulk of the exports in all years was made up of bars, blocks, ingots and sheets.

The figure disclosed that export of aluminum kitchen utensils is swinging sharply upward again after disappearing in 1942 and '43 and virtually disappearing last year. In the first eight months of this year the figure for that category — $42,517 — compared with $12,838 for 1939 and the high of $37,662 in 1941.

Another sharp increase was in wire and cable, 1945 exports of which have totalled $204,208 compared with $59,498 in 1944 and $242,010 in 1939.

BELLEVILLE WELCOMES 'HASTY PEES' REGT.

American Troops Isolated in Hotels As Troops Battle

Outbreak Between Chinese And Loyalists Brought to Halt

(By CLYDE FARNSWORTH)

Chungking, Oct. 4. (AP)—Maj.-Gen. H. S. Aurand, commander of United States Services of Supply Units, today announced complete cessation of fighting at Kunming between the Chinese Central government troops and forces of Lung Yun, deposed Yunan governor.

The situation is rapidly returning to normal after at least three Americans were reported wounded by the gunfire.

Earlier, United States troops had been reported isolated in two Kunming hotels as Central government and Yunanese troops battled.

The isolated United States soldiers—number unknown — were being supplied by liaison plane from Kunming's airfield on the opposite side of town.

It was reported that martial law had been declared by Gen. Tu Li Ming, commanding the Central government's 5th route army, which had headquarters there.

President Chiang Kai-Shek's ousted yesterday of the war lord Lung, known as "The Dragon", precipitated bitter street fighting between his troops and General Wu's.

Gen. Lu Han, the new governor who has been at Hanoi accepting the surrender of Japanese in Northern Indo-China, has not returned to Kunming.

There still was no news on the whereabouts of Lung, who was reported ousted as director of the Chiang's Kunming headquarters and as vice commander of Supreme headquarters of the Chinese armies as well as governor.

For their own protection, Americans were concentrated behind United States armed guards. Red Cross girls took refuge in the big Red Cross town club.

TREASON TRIAL OF LAVAL HAS STORMY OPENING

Trouble Starts by Accused Saying "I Am a Patriot and Will Prove It"

Paris, Oct. 4 —(AP)— The treason trial of Pierre Laval started in tumult today when defence attorneys tried to resign in protest to what they called the "illegal" pre-trial examinations of the former Vichy Premier.

Laval himself started an uproar with an opening declaration: "I am a patriot and I will prove it."

Presiding Judge Paul Mongibeaux, all 24 jurors and Andre Mornet, the white-haired prosecutor of Mata Hari, Marshal Petain and now Laval, jumped to their feet to shout down the white-tied Laval.

Laval, several times Premier of France in the days before the Republic was overrun by the Germans, faced the same high court of justice which condemned Marshal Petain to death and last night ordered the Vichy Chief of Militia, Joseph Darnand, to die before a firing squad. Petain now is serving a life sentence in the cold Pyrenees, his sentence having been commuted by Gen. De Gaulle.

Laval's lawyers had walked out and the judge, jury and prosecutor shouted in unison at Laval's assertion at the tumultuous opening of his trial for treason that: "I am a patriot and I will prove it."

M. Mongibeaux expelled Laval after the defendant, in a heated argument, slammed his brief case on a table and shouted:

"Well, condemn me now. At least the situation will be clear then."

A son of Pierre Cathala, former Vichy minister of agriculture, applauded Laval's statement, but the judge at this point suspended the proceedings and mobile guardsmen, armed with tommy-guns, hauled Laval and young Cathala, from the courtroom.

Though the white-tied Laval lost his first skirmishes, he fought back hard and bitterly and prepared to act as his own counsel after his lawyers quit the courtroom, contending they had lacked sufficient time to prepare their cases without having had access to the records.

OLD AGE PENSIONS HOLD SPOTLIGHT IN PARLIAMENT

All Members Agreed Changes Needed But Disagreement on Age And Scale of Pensions

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 4 — (CP)—Members of the Commons generally agreed yesterday that there was need for changes in Canada's old age pensions legislation, but there was some disagreement on such points as age of eligibility and the scale of pensions.

Health Minister Claxton, outlining the government's point of view, said the Dominion and provinces would have to agree on any changes in the legislation. He listed the proposals made to the preliminary Dominion-Provincial Conference last August and said that if these were accepted new Old Age Pension legislation would be introduced as soon as possible.

In its proposals, the Federal Government had offered to establish a National Old Age Pensions system under which everyone 70 and over would receive $30 a month. The entire cost would be borne by the Dominion. In addition, the Dominion offered to share with the provinces the cost of providing Old Age Pensions to destitute persons between the ages of 65 and 69.

Part of Over-all Plan

These proposals were part of an over-all plan which would put Canada in the forefront in the field of social security.

Mr. Claxton spoke after the House had heard Angus MacInnis (CCF — Vancouver East); P. E. Cote (L — Verdun); T. L. Church (PC — Toronto Broadview); F. D. Shaw (SC — Red Deer); Lt.-Col. David Croll (L — Toronto Spadina), and Norman Lockhart (PC — Lincoln).

The Commons today is expected to hear Air Minister Gibson outline peacetime plans for the RCAF while presenting estimates of his department for the current fiscal year.

Urges $50 Monthly

The pensions debate was set off the Commons on a motion of Mr. MacInnis who urged a $50 a month pension at the age of 60, regardless of the means of the persons in that age group.

Truman Advocates Development Of Atomic Energy for Benefit of Humanity

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(AP Foreign Affairs Analyst)

President Truman's atomic energy message, advocating development of this power for the benefit of humanity but the outlawing of it by international agreement for war purposes, is a momentous move for which the world has been waiting anxiously.

It probably is no exaggeration to say that the president's action is of far greater importance than the actual explosion on Hiroshima of the first atomic bomb to be employed militarily. After all, that was merely a horrific disclosure of an epochal instrument which already existed. The death and destruction which it wrought are inconsequential as compared with the iron-clad control of this power for, as Mr. Truman says, "atomic force in ignorant or evil hands would inflict untold disaster upon the nation and the world."

However, it isn't the purpose of this column to dilate on the control of the bomb but rather to draw attention to its relation to the troubled international situation. We can be sure that government officials and scientists in the major capitals of the globe have been burning midnight oil over this problem.

It is not that any country distrusts the intentions of the United States in the matter of the atomic bomb. But it would be absurd to think that foreign countries were not viewing the existence of this weapon with the gravest concern, especially since it is certain that other countries are bound to develop it before long.

For instance, it is felt that atomic energy has been responsible for some of the difficulties of the Big Five council of foreign ministers who have just concluded a highly unsatisfactory meeting in London.

This is speculation. Foreign Minister Molotov's only reference to the atomic bomb, so far as has been made public, is the remark he is said to have made at a dinner in London during the conference, when he observed that State Secretary Byrnes "doesn't need to persuade anyone—he just has to hold up a little bomb."

The quib was founded on a fact which was recognized in conference circles—that the bomb gives the United States bargaining power.

Whether the Big Three differences be associated with atomic energy, at least an international understanding over the use and control of the bomb would be calculated to facilitate settlement of the differences.

M'ARTHUR ORDERS NEW MAGNA CARTA FOR THE JAPANESE

Must Remove Bars To Freedom of Speech, Religion and Assembly And Release Prisoners

Tokyo, Oct. 4 — (AP) — Gen. MacArthur decreed a revolutionary Magna Carta for Japan today, ordering the Imperial Government to remove all bars to freedom of speech, religion and assembly, disband the brutal, still-active "thought police", and release their 3,000 political prisoners by Oct. 10.

In a letter to the newly-reorganized Japanese Central Liaison Office, Gen. MacArthur told the Imperial Government bluntly to abolish all legislation restricting freedom of the people.

The letter also demanded removal from office of Home Minister Iwao Yamazaki, and chiefs of the Tokyo and Osaka Metropolitan police boards and of the Territorial police of Hokkaido.

Gen. MacArthur meanwhile offered no comment on Russian demands for a four-power control government to replace his rule in Japan.

The orders went out amid a rising clamor by Japanese for release of the prisoners arrested by the "thought police" for voicing ideas that were not in agreement with the pre-surrender government.

Tokyo newspapers in the past week have reported the prison deaths of several of these political prisoners.

Blandly Denies

Yamazaki, who heads the "thought police," blandly denied any knowledge of the prisoners in an interview with The Associated Press today. He did admit that his men still were on the job, and said they were being especially vigilant against any Japanese daring to advocate "elimination of the Imperial House, overthrow of the constitution, violence against Americans or the Japanese government."

MINISTERS EXPOSE PITFALLS FACING A PEACE DRAFT

Some of Gloom Which Pervaded Last Days of Conference Dispelled

By FLORA LEWIS

London, Oct. 4,—(AP)— Some departing delegates to the Council of Foreign Ministers expressed the view today that the conference, while failing to reach agreement on basic principles of the European peace, had performed an important service in exposing the pitfalls that face the architects of the post-war world.

Some of the gloom which pervaded the last days of the conference seemed to have been dispelled, and the foreign ministers themselves all expressed optimism for the future.

A study of the official communiques issued during the 22 days of the conference and other information from authoritative sources gave this picture of what was done:

Italian Colonies: The United States plan for international trusteeship with dates fixed for independence, was referred to the deputies for use in their detailed studies. No agreement was reached.

Italian Reparations: Russia demanded $600,000; France suggested a token payment; the United States and Britain opposed any. The United States argued that its share of UNRRA costs, approximately 75 per cent, would throw the weight of any Italian payments on the United States.

Rally Demands Govt. Action In Ford Strike

By JACK MITCHELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 4 — (CP) — The Dominion government was officially notified today of a fight by Allied Canadian trade unions for "union wages, jobs and homes," also before it was a demand by one union leader that the government take over the struck Ford Motor Company plant at Windsor, Ont., if the company further refused to negotiate.

George Burt, Regional Director of the United Automobile Workers of America (C.I.O.) demanded government action in the Ford dispute, which has kept 10,000 workers idle since Sept. 12, at a mass labor rally in Maple Leaf Gardens last night. It was attended by a crowd filling about half of the Gardens' more than 14,000 seats.

"If Wallace Campbell (Ford president) refuses to meet with union officials and government representatives, I'm asking the Dominion Government to take over the company and operate it," said Burt. He accused Campbell of "raising a technicality" in refusing to negotiate while union pickets barred company offices.

Want Plants Run by Govt.

The meeting, sponsored jointly by the A.F.L. and C.I.O. through their delegates reconversion committee, asked the Dominion government in a resolution to "guarantee operation by government control if necessary of war plants now closed or closing."

The Federal government was also asked to regard the Ford strike and the strike at the Federal Wire and Cable Company in Guelph, Ont., as "matters of national emergency" and to intervene at once to "grant union security" in the plants.

Telegrams containing the resolution were sent today to Speaker Gaspard Fauteux and all members of the House of Commons in Ottawa.

Gallant Lads Who Served On Battlefields of Europe Greeted by Thousands Here

Brig. H. Graham Takes Salute Of His Former Comrades

With its war-scarred battle colors floating proudly in the van, the First Battalion of the famous Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment marched on its final parade through city streets today to the cheering acclaim of 15,000 people.

In brilliant October sunshine the "Red Patch Devils" swung through crowded thoroughfares as jauntily as they did five years ago with the Great Adventure yet before them.

Under the command of Major Allen Ross, D.S.O., the battalion augmented by hundreds of repatriated "originals" and other active service personnel of the regiment marched past a reviewing stand on Pinnacle Street where Brigadier Howard Graham, D.S.O. and Bar, former commanding officer of the unit took the last salute of his former comrades. With the Brigadier were high ranking military officials from M. D. No. 3 Headquarters, Kingston; Lieut.-Col. Donnan, general chairman of the Belleville District Reception Committee; Mayor Frank Follwell of Belleville, and civic and municipal dignitaries of the two counties.

Mascot Featured.

Featured on the reviewing stand was the famous mascot of the regiment "Chief Petawawa-Much," which accompanied the regiment through the bloody campaigns of Sicily, Italy, France and Germany. With the "Chief" was "Princess Minnehaha," well-known "sweetheart" of the Chief, which saw the regiment for the first and last time.

Originals March by Selves

Repatriated "originals" and other active service personnel, of the regiment swung along at the rear of the unit under the command of Major Bob Graham. Veterans of First Great War under the colors of the Belleville branches of the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada and the Canadian Legion paid tribute to their youthful comrades in the parade.

The regiment arrived at the Canadian National Railways station in two troop trains, shortly after nine o'clock today. Thousands of people were wedged tightly in the space outside the roped-off enclosure long before the first train arrived.

An impressive ceremony marked the handing over of the regimental colors by the Second Battalion of the regiment under the command of Major William Davern, Wellington, to the First Battalion under Major Ross.

Famous Colors Presented.

The regiment was lined up in battalion line and with the troops standing rigidly at attention, the Second Battalion Color Party under Lieut. Douglas Wark, formally presented the famous colors to the color party of the First Battalion. Cheers rang out in the morning air as the smart bugle band of the battalion with its white accoutrements marched proudly to the head of the parade.

The famous battle colors, bullet-riddled blue and gold silk fluttered jauntily in the morning breeze as the smart words of command rang out from officers and N.C.O.'s.

The general welcome and the thrill of homecoming did not detract from the military smartness of the unit. Heels clicked in one motion as the gallant "Hasty Pees" came to attention on the word of command. They were soldiers till the final order "Dismiss" was given on the Armouries lawns.

In column of threes with bands playing and flags flying the regiment swung through the station grounds to the vociferous acclaim of thousands of excited spectators. Civilians unable to control their emotions broke thru' the lines and grabbed the marching veterans. Small boys raced alongside the men, clutching hands and cheering.

First Battalion Dismisses.

Along Station Street the crowd grew thicker as the regiment, approximately nine hundred of all ranks marched on its last official parade. With the command "Dismiss" the First Battalion passed into history.

Densely packed crowds thronged Pinnacle Street as the troops, eyes turned smartly to the right, with the officers giving the high British salute marched past Brigadier Graham. Cheers from thousands on the County Court House lawns and streets rang through the morning air. Women cried and men suddenly discovered a lump in their throats. Small children dashed into the street to walk proudly alongside the marching veterans. The crowd, as soon as the parade swung by the reviewing stand, pushed its way good-naturedly to Bridge Street to get a second view of the parade before it came to the halt between Church and Pinnacle Streets.

Lunch in Armouries.

After dismissal the troops were taken to the Armouries where a ladies' committee, under Mrs. E. J. Neate and Mrs. Gordon Miller, assisted by members of women's organizations of the city served the men with lunch and other refreshments. Members of the Kiwanis and Kinsmen Clubs were on hand inside the building and helped dispense the refreshments.

Col. A. V. Yates, former commanding officer of the regiment, saw his old battalion on parade for the last time. Col. L. W. W. Slack, M.D. 2 headquarters, represented Brigadier Logie Armstrong, officer commanding the district. Many other military officials were present including a large number of repatriated officers from all parts of the Province.

Hotels were filled to capacity with relatives of the homecoming heroes. From as far away as Windsor, Chatham, Montreal, and one family from Port Arthur they came to greet their loved ones. It was a red letter day in the military history of the city.

Large Crowd at Station

Long before the scheduled arrival of the two trains which were to bring the Hasty Pees to Belleville, streets surrounding the North Station were a veritable mass of humanity as residents from all parts of the county strove to get as near as possible to catch possibly a first glimpse of a loved one.

Station Street from Bleecker to near the Swift Canadian Plant was jammed full while many sought to gain a point of vantage by crowding to the top of box cars and nearby rooftops. The first train rolled into the station promptly at nine o'clock and the second pulled in one-half hour later.

Touching were the many happy scenes of reunion as wives and sweethearts of the returning veterans broke police cordon lines and were swept into the arms of loved ones. Repatriates who had returned to Canada before the regiment had a boisterous reunion with incoming members of the unit as overseas acquaintances were renewed.

Courthouse Lawns Packed

A large crowd also jammed its way onto the terraced lawn in front of the county buildings on Pinnacle Street waiting for the arrival of the parade at the saluting base. Cheer upon cheer broke from thousands of lips as each company of the regiment marched smartly past the saluting base where Brigadier Howard Graham, former commanding officer of the regiment took the salute.

Along the line of march near the saluting base sea cadets joined arms in an effort to keep the parade route clear.

Canadian Dead Will Rest on Or Near Battlefields Where They Fell

Ottawa, Oct. 4 — (CP)—Canadian and other Empire dead of the Second Great War will find an eternal resting place on or near the battlefields where they fell.

Just as their fathers of 1914-18 still rest in the soil of France, Canada's dead of the war just ended will not be brought home to Canadian soil, the External Affairs Department said last night in an announcement on behalf of the Imperial War Graves Commission.

Instead, they will be taken eventually from the simple war graves which mark their battlegrounds in Sicily, Italy, France or the Netherlands and placed in major cemeteries in those countries.

The announcement, issued simultaneously in Britain and the Dominions, said the decision had been reached by the governments of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Newfoundland and India.

The War Graves Commission, accredited agent of all British Commonwealth governments, issued its statement in answer to requests from relatives wishing to bring their sons or brothers or fathers back to the soil of Canada. And it reiterated the policy laid down in 1918, saying:—

"To give effect to even a moderate demand for repatriation

BELLEVILLE RINKS WIN HIGH HONORS AT KINGSTON TOURNEY

Belleville rinks gathered all the glory in the Snowbird trebles played at the Kingston Bowling Club on Wednesday afternoon. A rink composed of Wilfred McLaughlin, Ray Zufelt and Cliff Argue won the three-game high with a score of 52 and a good plus. The two-game high winners were Jack Bean, J. W. Davison and A. E. Wonnacott. Ted Green and his rink of Kingston was third with the best two-game high and a Kingston rink also won the one-game high. Although the weather was extremely cold, the bowlers showed good form and the competition was exceptionally keen in all three games. Another Belleville rink skipped by George Pauley failed to get into the money class.

Police Lauded For Orderly Handling of Traffic

High tribute to the manner in which members of the local city police force, assisted by provincial officers and police from Trenton, Marmora and Madoc handled the tremendous throngs which greeted the arrival of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, was heard on many sides today.

Provincial officers from Napanee, Kingston, Belleville and Cobourg, with five constables and Chief Bain from Trenton, and one constable from Madoc and Marmora, assisted the Belleville police. In addition there were 15 provost officers from Military District No. 3 at Kingston.

Despite the large crowd which thronged the main streets of the city and particularly the route of march for the returning veterans, spectators were very orderly, according to police officers. Without exception the crowd seemed to sense the responsibility of police in averting traffic tie-ups and still keep the route of march open.

Military motorcycle provost corps members rode the curbside along the route of parade to clear the streets for the marching veterans, while city motorcycle officers and white cars of the provincial officers both headed and brought up the van of the parade.

Three Busses Sent By Peterborough To Take Veterans Home

Fine gesture on the part of the City of Peterborough in sending three special busses to Belleville to take members of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment arriving here back to that city was much appreciated by members of the unit.

Quite a number of the returning veterans have their homes in Peterborough and district and these were the soldiers who were to be taken back to the Liftlock City this afternoon following the official welcome in Belleville.

After members of the unit broke ranks in the Armouries they were treated to refreshments and sandwiches and were scheduled to leave for home early in the afternoon.

Large Crowds Enjoy Splendid Exhibits and Entertaining Contests at Madoc Fair

(By Staff Reporter)

Madoc—Cloudy skies and a cold raw wind which caused top coats and mufflers to be very much in order failed to mar the financial success of Madoc Fair held Wednesday afternoon when close to last year's record crowd jammed its way through the gates at the exhibition park here.

Admissions at the gate totalled approximately $2,300, as compared with a gross of $2,700 last year, while another $500 from the midway helped swell this year's "take" to make it equal that of a year ago.

Practically all of the scheduled events, with the exception of the stage program, were run off as advertised although many of those attending the fair preferred the comparative warmth of their autos to the chilling raw wind which swept the grounds. The Second Midlands reserve battalion band from Campbellford was heard in a musical program during the afternoon and also briefly at the close of the afternoon's performance.

A well rounded out midway was jammed to capacity with even the cold wind failing to discourage the children from their favorite ice cream cones and wafers. Milking machine firms were seen advertising their wares on the grounds, as was one hardware firm from Belleville.

Good Horse Exhibit

The horse exhibit at the fair was exceptionally good with some of the best horse flesh in the district being shown by well known owners, including Len Fry of Campbellford, J. C. McKnight of Selby, Sawyer-Stoll of Kaladar, the County of Hastings and others. Carriage classes were well contested and were the object of interest for many horse lovers.

Cattle, sheep and swine shown were among the best in the history of the fair with cattle exhibitors including Garnet Kerr with his herd of Jerseys; Elmer Woods of Ivanhoe with his Ayrshires, Fred Holmes of Queensboro with Herefords; and Ben Bleecker of Holloway with Durhams. Holsteins were shown by Max and John Burnside, of Madoc; David Hollinger of Stirling, J.S. Pimmett of Indian River and Kenneth Caskey of Madoc.

Sheep and swine were exhibited by Alfred Ayre of Hampton, Murray and Son of Casswell, Cecil Ayre, Osgoode and C. U. Heath of Bonarlaw.

Despite the backward season garden exhibits shown in the agriculture building made a splendid showing with Clem Ketcheson being a prominent exhibitor in the grains and roots classes. Homer Leavitt and Mrs. Leavitt of Wooler were prominent in the vegetables and horticultural classes.

Good Handicraft Display

Some fine displays of ladies' handicraft was seen in the Women's department with all manner of knitted socks and sweaters, together with patterned scatter mats and quilts making a colorful exhibition, while the culinary efforts of district women also made a tempting display. Various school classes were a bright spot of the building.

Twenty-eight cheese were shown in a display which matched well that of former years with Bert Jones taking the Cheese Producers' Special and also having the highest scoring cheese in the show. Prizes for best finish went to W. Wilkinson and A. McKillican.

Dominion Bank special winners in the cheese classes were Angus McKillican, A. Pitt, W. Wilkinson and Delbert Cammon. Prizes for best finished cheese given by the Madoc Cheese Board were won by A. Pitts, D. Carman, A. McCreary, W. Wilkinson and J. Finnigan, while Society prizes for the best finished cheese went to H. Elliott, A. McCreary, Bert Jones, A. McKillican, W. Wilkinson and A. Pitts. Cheese Producers' special winners were Bert Jones, H. Elliott, A. McCreary, Angus McKillican and O. Carman.

Contests

The horse drawing contest among four powerful district teams was won by Leo Fry of Campbellford, with J. C. McKnight of Selby taking second honors and a team owned by the Sawyer Stoll Lumber Company of Kaladar winning third money. Another pair of horses owned by Sawyer Stoll, with its $500 set of harness, was a show team of the fair.

Contests on the stage platform were an object of interest on the part of various competitors as well as on the part of a large throng of spectators as the customary honors for log sawing and step dancing were decided.

Geo. Peacock and Bill O'Brien of Coe Hill had to be doubly good to take first money in the log sawing contest as after winning in handy fashion using their own saw were forced to repeat their performance with the crosscut supplied by the Society. With their own saw the Coe Hill stalwarts nipped off their two cuts in a record time of 35 seconds and in their repeat performance accomplished the feat in 43 seconds.

Maurice Freyman of Hybla and Raymond Saulay of Turiff were close seconds doing the two cuts in 44 seconds, while Cecil and Fred Robinson of Eldorado, and a brother act of W. and P. Parks tieing for third at 46 seconds.

Nail Driving Competition.

In the nail driving contest for ladies, Mrs. T. Clarke topped the list taking 21 seconds to sink the four three inch nails. Mrs. Howard of Belleville, last year's winner, was second at 24 seconds, while Mrs. Atkins took third place at 29 seconds. In the men's counterpart, W. S. Kellar of Thomasburg was first taking 12 seconds; H. Watson of Bancroft, second at 13 seconds and Victor Houston of Coe Hill, third at 14 seconds.

Step dancing honors went to Ethel Sayers of Bird's Creek with Webb Kellar of Thomasburg second, and Mr. Nicholson of The Ridge and J. Monoghan of Coe Hill tieing for third.

It was almost a clean sweep in the oldest gentlemen events for Mr. Robert Eggleton of Stirling who at 90 years of age took the prize for being the oldest gentleman on the grounds, also for the oldest public speaker and for the masculine half of the eldest couple on the grounds. Speaking briefly to the audience Mr. Eggleton recalled the Reil rebellion and also Fenian raids and expressed his joy at the war now being over. Mr. Gardner Mitts of Halloway at 89 years took second honors for being the oldest man.

Deputation Asks Council to Purchase Gilmour Yard for Park Purposes

Trenton (Special)—Asking that the town take immediate steps to purchase for park and recreational purposes all land between Bay Street and the Trent River and Bay of Quinte, more familiarly known as the old Gilmour Lumber yard, a deputation from the Trenton and District Trades and Labor Council waited upon the town council at its last meeting.

The members of the deputation were informed by Mayor Cory that the land in question had recently been acquired by a large mining company which proposed to erect a concentrator on it. It had been under option for some time, unknown to the council. The Mayor pointed out that if arbitration proceedings had to be resorted to to get the property they would be costly to the town, as the company would fight hard to retain its holdings. Further, any award made by the judge involving the amount to be paid by the town for the property would have to be paid into court. However, after some discussion, it was agreed that the clerk should obtain a price on the property and present same at the next meeting.

Suggests 5-Year Plan.

The council was asked by Councillor Frank Haffey to embark on a five-year plan to carry out civic improvements recommended a year ago by the Town Planning Committee—a creation of the council. The plan, if carried out, would be very costly, Mayor Cory pointed out. Councillor Haffey said that nothing had been done concerning the report and that the town was suffering from the lack of a definite plan.

After some discussion it was decided that a special meeting of the council will be called shortly to consider the report. Members of the Planning Committee will be asked to attend and offer suggestions. One of the recommendations is a new City Hall, while others call for parks, playgrounds, waterfront improvements, extension of municipal services, etc.

The council disposed of several vacant lots owned by the Corporation to prospective builders, one lot at the corner of Front and Division Streets brought $2,000, and it is said that a service station will be erected there when building conditions improve.

Rotary Entertains Air Vice Marshal.

Air Vice-Marshal E. E. Middleton, C.B.E., of No. 1 Air Command, Trenton R.C.A.F. station, was the honored guest of Trenton Rotary Club at its weekly luncheon this week in the Oddfellows' Hall, when lunch was served by the ladies of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, proceeds of which will go to the Trenton Hospital Fund.

The Air Vice-Marshal, who has had an outstanding record of R.C.A.F. service was introduced by Rotarian Ed. Simmons and the vote of thanks was moved by Rotarian Dr. E. A. McQuade. The Air Vice-Marshal paid warm tribute to the two thousand young men and women from Canada who worked in London during the trying and dangerous times for the welfare and maintenance of morale for the personnel of the R.C.A.F. They had been little heard of, he said, but their services had been invaluable. Upon their return to civil life in Canada they were entitled to every consideration.

To Observe Centennial.

On Sunday next one hundred years of history will be specially marked by the congregation of St. George's Anglican Church in Trenton. At the evening service Bishop Lyons will unveil a tablet to mark the occasion, also an honor roll of those from the congregation who enlisted in the war just concluded.

On Thursday evening a congregational dinner is being held in the Canterbury Hall.

To Hold Clothing Drive.

Plans are complete in Trenton for the National Clothing drive for the assistance of thousands of people in European countries. Norman Banfield is the Chairman of the local committee and the collection will be made in Trenton from October 8th to 15th, if possible, and all citizens are asked to assist.

There is still a great need for help at the local Red Cross work rooms where work is being carried on as usual on Tuesday afternoons for the next two weeks. The rooms are scheduled to close at the end of November but in the meantime several quotas of articles of sewing and knitting are yet to be finished. Small garments of various kinds are already cut and need only to be sewn and finished in time to be shipped before the closing date. Good sewing machines are in the rooms, but if it is not convenient for workers to sew there on the Tuesdays, the work may be taken home. Some service socks are yet to be made and there is also an urgent need for turtle neck and sleeveless pullovers for seamen, also sweaters and socks for six-year-old girls, as well as infants' garments.

A beautiful donation of knitted articles was received at the work rooms on Tuesday from Mrs. L. Wilson. This included three units of sweaters, bootees, and bonnets for babies, two individual sweaters, a bonnet, shawl and three pairs of socks.

Red Cross

..Kenneth Peterson for false pretences was given one month in the County Jail, when he appeared before Magistrate T. Y. Wills in Trenton police court on Tuesday. It is alleged that a Trenton citizen in a line-up at the beer warehouse discovered he had left his ration book at home. He was about to leave the line when he was accosted by Peterson, and a John Burns. Burns offered to purchase beer for the Trenton citizen for $1.80, plus the price of the beer. The citizen told him he would not pay, and while he was still holding $4.00 in his han, Peterson appeared and taking the $4.00 form the hand of the citizen said he would go and get the beer. Instead of going into the store, however, he broke through the line and started to run down the street with the aged citizen in pursuit. Police were called and Peterson was arrested as was John Burns who was charged with the same offence, alleged to have been in collaboration with Pteerson. However, the charge against Burns was dismissed by the Magistrate.

John Horlick, from Montreal, in company with a minor from the same city, was arrested in Trenton during the week by the C.P.R. police as they stepped off the train. They had several articles, such as a parka, camera, suint coat, etc., which they were unable to account for, and later admitted that they had stolen the same in Belleville from a C.P.R. coach. Horlick, who had a previous record, was given one month for theft, and ten days for trespassing. The minor was allowed to return to Montreal, with his parents, who had come to Trenton from Montreal for him.

Sixteen citizens were fined $2 and costs for failing to obtain a radio licence, and seven others were fined $10 and costs for breach of the Liquor Control Act. One other for a breach of the L.C.A. paid $25 and costs.

Two paid $2.00 for breaches of the traffic by-law, and six paid $4.50 for failing to obey traffic signals, and one was enlarged for a week.

Cecil Mountenay, charged with careless driving, was fined $25 and costs. The Magistrate recommended that his licence be suspended until he furnished proof of financial responsibility.

Jack Perneroski charged with careless driving, was fined $5 and $11 costs.

Two were fined $7.50 for speeding and A. Alexander was fined $10 and costs for driving without a licence.

Ernest Walton, charged with assault, had his case enlarged for one week and another assault charge was withdrawn by the complainant.

A local youth was remanded for a week on a vagrancy charge. A Trenton woman was fined $1 and $2.50 costs for failing to send her child to school.

Forty-eight cases, in all came before the Magistrate with Assistant County Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson prosecuting.

Truman Prepares To Order Seizure Of Oil Refineries

500,000 Workers Idle and Traffic Snarled Along the Labor Front

New York, Oct. 4 —(AP)— More than 500,000 workers were idle because of labor disputes across the United States as new and continuing disagreements snarled traffic along the labor front.

Mounting strife over labor issues — most of them involving wages and hours — brought a new high in the number of idle this year. More than 160 separate strikes, shutdowns and work stoppages were running concurrently and fresh stoppages threatened to expand the strike lines.

As President Truman prepared to order seizure of oil refineries in 15 states after the government was unsuccessful in conciliation, Labor Department officials were confronted with serious trouble in eastern coal fields.

Shipping in New York harbor was partially paralyzed by a port-wide strike of 60,000 workers, including 46,000 A.F.L. longshoremen.

Strike to Continue.

As the President's seizure was awaited, the executive board of the C.I.O. Oil Workers International Union called a meeting to decide whether to ask the 43,000 strikers to go back to work for the government. In northern Indiana, where eight plants of seven companies have been closed, a union spokesman said the strike in that area will continue.

The offer, however, was not acceptable to 10 of the 11 oil companies and Secretary Schwellenbach recommended seizure of the plants.

As the government's initial major attempt at a post-war labor settlement ended in failure, the shutdown of refineries brought tight gasoline situations to many communities, including Detroit, Boston and many cities in Ohio where an emergency oil committee said a "statewide crisis impends."

400 Mines Shut Down.

Shutdowns of soft coal mines jumped to nearly 400 and the idle to about 115,000 in four states as additional thousands of miners joined in a spreading walkout, which stemmed from a strike of supervisory employees.

Emergency coal rationing was in effect in Pittsburgh, where a survey showed less than 1,000 tons in retail yards. The dispute arose over collective bargaining recognition of the Supervisory Employees Union, an affiliate of the United Mine Workers.

In Detroit, General Motors Corporation was the first of the motor industry's Big Three to give the C.I.O. United Automobile Workers Union a reply to its demand of a 30 per cent wage boost. The proposal was rejected as "unreasonable." The union said negotiations would be resumed Saturday.

A strike vote involving G.M.'s 325,000 employees is set for Oct. 24 and the U.A.W.-C.I.O. will vote on a Chrysler Corporation strike on Oct. 25 with some 80,000 workers involved. It also has petitioned for a strike vote at Ford Motors, which employs 109,000. The wage demand is the paramount issue.

CANADIAN DEAD

would be a task of even greater magnitude than in 1918; for though the numbers involved are happily fewer, the graves are far more widely scattered and shipping facilities are almost non-existent.

"On the other hand private repatriation by a few individuals who could afford the cost would be contrary to that equality of treatment which is the underlying principle of the commission's work and has appealed so strongly to the deepest sentiments of our peoples."

Therefore, repatriation would neither be undertaken nor allowed.

Already some major cemeteries have gathered in Canadian dead, the first of them overlooking battlegrounds in Sicily. Another lying south of Ortona in Italy holds the dead of the Moro Valley and other battles in Italy.

Defence Headquarters announced more than a year ago that all necessary steps had been taken to ensure that the land containing Canadian war graves overseas would be held in perpetuity. They will remain the permanent possession of the Dominion.

And their custodian in perpetuity is the Imperial War Graves Commission which was formed during the First Great War to operate under special powers conferred by Royal Charter. Its headquarters are in London and the Canadian member is the Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, British High Commissioner to Canada.

In moving the bodies of Canadian armed services, the commission assume the erection of a standard headstone above them. Ample space is provided on the stones for personal inscription and the engraving of a religious emblem if the next-of-kin so desires. The next-of-kin will be written for such particulars.

An Ever-Present "Today"

Fire prevention Week, observed this year from October 7 to October 13, is a good institution, because it brings us to an awareness of the constant menace of fire, which cost Canada $40,562,478 in 1944, according to the report of the Dominion Fire Commissioner.

Our fire-fighting systems have been so improved and the appliances of our daily domestic and business use made so safe in recent years, that we are prone to feel that the dangers of fire have been far removed from us. Our attitude — and how wrong it is — is apt to be: "No doubt, but that would never happen to me."

But the fact is that it does happen and the victims learn to their cost that the only sure protection against fire is active and unceasing vigilance. It is difficult to pick up a newspaper without reading of some fire which has cost many thousands of dollars, endangered and perhaps claimed human lives and left people without employment or without shelter.

The poster issued throughout Canada by the regional insurance underwriters' associations strikes a ringing note, with the warning: "Remember! Fire Prevention 'Week' has 365 days!" It is an easily-remembered slogan, which should serve to remind the men, women and children of Canada that, in guarding against fire, time is measured in an ever-present "today." "Yesterday" is gone and "tomorrow" may be too late.

Loss by fire is a serious matter, not only in money, industry, commerce and employment, but in homes and in human lives and hopes.

The war, now victoriously behind us, has raised costs of construction to an amazing degree. People who carried adequate insurance in 1939 and maintained it on that basis now find that they cannot replace their burned homes out of the moneys paid in insurance claims. In Montreal, for example, the increase in cost of building a house has risen 41.1 per cent since 1939. Proportional increases are in effect in all other parts of the Dominion. And the increased cost of furniture and fixtures must also be taken into consideration.

With these things in mind, therefore, the annual arousing of the public mind to the perils of the fire-menace is a public service. The heeding of the call is a public duty, not to be lightly dismissed when Fire Prevention Week is over, but to be carried out, unremittingly, by the whole of society, through each of its members, day by day and every day.

One of Canada's most insidious and destructive enemies, which is one most easily brought under control if the public will take an interest in the matter, is fire. In the last five years fire losses have steadily increased, from $22,735,264 in 1940 to $40,562,478 in 1944.

This is a controllable loss, therefore, fire prevention is a subject in which everyone should exercise some effort because, directly and indirectly, the loss is borne by the public. True, insurance companies pay for losses incurred by their policy holders, but the public should remember that these losses must come from premiums paid. Obviously, the higher the fire loss the higher must be premium costs.

Fires however involve more than financial transactions. A burned factory throws people out of employment, cuts their earning power and effects the corner grocer, the milkman, the shoemaker and all those who depend for trade on the people formerly employed. A burned out apartment or duplex involves the owners in loss of rents unless they have insurance covering them against such contingencies. And, not least of all, fires usually take a toll of human lives and cause a great deal of physical suffering.

During the last six years Canada proved its strength when it marshalled all its forces for war. Surely it can do the same to cut down these lamentable losses. The insurance companies do what they can through educational efforts. They issue messages of all types, warn their clients and the public at large of the causes and dangers of fires, collaborate with the authorities in assuring adequate protective and combative measures, but in the last resort it is the individual Canadian who must remember that fires are often caused through his neglect, thoughtlessness or carelessness.

Throughout Canada, from October 7 to October 13, we are asked to observe Fire Prevention Week. This is an excellent idea in itself but as the poster issued by the regional associations of "board" insurance companies points out: "Fire Prevention 'Week' has 365 days."

Punctured Tires Run at 50 M.P.H.

Tires which even when deflated give a smooth, safe, one hundred mile run at more than fifty miles an hour have been developed by a well known United Kingdom company. These are of a type which was specially produced to solve a vital war problem; that of enabling war vehicles to keep running under heavy enemy fire. Bullet-proof types tires have been found inadequate since, owing to the high degree of internal heat generated, they were absolutely unusable in hot climates. The new tire not only overcame this problem of internal heat but it was also able to carry a full load for long distances even when penetrated by bullets or shrapnel. Stability and handling control when the tire is at zero pressure are ensured by a special body construction consisting of a stiff rubber liner secured to the inside of the tire. The inside walls are thus strengthened to stand up under a heavy load without depending for support on inflation pressure.

The danger of the deflated tire slipping on the rim is eliminated by means of a spacer band or bead lock. Incidentally, this bead lock, which was also invented by the same firm, was an important contributory factor in the success of the Allied invasion of Europe. During the war these tires have proved their value on every type of wheeled vehicle from the 5.5 dual service gun Howitzer — where each tire supports a standing load of some two and three-quarter tons — to the Lancaster bomber on which the tires must stand up to a shock load of as much as forty-five tons. They have also been fitted to countless army motor bicycles, pedal bicycles and cars. Having helped to win the war, the engineers, who evolved the tire, are now busy investigating the peacetime uses to which the manufacturers of specialized transport may put their famous tires.

Write It With Music

(Christian Science Monitor)

That new "Typatune" has definite possibilities. Resembling a portable typewriter, it is said to play a full range of classical or popular music. The only thing is, it is apt to make feminine manipulators of typewriter keys dissatisfied with their prosaic instruments. Can't the makers turn out an affair that will pour forth a tune while it types out a letter?

Of course, selectivity would be important. Think of the inspiration that would come to writers of food advertisements if their efforts on the keys were accompanied by "Put on the Kettle, Mom, I'm Home to Stay." And any sleepy-time tune would be effective in dashing off promotion material on restever mattresses with rust-never springs. But one could hardly do his best in extolling the virtues of oil burners if the "Typatune" took a notion to play "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." Or sell lumber to the accompaniment of "Don't Fenee Me In."

As it is, the new product should prove popular with hospitalized veterans. And because of its portable feature, the party-goer can make sure of his ability to "amaze his friends."

Merchant Ships for France

Britain is to replace all shipping losses suffered by those United Nations who placed their merchant ships at the disposal of the Allied cause during the war. Seven British merchant ships, for instance, have recently been sold to France, and a further three are to follow. Besides this, the British government has granted widespread facilities for the building of French merchant ships in British shipyards. Similar concessions are being granted by the British government to other United Nations.

POOR GOLFERS' CHANT

"I go to golf for friendship's sake,
Not just to win the bets I make.

I golf to share the wide outdoors,
And not to boast of shots and scores.

To me the prize is not the thing;
The course is gay with birds that sing.

I love the game, but more I love
The fleecy clouds that drift above.

I play at golf to get away
From all the meanness of the day.

From golf both health and joy I claim,
And win or lose it's all the same."

This stuff is heard at every club,
The soothing solace of the dub.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What is black diamond?

"Black diamond" is the popular name for a dark mass form of impure diamond known technically as "carbonate" or "carbonado."

Carbon in this form is the hardest stone with which science is acquainted and it occurs in commercial quantities only in the Brazilian state of Bahia.

Carbonados are slightly cellular and have a lower specific gravity than white diamonds.

Black diamonds have no particular value as gems, but because of their toughness and lack of cleavage they are extensively used in diamond drills, in truing abrasive wheels, in wire drawing dies, in specially shaped tools for working metals, and in sawing granite and marble.

In powdered form carbonado is used to polish crystalline diamonds.

These stones, sometimes referred to as the anthracite variety of diamond, range in shade from dark gray to black.

When black diamond was first found in Bahia in 1876 its true value was not suspected.

Lumps of the substance were sent to diamond merchants in Amsterdam as curiosities.

A lump of black diamond weighing 2,000 carats was used as a counter-weight on a door in a diamond-cutter's shop.

One day a workman, who had been having difficulty in polishing the facets of a diamond, split off a corner of the black diamond and powdered it. He found that it was much more effective than the powder of ordinary diamonds.

The largest black diamond ever found was discovered in 1895 and weighed 3,078 carats.

Regarded as only a worthless curiosity at the time, today such a black diamond would be worth $200 a carat, or about $6,000,000.

Sometimes "black diamond" is applied to ordinary coal, which is carbon in another form.

Reparations Commission: Agreement reached to move it from Moscow to Berlin and speed reparations payments.

Pacific: United States turned down M. Molotov's request to discuss a control council for Japan. M. Molotov at the last minute presented a demand that Gen. MacArthur's rule be replaced by a four-power control government.

Soviet Repatriation: Russian request that people with homes inside new Soviet boundaries (Poles and some Baltic peoples) be repatriated was disputed.

French Repatriation: Russians agreed to examine individual cases of Frenchmen impressed into the German army and captured by Russians; refused to repatriate them en masse.

French Restitution: Russia favored a French proposal that property stolen by the Nazis be earmarked for return so that it would not be included in reparations payments.

Internationalization of the Ruhr and Rhineland: No agreement; matter referred to diplomatic channels.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Under existing legislation the eligible age is 70 and recipients are subject to a means test. The Dominion pays 75 per cent of the cost of pensions up to a maximum of $25 a month. The provinces, however, are free to increase the amount.

Mr. Claxton said adoption of Mr. MacInnis' plan would cost the country more than $850,000,000 annually, an amount greater than was collected in personal income tax during the 1944-45 fiscal year.

Would Give Canadians Lead.

The proposal came at a time when people wanted tax relief and he doubted if support for such a plan could be obtained. He favored the Dominion proposals to the provinces which included a pension plan that would cost $200,000,000, a health insurance plan that would cost $150,000,000 annually and the now effective Family Allowances Plan that would cost $200,000,000 annually.

These three measures would give Canadians the lead in social security fields.

The proposals had been made to the provinces after years of study and he felt it unwise to bring up at this time entirely different suggestions. It would not be keeping the faith with the provinces, which had to agree to any changes in the legislation.

If the provinces agreed to changes the new proposals would be made effective through legislation as soon as possible.

A Huge Sum.

Mr. MacInnis calculated that his proposal would cost about $720,000,000 annually. He agreed it was a huge sum, but it could be provided if the economic resources of the country were properly handled.

Aged people were holding jobs that could be better filled by young men. During the depression years, for instance, there were between 300,000 and 400,000 unemployed young persons. If these youths had been put to work one could picture the amount of wealth they would have produced.

M'ARTHUR ORDERS

The minister said his police were "not so harsh" as before the occupation but that their methods of operation were unchanged from war and pre-war days.

Yamazaki said he felt it was a main duty of the Home Ministry to prevent any expression against the Imperial House. The "thought police" were particularly vigilant against Leftists or Communists, he said, "because they advocate elimination of the Imperial House."

Five-Page Letter

Gen. MacArthur's five-page letter to the Japanese government said in effect that the people of Japan are to be allowed to say what they think — including expressions about the Emperor; worship as they choose; hold meetings as they desire; and not be fearful that the police will throw them into prison.

Headquarters approved the appointment of Kenji Kodama as president of the Japanese Central Liaison Office. It virtually completed the reorganization of that key agency through which Gen. MacArthur operates.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

Signed Letters, Not More Than One Page or 100 Words Long, Pertaining to Personal Health and Hygiene, Not to Disease, Diagnosis or Treatment, will be Answered by Dr. Brady if a Stamped Self-Addressed Envelope is Enclosed.

INSTEAD OF TAKING PHYSIC

The Number One succedaneum for mineral oil and other physic is flaxseed, as described in this column the other day. If you missed it perhaps you had better send me a dime—not wired, riveted, glued, stapled or stuck up with messy stuff—and a stamped and addressed envelope, for the booklet "The Constipation Habit and Colon Hygiene."

A good many people who formerly had to take one or another laxative or physic more or less regularly have learned that by keeping in the house a supply of plain wheat and eating a reasonable amount of it daily, in place of things made of refined white flour there is no longer any need for physic. On request, if you provide stamped self addressed envelope, I'll send you a pamphlet "Wheat to Eat" which gives numerous recipes or ways to use plain wheat in the everyday family dietary.

It is not merely the "roughage" of the bran and outer coat of the wheat kernel that accounts for the remedial value of plain wheat against constipation. The increased intake of vitamin B-complex, particularly B1 (thiamine), of which wheat (unrefined) is the best food source, is the more important factor—it tends to improve or restore "tone" to the alimentary muscle, the muscle coat of the entire stomach and intestine, which is impaired and weakened from long B-deficiency. Muscle tone gives the stomach and intestine the resilience and vigor necessary for normal digestion and bowel function, peristalsis, onward wave movement.

Here at risk of frightening almanac educated Wiseacres away I'll lay all my cards on the table so you can assure yourself if you have conned your almanacs well that you know more than I do about these things. If you have not been too thoroughly indoctrinated by the nostrum and quackery interests you may be enough interested to play along with me.

By trying it on the dog, so to speak, some thousands of readers or rather students of the booklet above mentioned have learned that sudden withdrawal of whatever artificial aid or "regulation" of bowel function one has come to depend upon permits natural or automatic control of the function to resume. Moreover thousands of other victims of the physic habit who perhaps never had the good fortune or good sense to read or study anything on the subject aside from what the nostrum mongers provided for them have learned through force of privation that even involuntary cessation of interference enables the natural autonomic or automatic regulation of the bowel to recover—after a few days, more or less, of anxiety on the part of the Wiseacre.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Hiccough

Could you recommend a treatment for hiccoughs. Doctors have given me medicine which gives only temporary relief. I have them for ten or fifteen minutes every few days. (R. J. A.)

Answer—Try holding ordinary paper bag over nose and mouth and breathing in it for a minute.

Why Have Headache?

Your pamphlet "Why Have Headache" has brought me a great boon—almost complete relief from periodic sick headaches which formerly put me out of commission at least three days in each month. (Mrs. W. L. DeH.)

Answer—The pamphlet is available to any reader who asks for it (do not use a clipping) and provides stamped self addressed envelope.

Embarrassed

I would like to know why every member of my family should take a "nip of iodine" and how to ask for it at the drugstore without being embarrassed by the salesclerk. (Mrs. R. S.)

Answer—Send a stamped self addressed envelope and ask in writing—do not use clipping—the pamphlet "The Iodin Ration."

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With The R.C.A.F. Overseas, Oct. 4 (CP)—First R.C.A.F. pilot to pass through the great air force Repat Depot at Torquay wearing the gold clasp on his 1939-45 Star, showing he took part in the Battle of Britain, was Flt. Lt. H. C. Deryk Upton of Duncan, B.C.

Upton joined the R.A.F. in May 1939 and won his wings in time to fight beside some of the legendary heroes of "The Battle," —Richard Hillary, Douglas Bader and Paddy Finucane.

He has 11 enemy aircraft confirmed and 18 probables to his credit. During a spell as an instructor one of his pupils was George Beurling of Verdun, Que., who became Canada's top-scoring fighter pilot.

The "Girls of the Old Brigade" 16 of the original 30 R.C.A.F. W.D.'s to be sent overseas, observed the third anniversary of their stay in Britain—by carrying on with the job.

They have been three adventurous years for the young "Wids". They have been under the fire of Nazi bombs, flying bombs and rockets; have queued up, and gone without, like the people of Britain; have met Queen Elizabeth and the Duchess of Gloucester; and won the admiration and respect of ordinary folk.

Here are the survivors of that 1942 contingent, all of whom arrived as "lowly airwomen":

Flight Officers H. M. Kendall, Adelaide Child, Jean Otter, all of Toronto; Marjorie McLaren, Montreal; Peggy Douglas, Winnipeg; Marguerite Ranger, Winnipeg; and Margaret Long, Arden, Man.

Flt. Sgts. Barbara Lee, Stratford, Ont.; Pat Vaisey, B.E.M., Peterborough, Ont.; and Marion McLeod, Winnipeg; Sgts. Betty Dewar, Toronto; Nanc Pennefather, Ottawa; E. D. Hians, Montreal; Jessie Gough, Newcastle, N.B.; Louise MacBride, Victoria; and Cpl. Eileen Hassett, Vancouver.

Bournemouth, favorite holiday playground on Britain's south coast, is now the base for a new repatriation depot, R.C.A.F. announced.

The new arrangement gives the R.C.A.F. two repatriation centres, with Torquay continuing to handle the bulk of homeward bound airmen and airwomen. More than 19,000 have been moved through the Devonshire resort since VE-Day.

The men of the Baggage Section at the R.C.A.F. Repatriation Depot in Torquay say they are hardened to weird sights. "Bag" they have discovered, can mean almost anything. They have shipped many Nazi swords and guns back home, and even a pair of skis. They have turned away dogs, midget cars, extra sweethearts, bicycles and motor cycles.

It was when one winged veteran wanted to know about taking back a yacht—yes, a yacht—that the men of the Baggage Section decided they had seen everything.

FRESH EGGS AT LAST

Sydney, Australia — (CP) — British Centre buffets here are cooking up to 3000 eggs daily, but British servicemen's appetites for eggs are still unsatisfied. They explain that until they arrived in Australia they had not seen fresh eggs for four years.

Domestic Control Of Atomic Energy Urged by Truman

By JACK BELL

Washington, Oct. 4. (AP)—President Truman's plans for ironclad domestic control of atomic energy appeared bound today for early Congressional approval.

But legislators made it plain at the same time that they want a hand in deciding how much to tell the rest of the world about the atomic bomb.

None disputed Mr. Truman's promise that the people of the United States must "use the knowledge we have won, not for the devastation of war, but for the future welfare of humanity".

Some doubt was voiced, however, that his hope of outlawing the bomb as a weapon of war could be attained.

Mr. Truman separated today's biggest enigma into home and abroad classifications in a message to Congress yesterday.

He called first for creation of a presidentially-approved commission to:

1.—Control all mineral sources of atomic energy, plants and stockpiles.

2.—Conduct all necessary research, experiments and operations on further development for "military, industrial, scientific or medical purposes".

3.—Issue licences for private operations based "upon a policy of widespread distribution of peacetime products in equitable terms which will prevent monopoly".

4.—Permit production, import and export of energy producing substances only under conditions it prescribes.

5.—Set up rules of censorship for information about material and equipment under its jurisdiction.

Globester Lands In California

Hamilton Field, Calif., Oct. 4—(AP) — The 'round-the-world flight of the United States Army Air Transport Command roared up to the last lap today, landing here at 2:10 a.m. P.S.T. (5:10 a.m. E.S.T.) after a flight from Honolulu in 12 hours, 30 minutes.

The Globester could have made it earlier. It "loafed" through the starry Pacific sky rather than spoil San Francisco reception plans by coming in early.

Washington, 2,500 miles to the east, is the next and last stop on a flight that started at 4 p.m. E.S.T. Sept. 28 from the airport there.

The seven men and one woman who made the journey expect to be back in Washington telling how it feels to see the world thru a window in a week — at about 9 p.m. E.S.T. tonight.

A.T.C.'s original plan called for returning to Washington at 12 midnight E.S.T. tonight after a 151-hour jaunt around the world near its greatest circumference, a distance of more than 23,000 miles.

MORE TURKEYS AVAILABLE

Shelbourne, Ont., Oct. 4—(CP) —More turkeys will be available for domestic use this year than in 1944 when the bulk of the turkey crop was served to the armed forces, although growers report that unfavorable spring weather and nutritional casualties will limit supplies for Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners.

2 Hogs or 4 Per Ton of Grain?

Which Will You Produce?

Alberta experiments, with best Western grain, show that it takes 1,050 lbs. of grain, fed alone, to take a hog from weaning to market. So 1 ton of grain fed alone barely produces 2 market hogs.

Hundreds of practical Canadian hog raisers, in actual feeding, have taken their hogs from weaning to market on an average of 600 lbs. of a mixture of chop and Purina Hog Chow. THEY market 4 hogs from a ton of grain plus between 3 and 4 bags of Hog Chow—and the 2 extra hogs bring in nearly 4 times what the Hog Chow cost them.

Brushing, Scalp Massage, Twin Aids to Hair Health

Nightly Brushing Keeps Mona Paulee's Hair Shining, Lustrous.

By HELEN FOLLETT

BETTER a small thatch of well-groomed hair upon your noble brow than a wealth of tresslocks that are dingy because of lack of care. Too many women take it for granted that their glorious crowns will survive through the years, no matter how much they may be neglected.

The silken threads call for a certain amount of coddling, should have it. We're not referring to the undulations and chic arrangements, but to the growth itself, which means that the scalp should be kept scrupulously clean, massaged frequently.

Friction Helps

In the papillae in which the hair shafts rest are nerves, blood vessels, sebaceous and sweat glands. Friction helps the circulation to function normally, urges the sebaceous glands to send forth their oil that keeps the shafts from breaking. Can't you, my paper friend, spare five minutes at bedtime to give your brain roof a rousing old mauling? If, also, you apply hot mineral oil to the scalp the night before the shampoo, you'll be less likely to suffer hair and scalp ills.

Brushing brings a gloss, removes surface dust, performs as a stimulating agent. Start the shampoo with 100 strokes, bending the head forward, brushing the hair up from the back over the crown. If you have dispensed with the permanent, are arranging your wool smoothly, dry your hair in the sunlight, if possible.

Marmora

Marmora.—Approximately fifty-three dollars was raised for the National Institute for the Blind by means of the Tag Day on Saturday, under the auspices of Marmora Women's Institute with Mrs. F. R. Wells, supervisor.

Mr. Tom Paraniuk caught a twenty-five pound 'lunge in Moira Lake, Madoc, on Sunday afternoon. He was using live minnows for bait.

Mrs. Russell Blackburn and daughter, Ruth, and Mr. Max Warren, of Chantley, Quebec, spent the weekend with the latter's sister, Mrs. Hector Auger and Mr. Auger.

Mrs. Catherine Reynolds has returned home after visiting her daughter, Mrs. E. Hamilton, Peterborough.

A number of the choir of St. Paul's church, attended the Harvest Thanksgiving services at St. Mark's Bonarlaw on Sunday evening, at which Rev. J. M. Brownlie officiated.

St. Paul's A.Y.P.A. held a meeting in the Parish Hall on Monday evening with a fair attendance of members on hand. Rev. J. M. Brownlie gave an interesting talk on the government of the Church of England. It is hoped to have the election of officers at the next meeting.

NOT INTERESTED IN BRAKES

Toronto, Oct. 4 — (CP)—Motorists who take their cars to Toronto garages for repairs are more interested in motor overhauls and body and fender repairs than in having brakes relined or such safety devices as horns and lights overhauled, garage owners report.

Thanksgiving Specialties

Thanksgiving, 1945. . .and how much there is to be thankful for this year! Thankful for peace; for the return of loved ones; thankful that we live in a land of plenty, though never forgetful of those who have so much less than ourselves.

Most Canadians will sit down this year to a real Thanksgiving dinner with a fine chicken or turkey as the highlight of the meal. But beginnings and endings are important too, and the Consumer Section of the Dominion Department of Agriculture gives a menu and recipes for the soup and a choice of desserts that perfectly round out the Thanksgiving dinner.

TOMATO BISQUE

1 28-oz. tin or 1 quart home-canned tomatoes
1-4 cup sliced onion
3-4 teaspoon salt
1-4 bay leaf
Dash of ground gloves
Dash of ground ginger
Dash of ground cinnamon
1 tablespoon sugar
2 tablespoons mild-flavored fat
1-4 cup flour
2 cups water

Cook tomatoes, onion, salt, spices and sugar, covered, for ten minutes, then rub through a sieve. Melt fat, blend in flour, stirring until smooth. Gradually add water and cook over boiling water, stirring constantly, until thickened. Add sieved tomatoes and cook about ten minutes longer. If desired, 1-2 bouillon cube, dissolved in 1-2 cup boiling water may be added to the soup. Six servings.

MOCK MINCE MEAT

2 cups chopped green tomatoes
1 cup raisins
2 teaspoons salt
1 orange, juice and grated rind
1-2 cup brown sugar
1 tablespoon vinegar
1-2 teaspoon cinnamon
1-4 teaspoon cloves
1-4 teaspoon ginger
2 tablespoons fat
1 cup chopped apple

Cook tomatoes for 5 minutes. Add raisins, salt and vinegar. Cook for ten minutes. Stir constantly to prevent sticking. Add other ingredients except apple, let stand overnight. Add apple just before using. Makes one 9-inch pie.

ORANGE ZABAGLIONE

4 egg yolks
1-4 cup sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1-4 cup orange juice

Beat egg yolks and sugar in top of enamel or glass double boiler until sugar is dissolved. Add lemon and orange juice. Place over barely simmering water (do not let water boil) and beat with a rotary egg beater for 8 to 10 minutes, until thickened and very light. Turn into sherbet glasses and serve warm or cold. Six servings.

Note—If an enamel or glass double boiler is not available, a bowl, placed in pan of simmering water, may be used.

SILVER CAKE

This Silver Cake makes an ideal accompaniment to the Orange Zabaglione and makes use of the egg whites.

2 cups sifted pastry flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1-4 teaspoon salt
1-2 cup mild-flavored fat
3-4 cup sugar
1-2 teaspoon vanilla
2-3 cup milk
3 egg whites.

Mix and sift flour, baking powder and salt. Cream fat until soft and light. Gradually add 1-2 cup sugar, creaming until fluffy; add vanilla. Add flour mixture alternately with milk, beating until smooth after each addition. Beat egg whites until stiff, gradually beat in remaining 1-4 cup sugar. Fold thoroughly into cake batter. Turn into greased 8-inch cake pan and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees Fahrenheit, for about 50 minutes. Turn cake out on a rack to cool. Makes 1 (8-inch) cake or 2 (8-inch) layers or 30 cup cakes

Bake layers in moderately hot oven, 375 degree Fahrenheit, for about 20 minutes ....

PASTEL JELLY FROSTING

1-2 cup pure jelly (grape, crabapple, red currant, etc.)
1 egg white, unbeaten
Pinch of salt

Melt jelly in bowl over hot water. Add egg white and salt and beat with rotary egg beater until stiff. Cool and spread on cake.

EGGS ABSORB ODORS . . .

Since eggs absorb odors and flavors very easily, they should be stored in a cool place, away from onions and other highly scented foods. Eggs should never be washed before storing, as the unwashed shell carried a protective coating all its own—one which forms a natural seal for the pores of the shell.

Fashion Flashes

THE CRAZE for white furs has spread to the budget brackets with emphasis on short but bulky coats of white mouton, ideal for the country, for casual town wear, for college campus and for skiing.

The big thing for wear with slim dinner dresses and late afternoon dresses is the short, loosely-cut coat with sparkling embroidery. Black woollen makes one such coat with massed embroidery of gold thread and multi-colored sequins on the rounded shoulder yoke. Full sleeves are shirred to wristbands and fastened with gold buttons.

stark skirt is plain black sweater-stark is the plain black sweater-like top worn with a glitter-trimmed skirt. Black jersey with a cowled, high neckline and long, tight sleeves tops a full skirt of black wool trimmed with royal blue sequins in all-over chevron formation.

The favorite style for the lounging garment seems to be that of the tailored coat. Pale blue spun rayon is used for a smart housecoat made with high, concealed fastening, club collar, two flap pockets on the breastline and bishop sleeves with cuffs fastened with mock-shell button links circled in gilt. The wide self belt has a square buckle of gilt-rimmed mock shell.

Have you noticed the number of gray hats this season? Gray velvet with pink for afternoon, gray felt for the young crowd, gray felt casuals for daytime, and even a tall chechia of gray broadtail.

Many and varied are this season's fur coat styles. A charming coat is of black broadtail Persian lamb made with standing neckband of black corde and black corde on the shoulder and continuing down the full sleeve and around the bell cuffs. Corde also edges the front of the coat and outlines the side slits.

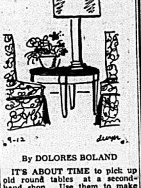
It's About Time



By DOLORES BOLAND

IT'S ABOUT TIME to pick up old round tables at a second-hand shop. Use them to make end-tables. Cut off legs to make them the same height as arms of chairs. Paint to match walls or woodwork.

CHANGE FOR THE BETTER

London — (CP) —United Kingdom residents used to talk of continued shortages although the war is over. They have two meagre promises of better things — the war transport ministry hopes to release more railway sleeping berths for the public and auto taxation will be reviewed by the government.

Persistance Wins Double Award For Magazine Writer

By ADELAIDE KERR

New York (CP) — Elizabeth Metzger Howard has chalked up a unique feat in journalism by collecting $145,000 for a novel that has not yet been published. The book is "Before the Sun Goes Down," winner of the $20,000 Doubleday Doran 1945 novel contest and the $125,000 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer annual novel award. It is scheduled for early 1946 publication.

Mrs. Howard says in writing her novel she made a rule and stuck to it: "Write what you want to write but let your betters tell you what to do about it."

For years Elizabeth Metzger made her living in New York, writing for and editing pulp magazines—on a formula designed to please the riders of the subway circuit. Then she married Frank Lidden Howard, a mining engineer, and went with him to South Africa on business. A few years later they moved to Winterhaven, Fla., where Howard specialized on soil fertilization research and Mrs. Howard kept house. They still live in Winterhaven.

After the birth of their son, Lynn, now 12, Elizabeth Metzger Howard went back to writing. She turned out a tall stack of stories, articles and plays on formula. Financial results were zero.

"Finally, I made up my mind that from then on I would write what I wanted to write and nothing else," she says. "A few years before, I had done a lot of research on the transitional period of the 19th. century when so many inventions of steam and electric machinery were perfected. It never developed but it left me with a lot of background information. I was fascinated with the thought of how those inventions affected the lives of people—both young and old—and what their psychological reactions would be. Persevering Writer.

"And so I wrote 'Before the Sun Goes Down'—before the sun goes down on their day the four corners of the earth will meet and the sky will be no higher than their heads. I think I wrote every page a dozen times. Then I brought the book to New York. My agent, Maxwell Aley, and later the publisher made a lot of suggestions. I listened to my betters and rewrote some more. Those suggestions did a lot to make the book."

Elizabeth Metzger Howard was born in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and after her mother's death, was reared by her grandmother in Bedford. From early childhood she says she longed to write.

Eventually she started a short story course by correspondence with Walter Pitkin, Dean of the School of Journalism of Columbia University. He gave her writing a hand but cautioned her against coming to New York to make her living by it. So she came. Supported herself by selling magazine subscriptions while she labored over more short stories. Finally her work began to sell and eventually she became a member of the editorial staff of Dell Publishing Co.

In writing her novel she learned to use the touch system—because she had to. Her 20-year-old typewriter was so stiff, she put it in the kitchen oven, hoping the heat would melt the grease and loosen up the action. Mrs. Howard found that all the white key markers had popped off in the heat. She couldn't get the typewriter out herself, so she called to her husband for help. As he hauled the machine to safety, he said hotly to his wife: "By George! If you did put anything in the oven it would be a typewriter!"

BRUIN LOOMS AS ALGOMA'S BIG RASCAL

Rampaging Black Bears Threaten to Oust Wolves as Northern Ontario's Chief Marauders

Saulte Ste Marie, Ont. (CP)—The black bear is threatening to take over from the wolf as Algoma's Public Enemy No. 1.

This year wolves have killed only an odd lamb or so on Algoma farms but the usually-playful bear, favorite target of camera-toting American tourists, has been on such a widespread rampage that there's hardly a settlement in this vast Northern Ontario district but has a story of damage to tell.

Algoma bears never attack humans—well, hardly ever. They are like Algoma wolves of whom old Sam Martin from Lone Dog Mountain says: "Any man that says he has been et by a wolf is a liar." But a bear down Bar River way, 22 miles east of here, almost forgot about the reputation of his kind not so long ago—at least that's how it seemed to Boyce Murray.

Boyce was working on his farm when a neighbor reported that a bear had entered the orchard. Boyce got his rifle, sighted his target and got away a shot which merely made Bruin change direction. The bear raced for a fence and Boyce headed for a gate to cut him off. That's where they finally met. Two close-ranged shots failed to halt the advance of the bear. At six-foot range Boyce tried to fire again. Possibly the click of the empty rifle twinged the bear's conscience, but at any rate he lumbered off in another direction. Boyce reloaded and dropped the animal.

Out in nearby Prince Township eight of a large clan of bears ignored the presence of humans and pillaged the orchard on the Evans farm. Three were killed there, another six were bagged the next day and more were seen less than half a mile away two days later.

Club Hunts Bears.

Even the Bar River Hunt Club, which prefers to chase wolves, has tried bear hunting. Its members were on nearby St. Joseph Island after a wolf which was blamed for losses of sheep from Garfield Fisher's flock but the wolf eluded them. While they were out a bear raided an orchard and wrecked the bee hives. The club cornered Bruin next day and the bear went down from the very weight of lead, if nothing else. Another showed up later and got similar treatment.

A light crop of wild berries is bringing the bears out into the open. They are raiding apple orchards even in the daylight. But coming out in daylight makes them easy targets and woodsmen suggest they are unusually stupid this year to abandon their habitual night-prowling tactics.

For instance a number made nuisances of themselves around Point aux Pins and Pointe des Chenes, nearby summer resorts. As long as they came at night they got away with it. Then they got bolder and attempted their depredations in daylight and a number were shot.

But the wolf, which has acquired considerable fame over the years, refuses to be pushed out of the picture entirely. W. A. Smith, a farmer at Dayton, 75 miles to the east, reports that when he was harnessing his horses one morning one horse seemed to be giving unusual attention to the sheep. Mr. Smith took a look and right in the midst of the frightened flock a wolf was calmly eating part of a freshly-killed lamb.

To get back to bears—Dave White of Leeburn, who has killed 55 in the last 16 years says they're easy to handle. You just make them walk around on their hind legs and tickle them to death. But so far no one in the district seems willing to follow Dave's advice.

RESIGNS; WALKS OUT

Leo T. Crowley, shown here, has resigned as foreign economic administrator and chairman of the board of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Although the resignations do not become effective until Oct. 15, Crowley left the current British-American loan negotiations flat. The fact that he walked out on the negotiations is viewed as evidence of disagreement with President Truman over loan proposals now under consideration. Reliable sources are quoted as stating that President Truman took sides with officials who oppose Crowley's views that the United States should go slowly on loan to Britain, and should insist on the British "placing all their cards on the table."

FACTIONS FIGHT AT NATIONALIST VICTORY PARADE

South African Nationalist Congress Highlighted by Riots; Speakers Urge Anti-Communist Fight

Cape Town, (CP) — Main topic of the Nationalist Party Congress deliberations at Johannesburg was the "Communist danger" in South Africa and many speakers called for a continued fight against it. Disturbances outside the city hall at Johannesburg, where the Congress was held, were described by speakers as the first clash in the fight.

There was wild rioting outside the city hall when the Nationalists organized a "victory" parade through the city and clashed with a huge crowd of soldiers and civilians. The riot assumed serious proportions when the police were forced to use batons to protect congress delegates from a crowd trying to force entrance into the hall.

On the following day almost the whole downtown police force was concentrated around the hall and the congress finished a day earlier than scheduled. More than 125 were injured in a series of scuffles.

Cape Town's 3,500,000-pound graving dock, the largest south of the equator and named the Sturrock Dock, after F. C. Sturrock, minister of transport, was opened before 10,000 persons at Cape Town. The caisson gates were opened and a tape stretched across the entrance was broken by the frigate Good Hope, which, appropriately, was the first vessel to enter the dock.

Work was begun on the dock during the most critical days of the war and many obstacles were overcome, including shortages of labor and materials. The actual construction took 16 months. The only larger dock in the world is at Toulon, France, but no dock is larger than the Sturrock Dock in all dimensions.

Another South African project nearing completion is the Palmietfontein airport at Johannesburg which is to serve as the Union's international airport until the larger one at Kempton Park is completed. At Durban work has begun on another national airport. Cane fields have been cleared and drainage has been started.

South Africa's urban population is expected by the Union's Social and Economic Planning Council to increase by 2,000,000 within the next ten years. A report on regional and town planning just issued by the Council states that examination of the Union's base mineral deposits clearly shows that further sites for substantial towns exist.

South Africans have been told they will not get white bread until next year because of the poor wheat crop. The maize crop is also very poor, and steps have been taken to ensure an equitable distribution to the native territories which rely on maize as a staple food.

Ports of the Union are busy loading cargoes going to Britain. Thousands of tons of oranges and jams were packed in refrigerated ships especially allocated to this service but there is still a shortage of this type of transport.

Voluntary gifts of food for Britain are continuing. One farmer raised £1,100 ($4,950) in cattle and cash in a personal drive. The farmer, A. A. Pitout, of Waterberg, hopes to collect another £10,000 from other farmers and plans an extensive tour of South Africa to get more food. Meanwhile organizers are busy getting the national food for Britain campaign into shape.

Smoking Still Risky Near Channel Coast

Dungeness, England (CP) — Smoking outdoors now is permitted in this Channel coast town, but residents are doing it gingerly.

Outdoor smoking was banned when Pluto (Pipe Line under the Ocean) began to pump gasoline to the armies across the Channel, but now the pipeline is no longer used.

Dungeness is still timorous. Police say: "As far as we're concerned smoking out-of-doors is still forbidden. We've had no instructions to the contrary."

The fire department: "The law still stands but people do smoke outside, so it's all right, really."

The army: "There are still a few places where you can't smoke out-of-doors."

Gone is the time when the nightly cry at the Pilot Inn at closing time was, "Time, gents, please..and put your pipes out."

Observe 70 Years Of Married Life

Randalstown, Northern Ireland (CP) — Andrew Murray and his wife, who have more than 80 living descendants, have celebrated their 70th. wedding anniversary. Andrew is 94 and his wife 89. Of their nine sons and three daughters, all are alive except one son. In addition they have 42 grandchildren and 30 great grandchildren, living in the United States, Canada or Northern Ireland.

Whitehall Notebook

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 4—(CP)—Whitehall was intrigued recently by a gathering in London of three ambassadors and one minister plenipotentiary — all from Canada. In government circles it indicated the increased stature of the Dominion.

They were, by the way, L. B. Pearson, ambassador to the United States; Maj.-Gen. L. R. LaFleche, ambassador to Greece; Maj.-Gen. Georges P. Vanier, ambassador to France, and Pierre Dupuy, minister to the Netherlands. All visited Canada House where they were received by Frederic Hudd, acting high commissioner.

Taxes: While only sober hopes of tax reduction are held by British people generally, the Labor government will give full attention to suggestions set forth by the Trades Union Congress. In a detailed report on fiscal policy, the Congress said it was "illogical and inequitable" to levy tax on incomes which are below a reasonable subsistence level.

A reduction in the number of persons in the lower income groups subject to income tax "should appreciably reduce the expenses of collection, the total of which varies rather with the number of taxpayers than with the amount of tax collected," the report said.

Expenditures: Peace has not brought relief to the hard-pressed British taxpayer. National expenditures for the week ending Sept. 18 totalled £107,487,000 ($483,691,500.) During the same week last year the total was £102,831,000 ($462,739,500.)

Divorce Actions Up In Prairie Province

Regina —(CP)— The end of the war has brought a surge of divorce actions in Saskatchewan. In June, July and August, the three months following the cessation of hostilities, divorce suits began in this province amounted to more than half of the total decrees granted in the entire 12 months of 1944.

In the period June 1 to Aug 31 last, figures released by Attorney-General J. W. Corman's office show, the number of divorce actions started in the various judicial districts of the province totalled 128.

For the whole of 1944 divorces and marriage annulments granted totalled 229, highest figure in Saskatchewan's history, but 1945 is well on the way to setting a new mark for the number of divorces.

The war years have seen divorces increase rapidly in this province. In the 10-year period 1926 to 1935, the number of divorces granted annually averaged only 61. In the five years 1936 to 1940 the yearly average rose to 116.

After 1940, the divorce record showed a rapid climb. In 1941, 146 marriages went on the rocks; in 1942, 209. In 1943 the number of divorces dropped slightly to 178, but climbed again in 1944 to an all-time high of 229.

Members of the legal advice committee set up in Regina for returned men being discharged at headquarters of Military District No. 12 report that the majority of servicemen seeking their advice have divorce problems on their minds.

Nazi Files Reveal British Gallantry

London (CP) — A picture, taken from the files of the Germans, illustrates how the Victoria Cross was won by the captain of the destroyer Glowworm, nearly five years ago. It shows the gallant but hopeless fight against a ship immensely superior in arms, the German heavy cruiser Hipper.

The photograph, taken from the bridge of the Hipper just before the destroyer sank, reveals the Glowworm laying a smoke screen 400 yards ahead of the bow of the German cruiser, and in the process of firing two torpedoes. Both missed, passing down each side of the Hipper.

The captain of the Glowworm, Lt. Cmdr. Gerald Roope, died in the action. There were only 31 survivors from the destroyer.

After a year of sitting in the dark night after night, Ted persuaded the girl to get another job so that he could see more of her.

She became elevator operator at a bank and Ted then rode up and down in the building so that he could be with her.

Edith still works on the elevator but she married Ted so they can now travel up and down as a wedded couple.

Accused Uneasy As Affidavits Read at Trial

Lueneburg, Germany, Oct. 3 — (CP)—The 45 accused in the Belsen concentration camp trial showed signs of strain and unrest today when affidavits were read to the court telling of men and women kicked or beaten to death because they stole bread and turnips.

Josef Kramer, the Belsen commandant, who declared in a statement yesterday that he knew nothing of cruelty at his camp, lost the smirk which had covered his face during so much of the trial.

Irma Grese, attractive blonde S. S. Guard who became known as the "Beastess of Belsen" stared angrily round the court as she heard her name mentioned.

The affidavits said that Hilde Lisiewitz, one of the women accused, pushed two hungry men on to the ground for stealing turnips, and stamped on their chests with jack boots until they died.

They also accused Karl Egersdorf, one of the camp guards, of shooting a Hungarian girl through the back of the head because he caught her coming from the bread store.

The face of Peter Weingarten was moist with perspiration as he listened for mention of his name and the thin lips of Franz Hesler were compressed in an even tighter line.

One affidavit said Fritz Mathes shot at least 30 people.

Another affidavit referred to the "favorite habit" of the Grese woman of beating women and girls with a stick until they fell to the ground and then kicking them with heavy boots often until the blood came.

LACK OF TRANSPORT DELAYS RUBBER SHIPMENTS

Singapore, Oct. 3 —(CP)— Transport bottlenecks both at sea and inland are impeding removal of rubber stockpiles found at a number of points in Malaya and are causing concern to buying agencies which have been active since the beginning of re-occupation.

Despite the high priority officially allotted to shipment of rubber, agents thus far have been able to effect the movement of only a small fraction of the estimated 70,000 tons found stored here and at points on the peninsula.

Inscription on Urn Believed Written By Crucifixion Witness

Jerusalem, Oct. 3 —(CP)— A burial urn bearing a Greek inscription believed by Hebrew University archeologists to have been written by an eye-witness to the crucifixion of Christ, has been found near the Jerusalem-Bethlehem road, the University announced today.

The announcement termed the inscription "the oldest archeological record of Christianity" and said it expressed bitter lamentation at Christ's death.

The University said the urn was discovered in a family burial plot accidentally unearthed by Arab workers.

Symbols on the urn, in addition to the inscription, University archeologists said, confirmed the authenticity of the object, and identified it with the beginning of the Christian era. They said the inscription appeared to have been made by one of Christ's followers.

The University said a full statement of the discovery would be made later.

Pafko, Borowy Heroes of First Game of World Series as Cubs Defeat Detroit Tigers by 9-0

Cubs Showed Speed Afield Compared to Tigers and They Hit in the Clutches

By SID FEDER

Detroit, Oct. 4 (AP)—If Detroit Tigers show up today, Chicago Cubs take them on again in the second game of the 1945 World Series, but it will be a long time before the folks forget the ice-size heart Hank Borowy has dicking for him.

Out of the shambles left of the American League's hopes after the Cubs practically beat the Bengals' brains out for that 9-0 decision in yesterday's opener, these two factors stand out—these and the Man O' War speed of the Cubs afield, compared to the general-glue-footedness of the old men of Detroit.

Some of the more exuberant National Leaguers were even talking of a four-straight series after the Chicago champs went over the "big hump" by knocking off the Tigers' head man, 25-game winner Hal Newhouser, in the opener.

The hotel lobby bookmakers switched their "line" all the way from 10-13 with Detroit favored, to 5-8 with the Cubs the choice to take their first World Championship in 37 years. However, they tabbed the Tigers at 7-6 to win today's tussle behind Virgil Trucks. If you like the Cubs and Hank Wyse, the 22-game righthander, it's even money for the second scuffle, which figures to draw another crowd as big or bigger than yesterday's 54,637.

Better Weather.

The weather man promises the boys won't have to play in an ice box, like yesterday's refrigerated fuss.

The Cubs piled up 13 big hits in blowing the awesome Newhouser out of there in three rounds. Six of the hits were split between Pafko and Phil Cavarretta, who chipped in a 370-foot homer and the key single of the proceedings. When he beat out Eddie Mayo's slow fielding of his hopper to second in the first, he opened the gates for four runs to come through and put the game on ice.

But above all this thunder, you have to go for the coolness of handy Andy under fire, both at bat and afield, and the manner in which Borowy not only beat the Bengals, but shut them out, using his heart almost exclusively. It's an old baseball axiom that you can't argue with a shutout, but Hank's arm just wasn't there this time, even with the help of hot bricks Dr. Andrew Hemingway Lotshaw, the Cub trainer, had the foresight to heat up and keep in the dugout.

The Tigers had Hank hanging from the ropes in every one of the first six frames.

All told, Hank handed five Tigers the free ticket to first in as many innings, as his control collapsed all over the place.

Double Plays Help.

Double plays twice yanked Hank up by his shoelaces, even as the Cub bullpen put on the gear to get ready a replacement. And in the fourth, after a walk and a hit with none away had the Tigers sharpening their claws and Borowy wobbling about the premises again, Hank pushed third strikes past catcher Paul Richards and pinch-hitter Bezelon Eaton.

In spite of the great big bats through the waist of the Detroit batting order, only Hank Greenberg reached first safely three times. The big fellow had to settle for a walk and hit-by-pitcher along with his lone single. All told, in fact, the Bengals managed to scrape up exactly six singles off Borowy during the festivities.

Borowy pitched the pennant clincher and with yesterday's verdict became the first two-league series winner since Jack Coombs did it for the Athletics in 1910 and '11 and Brooklyn in '16.

BILL KERR LEADS FIELD IN P. G. A.

Toronto, Oct. 4 — (CP) — Bill Kerr of Toronto shot a three under par 139 in the first 36 holes of the Canadian Professional Golfers Association 72-hole Championship play yesterday to lead the field on his home Cedar Brae course.

Kerr's long drives and steady putting helped him tour the 6,507-yard, par 70 course in 68 on the first round and break the course mark with a 69 on the second. Well back in second place was Bill Borthwick of Toronto and Jack Littler of Kingston, tied at 145.

Rudolph Huot of the Royal Quebec Club, who started out with a strong 72 to hold second place in the first round, ran into trouble during the second 18 and finished with a 76 for 148 behind Montreal Islemere's Stan Horne in 4th with 146 and brother Jules Huot of Laval Sur Le Lac, Montreal, with a 147 fifth.

Newhouser Admits He Did Not Know How to Pitch to Cubs

By FRANK KENESSON

Detroit, Oct. 4 — (AP)—Detroit Tigers' pitching star of the last 2 American League campaigns, Hal Newhouser, has learned the woes of frustration.

Winner of 25 games in the hectic 1945 flag race but loser 9-0 to Chicago Cubs in the World Series opener, the lean lefthander had no trouble coming up with the answer:

"I simply didn't know how to pitch to them; they're all new to me."

Newhouser, batted out of the box only seven times in his 36 starts against American League hitting, served up base hits to exactly half the 16 Cub batters who faced him in the 2 2/3 innings he lasted in his first World Series appearance.

The big score board in centre field showed seven runs for the Cubs when relief pitcher Al Benton stepped in and Newhouser trudged off the mound.

"You can't throw to those guys simply from advice," Newhouser explained. "All I knew about them was what others told me. You can't necessarily expect to handcuff a fellow with a low fast ball just because another pitcher tells you he did it once."

Confident the story will be different next time out, Newhouser predicted: "I'll get them; next time I'll get away to a good start and I'll beat those Cubs yet."

Chips Off The Sports Block

A Grand Gang.

Welcome Home, Hasty Pees, greetings to a gallant gang and a right royal regiment. The town is yours but if you break it apart, please put it back again. The city and district is proud of you and your achievements. You have proven yourselves heroes in the greatest game of all and have come back with your escutcheon unstained. Now that the final whistle has blown, and the foe sent to the showers, we hope, for good may you apply the same courage, determination and ability to your new life as residents of "Civvy Street," as you did to the serious phases of war. God Bless You.

Juicy Tidbits.

There is a two-fold sports tidbit on deck for softball and baseball fans of the city on Saturday. At the Fair Grounds, the Columbian Squires take on the Hamilton Charles junior softball titlists in the second game of the junior provincial softball championship. The Squires handed the classy Hamilton kids 5-0 shellacking in their own bailiwick last S- weekend. The Hamilton Spectator sports ed. states that his prides were "cold" from no games and will likely show a startling reversal of form in the second joust. With the Squires hotter than a geisha gal, the tussle should prove an eye-opener for mushball fans of the city. Remember, the game is being played at the Fair Grounds and the admission is two-bits for adults with the kids being asked a dime. Tickets are now on sale at Bill Cook's Tobacco Store, Front Street.

The second joust is a natural for baseball fans. At Batawa those fireballing chukkers "Smoky" Smith, and "Lefty" Jack Garten hook up in a third pitching duel in the deciding game of the Ontario Intermediate "B" baseball championship. Thornbury eked out a 3-2 win in the first game of the hectic series while the Batawa Shoemakers scored five runs in the final innings of a thirteen-chukker joust in Thornbury to annex the second game. The series has attracted the baseball fans of Ontario with its record-breaking instances. To repeat, both pitchers have struck out 74 batters in 25 innings of battle with only one walk being issued. The third game which is scheduled for two o'clock on the Batawa diamond and likely a large crowd of city baseball fans will be on hand for the pay-off proceedings.

Toronto, Oct. 4—(CP)—(Advance) — A fragmentary report from Northern Ontario that Johnny McCreedy has forsaken hockey for a position as consultant engineer with a gold-mining company near the Quebec border should be clipped and entered in every sport album. It is the obituary of hockey's most glowing success story, the final parting of the destiny twins of the ice lanes.

If Dick Kowcinak hears about McCreedy's decision at the Port Arthur training camp of St. Louis Flyers, he probably won't beat his head against the bench or ask for a day off. The slim 28-year-old forward isn't that sentimental, and anyway it's a long time now since he and Johnny forged the famed partnership that placed them side by side on four consecutive championship teams.

McCreedy and Kowcinak started as forward-line teammates with a community team in East Kildonan, Winnipeg, which sprouted into a midget contender. In 1936-37 they were graduated to Winnipeg Monarchs and the parade of championships started, with Dick left wing and Johnny right wing as Monarchs swept to the Canadian Junior Title and Memorial Cup.

The next year the Gold Dust Twins moved into senior company together. They clicked again, rolling to an Allan cup championship with Trail, B. C. They went overseas later with the same club to win the official world's title.

In 1939-40 they headed a summons from Kirkland Lake, Ont. backed by Bill Durnan in goal, Kirkland Lake's Blue Devils crashed all opposition to win the Allan cup.

The partnership appeared headed for a fifth championship in 1940-41, this time with Sidney, N. S., Millionaires. In an Allan cup best-of-five series against Regina Rangers, Coach Bill Gill's Millionaires took a two-game lead, then wilted.

The partnership split up after that, McCreedy turning professional with Toronto Maple Leafs while Kowcinak, for what he describes as "no apparent reason," turned down an attractive offer from same source. Dick turned pro himself in 1943-44 with Detroit Red Wings, later gravitating to Indianapolis. McCreedy joined the R.C.A.F., was a key member of the Toronto Air Force team which bowed to Ottawa's strong Commandos in the Allan cup play-offs a few seasons ago.

Kowcinak concedes he misses McCreedy, who joined Leafs for the Stanley cup play-offs last season but didn't see action in Toronto's surprise march to the Stanely cup crown. "I'm a team player," says Dick. "On my own I can go only so far."

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.

New York, Oct. 4 — (AP) — Lightweight Bobby Ruffin, who is willing to accept the credit or blame for the ideas his private publicity department cooks up, confounded the Detroit fight mob the other day when he demanded eye tests and physical examinations for the referee and judges who were to work on tomorrow's fight against Chalky Wright . . the fighters, Bobby says, have to submit to tests to show they're in condition, why not the officials. "How do I know they are in shape to go 10 rounds and their eyesight is good?" he demands . . . maybe Ruffin really has something this time . . . Clark Griffith is planning to dispense with Latin-American baseball importations now that players returning from the services likely will be available. The reasons: (1) Griff thinks it would be unfair to native-born players and unpopular with the fans. (2) the imported talent wasn't so good, anyway.

LESSON NO. 798

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitzer

When bridge is played, the final test among the one considered best is not how bossy you can be — but how you do defensively.

East had been shooting off his mouth. He was a really expert player and never let his partners forget it. Then, into the laps of the foursome was dumped this deal:

NORTH
♠A K Q 5
♥J 8 7 4 2
♦9 2
♣A 3

WEST
♠J 10 9 8 2
♥9
♦Q 4
♣K 9 8 4 2

EAST
♠4
♥10 3
♦K J 8 7 6 5 3
♣J 10 5

SOUTH
♠7 6 3
♥A K Q 6 5
♦A 10
♣Q 7 6

South was declarer at a small slam contract of six hearts and the opening lead from west was a spade. To declarer, it looked as if there were two losers; one in diamonds and one in clubs.

He must plan to save one of them. He hoped for a diamond sluff on the fourth dummy spade. But he soon learned how the spades were bunched in the west. So, he decided to try the strip-and-endplay.

Having won the first spade, two trumps, and another spade, he kept on with spades. After winning the third spade, he ruffed the fourth dummy spade with a south trump.

He then took the dummy diamond ace and led his second diamond, deliberately losing that trick. His hope was that west would win that trick and be caught in an endplay.

West won that trick with the diamond queen and was in a fix. If he led back a spade, dummy would sluff a club and south would ruff. If he led a club, south and dummy would take two clubs.

Declarer's preparation for a coming endplay is quite apparent in most cases. Expert defenders anticipate what is likely to happen. They look for a chance to take the pressure off of partner.

East muffed this one and west blurted: "If you had anything but a big mouth, you would have overtaken my queen with your king. Then you could have led a club to keep me from being endplayed." Some fun.

There is no moral to this. It happens to the best of them. A talented defender may be of either gender.

Ness Appeals To Supreme Court For a Ruling

Toronto, Oct. 4 —(CP)— Doug. Ness, well-known Canadian horseman suspended two weeks ago by the Incorporated Canadian Racing Associations for what the association termed "practices detrimental to the turf," seeks in an affidavit filed yesterday at Osgoode Hall to have I.C.R.A. proceedings reviewed by the Ontario Supreme Court.

Argument on the motion will be held Oct. 12 when the presiding judge will determine whether he has jurisdiction over proceedings of the I.C.R.A., governing body of thoroughbred horse racing in Ontario.

No reason was given for the suspension by the I.C.R.A. but in his affidavit Ness says he was advised a day before the suspension took affect that a mechanical electrical device was found in the pocket of an overcoat in a stable at Woodbine Park where horses under supervision of Ness were quartered.

Ness, known as the "Hirsch Jacobs of Canada" for his success in transforming cheap horses into consistent winners in higher brackets, says in the affidavit neither the coat nor the electrical device belonged to him or his employees.

The affidavit said Ness had not been given an opportunity to meet any charge "which might have been made against me." He said he knows of no appeal under the I.C.R.A. rules of racing beyond referring the matter to the Supreme Court.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop came down to breakfast saying to ma, Good morning, old funny face.

Well such a salutation for land sakes, I'm glad you smiled when you said it, ma said, and pop said, I assure you it was a genuine term of endearment. It was a natural reaction after having to listen all evening to that couple we met at the Hew's last night, with their sugary dear's and darling's every second word. By gollies I thought I'd crown the bird with a chair when he said to her. "Now darling, dont talk like a silly fool," pop said.

It really was rather gassly, wasn't it? ma said, and pop said, It was worse than that. Now I realize the cowboys have the right idea when they pound each other on the back and say, "Howdy, you old horse thief?" he said.

Well yes, I suppose the spirit is more important than the actual bare words, ma said, and pop said, Sure it is, you rip snorting little old devil.

Didn't I say it was, you silly old egg top? ma said.

Meening pop's bald head, and pop said. Well, that's one on me, but I can take it.

I assure you it was intended absilutely lovingly, you big fat old jailberd, ma said. Do you think you'll unbutton 2 vest buttons tonight after dinner, or do you suppose you'll be sattisfied with your usual one button, you big old pickpocket? she said.

Wowie, the weather's getting ruff, pop said. If I started this I must of made a slight miscalculation. The female of the speeshies must really be deadlier than the mail, including cowboys. Pour me a cup of coffee, my dear, and we'll call it a day, he said.

All right, my tuff little honey buntch, ma said.

Being the end of the subject.

THREE-RUN RALLY IN NINTH WINS FOR MONTREAL

Series Between Newark Bears and Royals Tied Up at Three Games Each

Montreal, Oct. 4 —(CP)— A three-run rally in the ninth inning last night carried Montreal Royals to an 11-10 victory over Newark Bears in the sixth game of a best-of-seven series for the Governors' Cup. With the series tied 3-3, the deciding game will be played here tonight.

The International League pennant winners had been behind 9-0 as early as the third inning, but improved their standing with a five-run burst in the fourth inning.

Ray Hathaway started for Royals and gave up two runs in the opening frame, held the Bears scoreless in the second, and had to be removed in the Bears' seven-run third. Jonn Gabbard who came to his relief was no more fortunate, and gave up three hits before turning the mound chore over to Tommy Warren.

It was Warren's game, and the Bears were held to only one run —in the fifth inning. Coming to bat in their half of the third, the Royals made up one run and in the fourth knocked out starting pitcher John Maldovan. Johnny Moore took over the relief role and lasted for one inning, giving up three hits.

Frank Makosky replaced Moore and lasted until the ninth when an error by Paul Weintraub, and a double by Jean Pierre Roy, scored Stan Breard to make the score 10-9. Karl Drews replaced Makosky and Warren singled, scoring Roy. Johnny Corriden's single sent Warren home with the winning run. The loss was charged to Drews.

An estimated 15,000 spectators attended. The game was delayed for about 15 minutes in the last inning after a free-for-all developed on the diamond. The fight started between Dick Baker and Part Hart, after Baker had slid into third with his spikes showing. Spectators poured from the stands with everyone throwing punches, and the game was delayed until order was restored.

TORONTO INDIANS STAND ALONE AT TOP OF O.R.F.U.

Hamilton Enjoyed Edge in Territorial Play but Shaded 7 to 3

Hamilton, Oct. 4—(CP)—Toronto Indians stood alone at the head of the Ontario Rugby Football Union today on the strength of their second victory over Hamilton Wildcats, but the question of superiority between the clubs was far from settled.

In fact, the estimated 8,000 fans who watched Indians shade Wildcats 7-3 under floodlights at Civic Stadium last night claim the league leaders looked no better than they did in taking a disputed 6-4 verdict from Hamilton the first time the teams met.

The spectators say Hamilton enjoyed an edge in territorial play last night, despite the scoring summary which showed two placements and a deadline kick by Toronto's Annis Stukus against two singles by George (Scotty) Wright and one by Joe Capriotti for Hamilton.

Both teams had plenty of scoring chances—Annis dropped two touchdown passes from brother Bill on plays that led to part of the Indian point total—but Wildcats appeared to lack an accurate forward passer who could apply the finishing touches when the home team moved into scoring range.

The game marked the seasonal coaching debut of Lew Hayman, who this week agreed to coach Indians after a pre-season disagreement with Toronto Argonauts of the Big Four on contract matters. Indians, who had lacked a bench director, were reported in internal difficulties caused by a system of playing coaches with divided authority.

The loss was doubly disastrous for Hamilton, who dropped into a second-place tie with undefeated Toronto Balmy Beach. In the first half Len Wright suffered a badly sprained ankle and had to be carried from the field on a stretcher.

Virgil Trucks Will be Hurler For Detroit Tigers

Detroit, Oct. 4 — (AP)— Today is Detroit Tigers' chance to capitalize from looking at the other fellow.

Hank Borowy made the most of his former experience with New York Yankees of the American League when he pitched Chicago Cubs to a 9-0 shellacking of Detroit Tigers in the World Series' opener yesterday. As a Yank, he learned the Bengals' batting weaknesses.

Now, Virgil (Fire) Trucks, Steve O'Neill's hurling hope to square the series at one-all, has his big chance to profit from having pitched against the Bruins previously.

Recently out of the United States Navy, Trucks said he "pitched against 'em a year ago while I was at Great Lakes (Naval Training Station) and got a line on what they don't like."

"I won't have to be guessing when I throw them in there," he said.

Chicago Black Hawks of the National Hockey League staged their first scrimmage at Regina yesterday as more regulars checked into the training camp, bringing the club's roster to 29. Among the latest arrivals were the fleet Bentley Brothers, Doug and Max, who immediately teamed up on a line with Johnny Harms, with George Allen and George Agar, acquired in a deal with Cleveland as defencemen.

Fundamentals were stressed yesterday as coaches Bob Elliott and Johnny Edwards sent 65 football candidates through an early workout at Kingston in preparation for Queen's University's return to the Intercollegiate Football Union Oct. 20.

One of the principals in the recent sale of King's Park track at Montreal to a construction firm, Lou Smith of New York resigned as a director of the Monmouth Park, N.J., Jockey Club yesterday after the State Racing Commission had threatened to revoke the track's licence unless he withdrew. No reason for the threat was announced.

Coach Hap Emms of St. Louis Flyers announced at the Port Arthur, Ont., training camp of the American Hockey League team yesterday that the club had come to terms with centreman Morey Rimstead, recently suspended, and the player would be back in the fold Friday.

Eighteen amateur players turned out yesterday at Winnipeg for the start of Lester Patrick's New York Rangers hockey school. 11 of the puckchasers were recently in the armed services. Three pro arrivals were forwards Phil Watson and Bill Juzda and goaltender Charlie Rayner.

World Series Notes

By JERRY LISKA

Detroit, Oct. 4—(CP)—American leaguers and Larry MacPhail, New York Yankees' volatile major domo, won't concede Chicago Cubs the world series' title on the basis of Hank Borowy's opening win over Detroit Tigers.

MacPhail, whose sale of Hank to Chicago gave the Cubs the National league title, loudly insists that Borowy was lucky in his 9-0 triumph yesterday.

"The Tigers forgot to get the first inning and that was the ball game," MacPhail says.

P. S.—The Cubs won the National league pennant with Borowy; the Yanks finished in fourth place in the American league without him.

Connie Mack, 82-year-old boss of Philadelphia Athletics, also said Borowy did not pitch a good game. "Borowy was in trouble in the first six innings and only superlative work by Andy Pafko and Phil Cavarretta saved him," said the maestro of the A's. "I still have faith in the Tigers."

Steve O'Neill, keeper of the Tigers, shied away from pointing out a tide-turning play. "You can't do that when the score is 9-0 against you," he scowled. "We simply got a bad game out of our system. Maybe Virgil Trucks will give them more trouble than Hal Newhouser."

Bill (Deacon) McKechne, whose Cincinnati Reds were choice cousins of the Cubs all season, is getting a last laugh in the series.

"Cheer up Steve," he told O'Neill. "You've only lost one game to those guys. They beat us 21 times."

"I never saw the Cubs so free and easy as they were today," Borowy grinned. "My arm was plenty cold out there and I was sure wild, but as long as the boys were so relaxed behind me, I never worried once."

CHAPTER 3

Elaine looked at them, at the hurt little look in Lee's eyes after Karen had finished talking.

Lassen was laughing at something he'd said. He repeated it, still laughing. "With your looks, Miss Stoddard, you'd make any combination look beautiful." He laughed some more and Elaine felt weary of Lassen and Karen's continual fight and ego, even a little tired of Lee's weakness.

Elaine's apartment was not large and although she could have afforded a penthouse now, she had grown to feel the three-room apartment was her home. It was furnished with delicate richness that fitted her personality. She used the bedroom as her work room shoving a card table and a stiff backed chair piled high with pillows into a corner. Her typewriter, a few books and boxes of paper filled the table.

Lassen had decorated the walls adding to the apartment's originality and beauty. Viewing it at times, Elaine felt a little successful a bit contented.

A few days before Christmas she had resigned her job with Brann, feeling that the time had come to devote more time to her work. Brann was pleased that she was ready to do another play and scheduled it for a spring opening. The first time he had planned a production that late in the season since his early days in the business.

But he had explained to Elaine that she was now a "big name" and that the public would support a summer show. He also was toying with the idea of installing an air conditioning system in one of his theatres. He had engineers swarming around him with plans and blueprints. He predicted to Elaine that if air conditioning worked it would be a boom to summer show business.

That was in the winter of 1936 and air conditioning was something rather new and Bing Crosby was giving "Sweet Lei Lani" a good start to popularity and women's dresses were getting a little shorter and automobiles more streamlined. And in England King Edward VIII abdicated his throne to marry Wallis Simpson.

While Elaine was busy on the draft of a new play one night when the elements seemed to be roaring with its cold wind and biting snow, Lee came to the apartment.

She let him in, a trifle surprised. When he was seated in the living room, rolling a cigaret between his fingers, a tired, worried expression covering his face, she asked:

"Why the sudden visit? I didn't know I was still included in your social circle?"

He reddened. "Let's skip that, Elaine."

She turned from him and walked to the windows, gazing down at the street. It seemed empty and lonely, something strange for a street in New York. Or maybe it was just her own feeling. She felt his hands on her shoulders, turning her around.

"I'm sorry if I seem rude. It's just that I need help—your help, and I don't think I'm going to be very good at asking for it."

She did not move and his hands were still lightly on her arms. "What's wrong, Lee?"

For a long time he did not answer, just stood close to her and let his eyes slowly take in all her features. "You're like a pretty picture I've put away and have just taken out to look at again."

She did not know whether she stood in the circle of his arms very long, whether the silence that shrouded the room was for but a moment. She could not remember whether she moved, whether she said anything. It had all seemed a long time ago, unreal, since she had opened the door and let him in.

She was not certain if the kiss was long.

When he released her and stepped back, a little breathlessly, he smiled. "I'm sorry."

She shook her head. She was not sorry. There was no reason for him to be. She had wanted him to kiss her, to hold her close, tightly, possessively. The thought that he did not belong to her any more had not recoiled through her mind.

He had started to turn away, then suddenly pulled her to him again. This time she could feel the press of his lips, could realize every sensation of the kiss. This time she pushed away quickly, a little angrily. He did not belong to her, nor she to him. The beating in her heart for him was there, she knew, but that was for her alone to know. She turned back to the windows, her eyes a little moist.

"You said you needed help." Her voice was not steady, nor did she care. She could hear him moving back to the centre of the room, lighting the cigaret, exhaling smoke. She could hear him rub his hand across the back of his neck. She waited a long time for Lee to speak.

"I'm not doing too hot on the new play," he finally said, his voice tired. "I know you're busy with your own stuff, but I was wondering if you'd look my play over, tell me what it lacks."

Elaine slowly turned from the windows, stared at him. His clothes were expensive. He looked expensive, well taken care of. She did not know when she began to realize that he had always seemed that way—well taken care of. There had always been somebody to help him, but she had not known that before, had refused to let herself believe it if she had thought it.

Lee was watching her closely, alertly. His brow was wrinkled a little, as if he were trying to read her thoughts. He took a step toward her, his face changing from a strained to an appealing look.

Elaine quickly moved away from him, crossed to a cabinet, mixed two drinks. Wordlessly she handed Lee his, then sat down opposite him.

"Tell me about the play," she said, lighting herself a cigaret.

He shrugged. "You'd have to read it. Would you do that?"

She did not trust herself to look at him, and her silence seemed to indicate to him a refusal. He put down his drink and moved nearer to her. She could feel his hands take hold of hers.

"Elaine, listen to me." His voice, low and insistent, was like a drug to her. "You've got to help me. I'm in a spot. We always promised each other that we'd always come through if one of us needed help. We did, didn't we, Elaine?"

She turned, looked at his eyes moving over her face. "Yes," she answered. "Yes, we promised that."

"I know I've hurt you, Elaine, but—but maybe I realize I've been wrong in my way of thinking." He spoke hardly above a whisper, but the words were clear as a bell to her. "Look at me, Elaine."

His fingers turned her face to him, tipped her chin back. Then gently they traced the outline of her mouth, her cheek, her brow. "Sweet. Sweet face, always a sweet face." He watched his fingers move gently and slowly over her face. . . .

Elaine stared at the red tip of her cigaret, glowing brightly in the darkened room. She could hear her little clock tick softly in the next room. The wind had seemed to take on more force and groaned against the windows and down below in the empty street. In the distance she heard the apartment house elevator roll upward, stop at the floor above, then whisk down again.

She stared through the darkness to the little end table by the davenport. Lee's play lay open on it, half read. She moved a little, felt Lee's arm touch her, heard him inhale on his cigaret, listened to his breath as he exhaled the smoke.

Slowly she snubbed out her cigaret, watched the hot ashes flare for a moment, then merge quickly into the dark. Thoughts raced crazily through her mind and pressed her eyes shut tightly, a brittle sadness engulfing her. And when Lee moved closing his mouth over hers once more, she did not care that her tears wet their cheeks.

Elaine did not tell Brann she had agreed to help Lee with his new play. He had made her promise she would not tell anyone. He feared the mangling he would get from dramatic critics and columnists if it were known that he needed help to complete a play.

That it slowed the work on her play did not seem to bother Lee. And that it left him free of some responsibility did not trouble him either. Having gotten Elaine's promise to help him, he did not see her again until after the first of the year.

Elaine felt she had no one but herself to blame, and that she had pulled the threads of Lee's play together, woven them into a suitable structure for production was of minor satisfaction.

When there was no more work to be done on the play and she had waited a week for him to call her or come to the apartment to see what she had done, she telephoned him at his hotel.

Karen's voice answered the telephone and she could hear laughter in the background.

"Why, Elaine, darling, how nice of you to call!" Karen's voice was unusually sweet. "I didn't know you had heard about the good news. But, then, I suppose it did get around."

"What news?" Elaine cut in.

Karen was silent for a moment. "Why my engagement to Lee, of course. We're to be married some time after his new play is produced, and I can find a suitable understudy, of course. That's why you called, isn't it? I mean, to congratulate me."

"Yes," Elaine answered numbly. "Yes, of course, that's why I called." She mumbled something into the mouthpiece, something about being happy, and hung up, feeling her soul wither.

The next day she mailed Lee his play, and when she received a letter from him later in the week she destroyed it without opening the envelope. She wondered if it were possible to ever wash off the feeling of his lips against hers.

When Anthony Brann finally opened Elaine's new play weeks later than he had planned, people were buying copies of Dale Carnegie's "How to Win Friends and Influence People" and staring at newspaper pictures of the burning dirigible Hindenburg.

And on the dramatic pages of the New York papers, almost next to the huge advertisement Brann had placed, was the story about the Critics' prize going to Lee Collins for his new play.

There was a good deal in the story about Karen and John Warren and how they all three had come up together. And there was a picture of Lee and Karen. And there was a quotation in the story, words spoken by Karen, that boldly said the entire success of Lee's plays depended a great deal on her acting ability. And there was a quotation from John Warren, mildly backing Karen's remarks. But there was no quotation from Lee, and Elaine wondered just who had been given the prize.

SIMPLE ANEMIA

● Girls! Women! If you suffer from simple anemia so that you feel weak, "dragged out" —this may be due to lack of iron in the blood. So try Lydia E. FELT SO TIRED; IRRITABLE
UNTIL SHE TOOK SYNTONA

Tells How it Built Her Up, Also Relieved Headaches, Backache and Indigestion. "I Now Feel So Much Better That Even My Work Seems Easier," She Says.

"I wish I could tell every person suffering as I did how much Syntona has meant to me," said Mrs. Florence Campbell, 243 Dundas St., London, Ont., in a recent report.

"A few weeks ago I was feeling miserable. I was so tired and irritable at times, I didn't know what to do. My appetite was very poor and the little food I did eat soured in my stomach giving me gas and indigestion. I had a nagging pain across my back. Sick headaches were almost a daily occurrence with me. This condition had me in a very nervous state all the time. Many nights I couldn't sleep soundly and in the mornings I hardly had enough energy to get started with my work.

"I decided to try Syntona after reading how it was helping many other people and I can truthfully say nothing has ever done me so much good. Since I've been taking this medicine I enjoy all my meals and my food digests well. I have no trouble with gas, sourness or indigestion. I am free from backache and my nerves are relaxed permitting me to get sound, restful sleep. Whereas I used to feel so tired and irritable, I now feel so much better that even my work seems easier."

MRS. FLORENCE CAMPBELL

Let this great formula of Nature's Herbs and Roots help you as it has so many others suffering this way. Syntona acts on the stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels. It aids in the elimination of excess acids and impurities from the system and promotes better assimilation of food for increased strength and energy.

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

"WORN OUT" AND WORRIED

Dragging around each day, unable to do housework — cranky with the children — feeling miserable. Blaming it on "nerves" when the kidneys may be out of order. When kidneys fail the system clogs with impurities. Headaches — backache, frequently follow. Dodd's Kidney Pills help clear the system, giving nature a chance to restore health and energy. Easy to take. Safe. 116

London — (CP) — Due to the shortage of soap, housewives are using their husbands' shaving soap for washing clothes.

GALLANT

With the passing of the parade past the saluting base in front of the Salvation Army Citadel on Pinnacle Street the crowd which had taken up its position on the county building lawns broke for Bridge Street where the regiment was halted to permit its members to greet relatives.

Alphabetically arranged letters along the Armouries lawn fence and under which it was expected relatives would greet their sons husbands and sweethearts, meant but little. With the halting of the regiment there was but one grand rush of loved ones who, in some cases, had waited almost six years for this moment. Stalwarts of the regiment dressed in their spic-and-span uniforms were quickly engulfed in a mass of humanity which acted as one person.

Greeted by Relatives

From Front Street to Church Street corner Bridge Street saw the same scene enacted hundreds of times when as many veterans greeted their loved ones. Members of the regiment not from the Belleville district, entered enthusiastically into the spirit of things and greeted strangers as though they were old friends.

After reunions regiment members were called to order and the pavement cleared of civilians. The regiment band broke out with the National Anthem following which the unit members were marched into the Armouries for dismissal.

With the regimental mascots standing in mute guard at the main exit of the Armouries floor, members of the unit were dismissed to permit those whose homes were in Eastern Canada to board the noon train out of Belleville. Approximately one-third of the men in uniform broke ranks and lined up to receive the papers. Others were later dismissed to again renew acquaintances with relatives and former buddies of the services, while local organizations were on hand to dispense food and refreshments.

City and County Officials Speak

Official welcome messages from J. Fred Wilson M.P.P., for Hastings West, and warden of Hastings county; from Warden H. A. Cleave of Prince Edward county, and from Mayor Frank S. Follwell of Belleville, were heard on the Armouries lawn following the arrival of the Hasty Pees at the Armouries. The messages of welcome were heard over loud speaker sound truck supplied by the R.C.A.F.

AUTOMOBILE TRAILER TAKEN FROM STREET

It doesn't pay to leave an automobile trailer unattended on Belleville streets at night.

At least that is the thought of Raymond Reid, Johnston Street, who Wednesday evening left his trailer parked in St. Paul-George Street area only to find it missing when he returned. Loaded with shavings the trailer was left in the above vicinity while the owner went to secure some repair. When he returned the trailer was missing. Police officers were given the trailer number with instructions to be on the lookout.

Wartime Controls Will Continue In Transition Period

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 3—(CP)—Parliament will be asked to take responsibility for the continuance of wartime controls during the transition period, Justice Minister St. Laurent said last night in the Commons.

Answering criticism from Maj. E. D. Fulton (PC—Kamloops) about delay in proclaiming the end of the war and returning to Parliament its full legislative jurisdiction, Mr. St. Laurent said the bill announced at the opening of Parliament to "extend certain emergency powers to meet emergency conditions in the period of reconstruction" had been prepared prior to Aug. 28.

"Just as soon as there is an opportunity that bill will be introduced and Parliament will be asked to take its responsibility."

The Minister said the government already had taken steps to remove some of the controls and he doubted if anyone would suggest they should be swept away all at once.

Maj. Fulton had referred to a resolution of the Canadian Bar Association on executive wartime orders and Mr. St. Laurent said the resolution was tabled and not passed. It would be wrong to conclude that the association had gone on record as against the wartime powers of the government.

"I do not think there is a single person in this House who would say it was proper to substitute other authority for the maintenance of these controls," said Mr. St. Laurent.

T. L. Church (PC—Toronto Broadview) said there was no need of a proclamation to end the war. The controls should have ceased automatically the day the fighting ended.

He believed Canada should follow the example of Washington in the matter of controls.

Angus MacInnis (CCF Vancouver East), referring to criticism of the government for doing much of its work by order-in-council, said Parliamentary procedure would have to be streamlined or the government would have no other course than to continue passing orders-in-council.

Parliamentary procedure now was very slow—too slow for quick action on many matters. Britain had streamlined her procedure.

U.S. to Ship 100 Million Pounds Meat Overseas

Washington, Oct. 3—(CP)—About 100,000,000 pounds of meat products previously prepared on order for the United Relief and Rehabilitation Administration will be shipped for use in liberated areas, it was learned Tuesday.

Local UNRRA headquarters said this would constitute the bulk of the administration's meat shipments abroad in the last quarter of 1945 and would not come out of supplies available for United States civilian consumption.

The meat and meat products had been specially packed for shipment to the war theatres and became surplus through sharp cutbacks.

Japanese Cabinet Resigns Rather Than Obey Orders

Mac Arthur to Approve New Premier Before Appointment

Tokyo, Oct. 5 (AP)—Japan's post-war cabinet resigned today rather than carry out Gen. MacArthur's latest orders—and Gen. MacArthur will approve the next premier before Emperor Hirohito directs him to form a new cabinet.

Premier Prince Higashi-Kuni went to his cousin, Emperor Hirohito, with the resignations following a two-hour meeting of the cabinet over Gen. MacArthur's demand to oust the home minister in the interests of achieving a free thinking, free speaking Japan.

Hirohito accepted, said "that is good" — and Higashi - Kuni emerged with the discourse that the emperor personally had adopted the idea of submitting the name of the next premier to Gen. MacArthur out of desire to "insure full co-operation with the Americans."

The emperor's readiness in accepting the resignations was interpreted as meaning he thought a stronger cabinet more pleasing to Gen. MacArthur could be formed.

Higashi-Kuni thought it might require a day or two to reach a decision on a new premier — rumored as likely to be another Prince, Fumimaro Konoye, who was premier when Japan attacked China. That rumor persisted despite the fact Konoye was not popular and his appointment might precipitate violence within Japan.

(A Reuters dispatch from Tokyo said Baron Kijuro Shidehara, 72, former foreign minister and one-time ambassador to Washington, had been asked to accept the premiership.

Thinks He is Too Old.

(Baron Shidehara said later he is too old for the job and suggested former Minister Shigeru Yoshida as a possible choice for the new premier.)

Higashi-Kuni declined to speculate on who might succeed him but said in an Associated Press interview after his visit to the palace he felt sure "the next premier will be a man who knows the Americans."

Another possibility mentioned was the resigned Foreign Minister Shigeru Yoshida, a career diplomat.

"My job is finished," Higashi-Kuni said. He expressed confidence the next premier would "follow through the liberal policies I tried to establish."

Authoritative Japanese sources said Gen. MacArthur's "liberation" order directly forced the cabinet upheaval: Higashi-Kuni, they said, publicly had promised abolition of thought police and such other agencies as the cabinet Board of information in interviews with the Japanese press—but was hamstrung "by bureaucrats and others around him."

Given Opportunity.

Gen. MacArthur's order, these sources said, gave Higashi-Kuni an opportunity to resign and force the entire cabinet to follow him.

Gen. MacArthur had insisted on the immediate removal of Home Minister Iwao Yamazaki, whose latest act was the confiscation of Japanese newspapers showing pictures of Hirohito calling on Gen. MacArthur. The order called for the ouster of Yamazaki and disbanding of his brutal police who for a decade had pounced on Japanese on the thin pretext that their unspoken thoughts were inimical to the Emperor and the military regime.

Sources said the Higashi-Kuni cabinet yesterday had decided it did not "feel confident enough to cope with this (MacArthur) demand."

Navy Demobilized.

The Cabinet crisis topped off other developments which included:

A Domei report that Japan's once powerful navy, cut to a remnant by Allied air and naval attacks, now has been virtually demobilized, including more than 1,000,000 naval personnel.

But Japan's navy reported later to Allied headquarters that 20,582 homeland navy personnel had been discharged by Oct. 1—correcting the earlier Domei report which had said that 67,800 men had been demobilized in September. The navy said reasons for the error would be explained to Allied headquarters tomorrow.

Restrictions On Reduced Fares Off in New Year

Ottawa, Oct. 5 — (CP)—Transport Minister Chevrier said today in the Commons he hoped to be able to announce in mid-January the lifting of restrictions on reduced railway fares.

There would be no immediate removal, however, and the whole matter would be reviewed some time after Jan. 1, 1946.

He explained that during wartime it had been found necessary, "in order to assure the maximum use of railway facilities for the prosecution of the war," to suspend or cancel certain reduced fares for holiday and excursion travel.

The movement of the armed forces at this time was taxing railway facilities to capacity.

Mr. Chevrier added:

"It is with regret that I have to announce that there will be no removal of the restrictions now in effect on reduced fares for railway travel until after Jan. 1, 1946 when the whole question will again be reviewed. I hope to be able to announce the lifting of the restrictions on reduced fares by the middle of January, but of course this will depend upon the traffic conditions prevailing at that time."

British Columbia's Political Battle Enters Final Round

Vancouver, Oct. 5— (CP) — British Columbia's political battle — its first since 1941 — entered completion yesterday of official nominations in the 41 constituencies.

Altogether 147 candidates were listed as nominated for the provincial general election Oct. 25th when electors will choose 48 members.

The fight for power is mainly between the Coalition government headed by Premier John Hart and Attorney-General R. L. Maitland and the Socialist C. C. F. Party. However, the Labor Progressive and Social Credit parties are making their first major bid for power in this province's history.

The Coalition government is seeking re-election on the merits of its administration since formation in 1941 and endorsation of huge post-war programs drawn up at the 1944 session.

Members of Veterans Guard Defy 15,000 Nazis in Rescuing Major

Toronto, Oct. 5 —(CP)— Only the composure of members of the Veterans Guard of Canada prevented bloodshed when the veterans went into an Alberta prisoner of war camp in July, 1942, to rescue a Canadian lieutenant-colonel and six other soldiers captured in the camp by about 15,000 members of Rommel's Afrika Korps, a Toronto officer recalled yesterday.

The officer was Maj. J. R. R. Thomson of Toronto, commander of the 22nd Winnipeg Company the Veterans Guard which, mustering only 100 men, went in fully armed and freed the camp's second-in-command and the men held with him.

Maj. Thomson said the 15,000 Germans were brought in to the Ozade Prison Camp, between Calgary and Banff, in June.

On July 5 they refused to parade after camp authorities would not permit five or six senior N.C.O.'s to put up advanced badges to which they claimed they were entitled by promotions sent from Germany.

Next day, during a routine inspection the Germans seized the lieutenant-colonel, an interpreter and medical and dental personnel and held them prisoner even after the officer offered to remain as a hostage if the others were released.

Six hours later the Veterans Guard company was ordered to march in to the rescue.

"My men had every opportunity to lose their heads, but they kept cool," Maj. Thomson said. "They took a lot of abuse from those squareheads, but they went about their task quietly even when the Germans crowded right in on their bayonets.

"They had to go to a number of points to free all those who had been held, but they marched them out without serious incident, and to their own great credit. Those old soldiers in the Veterans Guard handled a difficult task extremely well."

Maj. Thomson said the leaders of the affair were given 28 days' detention in a separate compound outside the main camp. That was the severest punishment a prisoner of war camp commandant was permitted to impose.

CANADA TO HAVE PERMANENT AIR FORCE OF 15,000

Departmental Estimates Of $598.000.000 Show Decrease of 45 P.C. Over Last Year

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Oct. 5 (CP)—Canada will have a peacetime air force of between 15,000 and 20,000 men unless international or regional security agreements necessitate a change in plans, Air Minister Gibson told the Commons Thursday night.

"No definite decision has yet been made as to the strength and composition of the post-war air force, as until the nature and extent of any commitments that we may have under international or regional agreements have been determined it is obviously impossible to reach any final decision," said Col. Gibson.

He spoke while presenting his departmental estimates which amounted to $598,400,000, a decrease of more than 45 per cent over the last fiscal year's estimates of $1,090,000,000.

His speech brought from Progressive Conservative members expressions of regret that the government had not seen fit to present an over-all picture with respect to postwar forces and had not presented a clearer picture of expenditures which they felt should have been reduced by a wider margin.

Main criticism from the opposition benches were Maj.-Gen. G. Pearkes V.C., (PC—Nanaimo), Lt.-Col. Cecil Merritt, V.C., (PC—Vancouver Burrard) and J. M. MacDonnell (PC — Muskoka-Ontario)..

Announcements Made.

Preceding Col. Gibson's address were these announcements:

1. Trade Minister MacKinnon said the Federal government has decided to lift the 14-bushel per acre limitation on wheat deliveries for the present crop year.

2. Agriculture Minister Gardiner said Canada had agreed to increase bacon shipments by 6,000 tons in October and November following receipt of information that the British ration would have to be reduced to two ounces unless more bacon became available.

3. Transport Minister Chevrier said he hoped to be able to announce in mid-January the lifting of restrictions on reduced railway fares.

4. State Secretary Martin disclosed there were 11.145 N.R.M.A. deserters and absentees and 13.416 Canadian draft dodgers still at large Sept. 1.

5. Mr. Martin also disclosed that civil service hours will be restored to a pre-war scale effective Nov. 1.

6. Justice Minister St. Laurent said 12 or 16 men given jail sentences for participation in the Halifax VE-Day riots have been released as a result of a Justice Department review of sentences.

Debate in Senate

In the Senate, debate on the Throne Speech continued with Senator Arthur Roebuck (L—Ontario) and Senator F. W. Gershaw (L — Alberta) participating.

Col. Gibson said the post - war air force will include bomber, fighter and transport squadrons, an auxiliary force modelled on the reserve army organization and a reserve composed of qualified personnel who could be recalled to service in an emergency.

30 COUNTRIES RATIFY CHARTER SECURITY LEAGUE

This is One More Than Necessary to Bring it Into Existence

London, Oct. 5 — (AP) — Edward R. Stettinius, United States delegate to the United Nations World Security League, announced today that 30 countries had ratified the organization's charter—one more than necessary to bring it into existence.

Stettinius, who made the announcement at an open meeting of the League's Executive Committee, said 11 countries already had deposited their ratifications in Washington and that the other countries had sent word that ratifications were on the way.

Meanwhile, an argument developed within the league's executive committee over the question of postponing the first formal assembly of the league until after Christmas. With it came a hint that the executive committee was running into the same sort of difficulty that caused the collapse of the meeting of foreign ministers—questions of procedure.

To Convene in December

Prof. C. K. Webster, alternate British delegate, frankly warned his colleagues that unless the arrangements on procedure "are well done, it might well wreck the whole assembly."

But Mr. Stettinius stood firm for convening the League assembly early in December.

"I do not believe the quality of the work will suffer," he said. "The important thing is to bring into being the organs of the league."

He said the world was waiting for the World Security Council, the Social-Economic Council and the World Court to start functioning.

"They must be brought into being just as soon as possible," Mr. Stettinius added. "Let's stick squarely on our target and get the league going this year. The Christmas holiday in this year of peace is of secondary importance to that of bringing the league into being."

The executive committee decided to wind up its session Oct. 18, and to fix Nov. 8 as the starting date for the 50-member Preparatory Conference, which will arrange for the assembly, probably in December.

11,145 N.R.M.A. DESERTERS STILL AT LARGE SEPT. 1

Large Proportion of Group Reported from Montreal and Quebec

Ottawa, Oct. 5 —(CP)— There were 11,145 N.R.M.A. deserters and absentees and 13,416 Canadian draft dodgers still at large Sept. 1, it was disclosed in a return tabled in the Commons last night by State Secretary Martin.

Usually a man absent without leave or "A.W.L." from the service for 21 days is considered an absentee while a man absent longer than that period is considered a deserter. A draft dodger is a defaulter who fails to respond to his military call-up.

Absenteeism, which became a mass movement about a year ago when 7,800 infantry reinforcements failed to report for overseas draft, has resulted in 6,576 prosecutions. No figures on the number of deserters prosecuted are available. To July 31, 11,132 draft dodgers had been prosecuted.

Mr. Martin's statement was made in reply to questions asked by John Diefenbaker (P.C., Lake Centre.)

Main Sources.

Of the deserters and absentees without leave 5,875 came from M.D. 4 (Montreal), and 2,790 from M.D. 5 (Quebec City.)

The other figures were: M.D. 1 (London), 108; M.D. 2 (Toronto), 670; M.D. 3 (Kingston), 140; M.D. 6 (Halifax), 36; M.D. 7 (Saint John), 146; M.D. 10 (Winnipeg), 578; Pacific Command, 186; M.D. 12 (Regina), 287, and M.D. 13 (Calgary), 329.

Of the defaulters, four came from Prince Edward Island, 106 from Nova Scotia, 124 from New Brunswick, 9,647 from Quebec, 2,597 from Ontario, 199 from Manitoba, 178 from Saskatchewan, 95 from Alberta, and 466 from British Columbia.

At the end of last July, 11,132 NRMA defaulters had been prosecuted and 2,347 had been sentenced to imprisonment. Of those prosecuted, 5,822 were reported from Quebec, 1,894 from Manitoba and 1,706 from Ontario. Of those imprisoned, 853 were reported from Quebec, 477 from Ontario and 432 from Manitoba.

There were 6,576 prosecuted and found guilty but not sentenced to imprisonment.

Figures as to the numbers of deserters prosecuted were not available. They had been dealt with in two ways, by summary hearing before his commanding officer or by court-martial. In neither case was it feasible to produce figures.

On Aug. 29 there were 35,276 NRMA personnel in the Canadian Army in Canada and "adjacent territories."

On Sept. 1, 6,066 NRMA troops were absent on farm leave, 555 because they were needed in industry, and 1,801 for other reasons, a total of 8,422. In addition, 75 men were on farm duty and 525 on industrial duty.

On medical grounds, 2,451 NRMA men were discharged up to Aug. 31 and "on any other grounds" the total was 1,404.

SMITH FALLS FLIER SAFE AFTER LONG HITCH-HIKE

Flt. Lt. J. Fleming in Manila After Long Hard Trip From Island Of Borneo

By WILLIAM STEWART
(CP War Correspondent)

Manila, Oct. 5 — (CP Cable) — Flt. Lt. John Fleming of Smiths Falls, Ont., who flew with an RAF Hurricane Squadron in 1942 in defence of Singapore, Sumatra and Java, was in Manila today after hitch-hiking to the Philippines from Borneo, where he was released from a Japanese prison camp by Australian forces.

He was first downed early in January while strafing an enemy beachhead on the east coast of Malaya and trekked 100 miles back to Singapore with the survivors of the British destroyer Thanet, sunk while attacking a Japanese convoy.

When Fleming reached Singapore he found his squadron had been evacuated to Palembang in Sumatra. Rejoining the squadron the Canadian operated against the enemy again until he was sent to Batavia to ferry Hurricanes back to Sumatra.

Bringing the first ferried fighter to Palembang, Fleming landed on an airstrip which was about to be surrounded by Japanese paratroopers who had been dropped in a surprise stroke from captured Allied bombers. Fleming, however, succeeded in refuelling the plane quickly and flew it to a jungle strip. But after a couple of operations he joined the evacuation towards Java.

In the evacuation started in a locomotive operated by a Royal Navy sailor, who headed for Ousthaven. He refilled the engine with water once during the trip and stopped here and there to hook on cattle cars filled with Dutch civilians and British and Australian servicemen.

Fleming who reached Java from Ousthaven by sea, subsequently flew on strafing operations from Batavia against newly-taken Japanese positions about 100 miles to the east until he was shot down by an enemy fighter.

The Ontario pilot bailed out into a rice paddy in Dutch-held territory but was wounded in the arm by a bullet from a Japanese plane. He made his way to Batavia where he entered hospital and was captured when enemy troops occupied the city.

At the camp in Kuching, capital of Sarawak, Fleming received a little mail and one-sixth of an American Red Cros sparcel. But with Warrant Officer L. A. Beckett, of Enfield, England, and Warrant Officer Eric Pepler, from Wiltshire, he operated a secret wireless set hand made by Beckett.

The printers were advised to return to work by Woodruff Randolph, International President of the International Typographical Union whose headquarters are at Indianapolis, Ind., and by Harry Finch, Canadian representative of the Union, who was in Port Arthur on union business.

Flier Offers Healthy Eye Free To Any Blind Woman or Man

Ottawa, Oct. 5 —(CP)— Irishmen are proverbially big-hearted though not many would literally give away an eye. But that's exactly what one veteran R.A.F. officer, now in Ottawa, wants to do.

The officer a retired wing commander, was one of "the few" in the Battle of Britain, gave fighter cover to Montgomery's armies in North Africa and finally crashed in the Burmese jungle after his Spitfire was shot up by a cannon-firing Jap Zero.

Wishing to remain anonymous because his family in Ireland are unaware of his injury, the officer inserted an advertisement in an Ottawa newspaper when he learned of new surgical techniques which may give sight to the blind through use of a donor's eye. ad read:.

"Will donate right eye to any man or woman in need for same. Perfect vision."

He told The Canadian Press that, as a "gesture of international good-will" he would prefer to give the eye to a war-blinded United States veteran, the world where it was being done.

Judge Rejects Plea To Have Laval's Trial Delayed

Defendant Allowed in Court Provided He Behaves Self

Paris, Oct. 5 —(CP)— Judge Paul Mongibeaux today rejected the pleas of defence counsel for Pierre Laval, 61, former Vichy premier, that Laval's treason trial be delayed.

The Judge ruled that the trial which began yesterday with a tumultuous session during which the accused was ejected from the court, must continue.

The three defence lawyers, who said yesterday they declined to handle Laval's case because they had been denied access to important documents, took their places today.

The Judge gave Laval permission to attend today provided he did not create a disturbance or upset the dignity of the court.

Ten minutes after the session opened, when one of defence counsel was involved with the Judge, the Judge said: "Do not forget that you are supposed to express yourself with decency and correctness."

Defence Counsel said the trial had been opened with "indecent haste." It was contended that Laval worked practically in the dark to prepare his case and that the prosecution had access to documents which the accused had not seen.

Wanted More Time.

Postponement of the trial was urged to give Laval more time to prepare his case.

Laval looked gloomier and more shrivelled than ever as he sat in court, his hands under his chin.

From time to time he muttered agreement or disagreement between his teeth especially as Judge Mongibeaux announced that he had been allowed to return to court at the unanimous request of the jury.

Jacques Baraduc, Laval's second defence counsel, said: "The defence is a crushing load. We ask for a respite."

As the speech went on both Judge Mongibeaux and the defence counsel grew angry and began to raise their voices.

Andre Mornet, the public prosecutor, also began to interrupt angrily, protesting that the examination of the case had not been "sabotaged." The defence had only to apply to the prosecution for any documents they needed, he said.

Exchange of Words

Just before the court adjourned to consider the arguments of defence counsel there was an exchange of words between Albert Naud, Chief Defence Counsel and M. Mornet. M. Naud alleged that the indictment was prejudiced, quoting as an example the words "history of Laval's treason."

The prosecutor retorted that the evidence against Laval, which the defence complained they had no time to inspect, consisted of laws and government decrees which Laval had issued between 1940 and 1944.

"I will give the defendant one more chance," Presiding Judge Paul Mongibeaux ruled. "I will not, however, permit insolence or emotional outbursts. If the defendant does not compose himself calmly and in accordance with the solemnity of the trial, I will expel him again and that time it will be definite."

Ordered Expelled

Judge Mongibeaux yesterday ordered the former Chief of the Vichy government expelled from the courtroom where he is on trial on charges of intelligence with the enemy and attacking the security of the state.

Repeatedly Laval played to the 12 jurors drawn from a panel of resistance leaders, striving to set them against Judge Mongibeaux and Prosecutor Andre Mornet by emphasizing that the pair had continued in office under the Vichy regime.

There were smiles among the resistance leaders when Laval said two of the 12 Members of Parliament serving as jurors had voted to give Marshal Petain full authority in July, 1940.

Laval added that leading politicians of the Third Republic should be tried beside him for France's present predicament. Repeatedly he interrupted the judge.

Duke of Windsor Visits His Mother

London, Oct. 5 —(Reuters)— The Duke of Windsor landed today at Hendon Airport on London's northern outskirts after a flight from Paris and drove to Marleborough House, residence of Queen Mary, his mother.

"I am glad to be back," said the Duke. "I am only here for a few days."

The Duke has not been in Britain since during the first year of the war. He came to London at that time while holding a war office staff appointment in Paris.

The Duke said in New York recently, before sailing for France with the Duchess of Windsor, that he had not seen his mother for nine years.

The Duke promised waiting newspapermen that he would arrange a news conference while here.

It had been announced that he would go to Buckingham Palace, where his brother, the King, arrived from Scotland this morning and where his mother had luncheon, and early this afternoon a large crowd gathered at the palace gates. Why the plans were changed was not disclosed.

The Duchess of Windsor remained in Paris, but she is expected to come to London later.

The newspaper Northern Whig of Belfast, Ireland, published reports from its London correspondent that plans were nearly complete for what the newspaper described as "full reconciliation" among the Windsors, the Royal Family and the government, with the Duchess to be accorded the title of "Royal Highness."

Mother Is Taken To Waiting Arms Of Soldier Son

The little old lady, tears in her eyes, stood outside the barricade at the C.N.R. Station on Thursday morning, watching in rapt attention as the members of the First Battalion, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment milled around inside the enclosure renewing old acquaintances with former members of the unit.

She reached out a timid hand as Police Inspector Clare Hayes passed by. "How much longer are they going to keep us waiting here?" she asked.

"I don't know," the inspector replied.

The tears began to run down her cheeks as she pointed to a stalwart private of the regiment who was so near and yet so far from her.

She pointed a finger. "That is my boy over there," she informed the inspector, "I have not seen him for five years. How long will it be before I can see him."

The inspector paused a moment and replied, "You will see him right now."

And asking surrounding spectators to kindly keep their places, he escorted the little old lady to the waiting arms of her soldier son.

'Hell on Earth For Three Years' Writes Soldier to Wife Telling Of Horrors of Jap Prison Camp

Picton, Oct. 5 — "It has just been hell on earth for the past three years," Rifleman John Arthur declared in a letter to his wife here. He was a prisoner of war in Japan since the fall of Hong Kong, and according to a cable received Wednesday had reached Honolulu on the United States hospital ship Benevolence.

"I am not too bad considering what we have gone through, as we have lived and worked on nothing but barley soup, made from anything at all, even pig weed, Rfm. Arthur wrote. "It has been hell on earth. You just didn't know when you were doing anything right, as the Japs would knock you down for no reason at all.

Worked in Coal Mine.

"They had me working in a coal mine, and then I was moved to a ship building yard. That is where my illness started. We had to go to work, rain or shine, most of the time in water up to our knees, and then after working in the rain all day, go home to a bowl of rice and soup. There was no way in which to dry your clothes as they did not permit any stoves. You just put on your wet clothes the next day and went through it all over again.

Many Boys Died.

"Many of the boys died from it, but that didn't worry the Japs.

"I am glad you did not send any more boxes, for the Japs got practically everything out of them. Altogether, I got eight letters and pictures from you, and one box was well rifled.

Wants Lots of Pies.

"You want to be well prepared to cook cakes and pies at all times, for I sure am going to want lots of them. My happiest day is coming, when I see you and Shirley (daughter) again. I am told I will have to stay in hospital for a while after I get home," wrote Rfm. Arthur.

Mother Dies.

Mrs. John P. Arthur, Sr., mother of Rfm. Arthur, died before her son reached home. Ill for six weeks, and having undergone great strain as a result of her son's imprisonment, she passed away in hospital at Kingston, Tuesday. She was in her 80th year and was formerly Annie Lavine Wannamaker.

The funeral was held yesterday at the Gilbert Company chapel, with interment in Glenwood cemetery.

Survivors are Rfm. J. Arthur, Gilbert of Toronto, Mrs. Andy Devine, Mrs. Ross Cronkwright, Mrs. Bert Jones, all of Picton.

Maurice Callaghan Lands 39-Pounder In Muscote Bay

Maurice Callaghan, not to be outdone by record catches of 'lunge in the district, hied himself to Muscote Bay on Wednesday afternoon and soon had a 39-pounder which measured 42 inches in length in the boat. Mr. Callaghan, who does not go in for fishing on large scale because of a heavy pressure of business, got pretty tired of hearing about all the big catches being made in and around the city and decided to go to his favorite fishing grounds that he knows perfectly. He set out a troll of a Williams' spoon and going by a weed bed, the location of which he will not divulge, the strike was made. The big fellow put up quite a scrap, in fact it is said, the 'lunge was nearly lost on two occasions but finally was brought to gaff and safely landed. It was a beautiful fish and well nurtured, showing that Muscote Bay is still the prime fishing grounds for 'lunge.

CANADA TO HAVE

(There has been speculation that Canada's post-war navy force will consist of 10,000 men and about 20 ships, compared with a pre-war force of 2,000 men and five ships).

The pre-war airforce strength was about 4,000 with an auxiliary of 1,000 men and no reserves.

The post-war force of 15,000 to 20,000 men would form some 10 squadrons — four bombers, three transport, two fighter and one reconnaissance.

Gen. Pearkes and Col. Merritt said the matter of Canada's post-war defence could not be discussed intelligently until the Commons was presented with an over-all plan for the peacetime navy, army and airforce.

Inter-Related is Claim

Retired Officer Commanding Pacific Command, Gen. Pearkes said Canada's forces were all inter-related and the size of any one of the force would depend on the size of the other two.

He felt more details of post-war plans should be disclosed and there should be reasons given why expenditures for the department were not more drastically reduced. Discharges totalled some 54,000 officers and men and still there was not a corresponding decrease in the payroll.

John Bracken, Progressive Conservative leader, said the opposition wanted to help the Air Minister and he suggested that actual figures on expenditures for the first five months of the fiscal year be given. Col. Gibson said he would do that.

Not Much Reduced

Lt.-Col. Alan Cockeram (PC — York South) said that average monthly outlays for the last seven months of the fiscal year, for which money now is being voted, were not much reduced from the average for the first five months covered by funds voted last Mar. He questioned high outlays for gasoline when training flying had been largely reduced.

Col. Gibson said average monthly outlay meant little since amounts contracted for showed in expenditures months later. The fact was there had been a sharp reduction in expenditures.

The gasoline item was due entirely to a change in the method of payment. During the operations of the Air Training Plan Britain was under contract to supply the gasoline and obtained it from the United States on lease-lend. Since then that arrangement had been discontinued and Canada had paid for all gasoline.

Col. Merritt called for more detailed information about the peacetime force.

Hitler Not First Man Who Is Rumored to Have Lived

Speculation as to the possibility of Hitler being alive continues—and likely will continue. Montague Summers, writing in Everybody's Magazine, London, England, writes of other instances where world figures were reported to have lived. Mr. Summer's article follows:

Is Adolf Hitler actually dead? Or can it be that the arch-criminal has escaped by some trick of infernal cunning, and is he hidden in a remote lair under some quite simple yet almost impenetrable disguise?

The beast's claws are clipped close, his teeth are drawn. But did Hitler perish—whether by his own hand or by another's it boots not—in the welter of the crashing Berlin? Probably there will be some, romantically inclined, who can never be persuaded that he is not lurking somewhere in the world, dragging out a life of terror and mistrust, of cankered remorse, of hate, of frustrated fury.

Such a thing would be no new phenomenon in history, When some huge human energy, through a delirium of fanatical wickedness, has ruthlessly assailed civilization, when some mightly monster has sowed blood and rapine and slaughter and universal woe, and on God's own time the good prevails, as good always must, it is difficult for many to realize that darkness has given place to day, that the foul thing is at last destroyed.

Throughout the spring and early summer of the year A.D. 66 the city of Rome was in a state of feverish unrest. Men's nerves were keenly on edge, and all sorts of rumors were flying.

There were reports that the procine of Gaul had raised the standard of revolt. Spain was said to be seething with discontent. Serious news arrived by post, only to be contradicted by the next. There was a jumpy atmosphere on the bourse and in the markets.

Curiously enough, the only person who seemed a little affected was the one person who should have been most affected, Emperor Nero himself. Perfectly carefree and nonchalant, in spite of the fact that the exchequer was well nigh drained, he went on giving sumptuous state banquets, at which he sang to his friends comic ballads he had made on the rebels and the general situation. He did not observe that while he carolled and chanted they were watching him with gloomy, sullen faces.

One night when the applause, as he ended a particularly piquant song, was faint and half-hearted, he looked around with a fat smile of intense self-satisfaction. "Yes, yes, you are jealous of my voice", he said, and after a pause added, "As, indeed, you may very well be".

One morning he called an urgent council of the most important senators. They hurried to the palace. "I want you all to see a new hydraulic organ which just suits my pitch," was his greeting. "I am quite excited about it. Here it is".

Then the blow fell. As he sat at dinner on the evening of the eighth of June dispatches were delivered to him announcing that a new emperor had been proclaimed.

Shaking in every limb, he rushed from the table to his bedchamber. His only thought now was of escape. It took some time to arrange any sort of plan, and debating, considering and questioning, he wandered to and fro. He heard the tramp of soldiers. Someone had given the palace guards orders to report themselves at barracks. He ran back to the room where he had been sleeping only to find it empty and deserted. The servants had decamped, carrying off everything they could lay their hands on—clothes, jewelry, boxes, furniture, valuables, everything. The place was stripped.

The collapse was complete. Muffled up in an old cloak, overlooked at the bottom of a wardrobe or not with taking away, and holding a handkerchief to his face, Nero, with three of his friends and one slave, too frightened or too stupid to flee before mounted on horses and rode off to a little village some distance beyond the city walls.

hTe street blazed with torchlight. They heard the clash of arms and voices yelling "Destruction to the tyrant". Stealing into the house through the back door, the imperial fugitive found himself in a small room with a mud floor. There he lay down on a bare mattress covered with a dirty blanket.

"You must die", said one of his companions. "Come, be brave. Slay ourself before they catch you.

"Alas! Alas!" he moaned. "What an artist! What a great artist the world is losing!" These words he repeated again and again. It was near sunrise. He took up a dagger and felt the sharp point with his thumb. He placed it to his heart, and withdrew it quickly. The noise of horses galloping was heard.

"They come to take you", cried one of his friends. In a paroxysm of fear, he put the point of the dagger to his heart and moved it slowly toward his throat when the man who had spoken last gave the weapon a sudden jerk with his hand. The emperor fell back dead just as an officer burst into the room.

Of Nero's suicide in his last extremity there can be little doubt. The new emperor had not yet reached Rome, but his chief local supporter and representative, who at this crisis took charge of affairs, ordered that the late Caesar should receive honorable burial.

Two old women who had formerly been his nurses were allowed to go and decently prepare the body for the last rites. They were joined by a third, the lovely Acte, whom Nero had once loved and who only a few years before had been converted to Christianity by St. Paul. As the ancient custom was, the corpse was cremated, but before the funeral pyre had been set alight, it was viewed and recognized by several court officials.

This precaution was taken so that there should be no hearsay, no questions asked. The ashes were placed in a porphyry urn, and buried in the family grave on the Pincio, the hill close to the Piazza del Popolo today.

Now the strange part of the story begins. In less than six months Rome was thrilled into excitement. It was rumored that Nero was not dead. In fact, he was at the moment living in Greece. His two nurses and the lady Acte finding that the wound which he had given himself was not mortal, had dressed it and tended him, and finally smuggled him away. But, in the face of that had not his dead body been recognized and his death formally attested by persons who could hardly be mistaken?

No; he was unconscious, and it is easy to take a deep swoon for death. What of the officer who had rushed into the room and seen him breathe his last? Ah, in some mysterious way this officer had disappeared, and could never be found. It was further remarked that the corpse carried out to be cremated was covered with rich white, gold fringed pall. Of course, some other body had been substituted. In a few weeks' time half Rome firmly believed that Nero was living in Greece in strictest retirement with Acte.

The whole question is, it must be acknowledged, perplexing, and at this date can never perhaps be definitely decided. Did Nero die in that lonely villa at daybreak on June 9, A.D. 68?

Some recent historians are emphatically of the opinion that he recovered and escaped. One writer has gone so far as to argue that the author of "The Book of Revelation", St. John, knew Nero to be alive, and even refers to his survival, "The Book of Revelation" was composed 28 years after Nero's suicide

A not dissimilar mystery surrounds the death of one of the English monarchs. After his deposition in 1327, Edward II was cast into prison, and during several months hurried from one dungeon to another while Queen Isabella—"she wolf of France"—and her vile paramour, Roger Mortimer, ground England to the dust under their tyranny. Finally, the wretched king was taken to Berkely castle, and at midnight on September 21 roully murdered.

With indecent haste and without inquiry his body was buried in St. Peter's abbey (now the cathedral), Gloucester. Immediately it began to be whispered that Edward was not dead, but had escaped.

What is yet more extraordinary is that several years later Bishop Fieschi of the papal court of Avignon wrote a letter, which is still preserved, in which he stated that a humble hermit, who had recently died in the reputation of great sanctity at an obscure monastery near Pavia in the north of Italy, was none other than Edward II, who escaping from England had crossed to the continent in a small boat from Sandwich. After various wanderings in Flanders and France, the royal fugitive made his way to Avignon, where he was received and recognized by Pope John XXVI. Now the family of Bishop Fieschi owned large estates in that very neighborhood near Pavia where the deceased hermit had led a life of penitence and prayer, and he was certainly in a position to have known the facts.

Waking Up Sleeping Grass Seed

(By John Bird in Saturday Evening Post.)

When a group of grown men—scientists, at that—spend time and taxpayers' money trying to wake up a sleeping seed, it sounds like boondoggling, but it was just such an effort that solved an Army problem and gave our Great Plains farmers a new weapon for their eternal war against soil erosion.

The stubbornly somnolent seed was that of Buchloe dactyloides, better known as buffalo grass. It had long been known that this tough, tawny grass was an unexcelled erosion fighter, that its close-woven sod could tie down the soil where many other plants couldn't even survive. Sometimes it seemed to die out during the great droughts, but always it came creeping back to blanket the land. The only drawback was that it was tediously slow, spreading normally by its root system. Its seed, apparently, seldom if ever germinated.

Then came the terrible drought of 1934-36. In the huge, burnt-black areas, ogronomists examined the root systems and regretfully pronounced them dead. But finally the rains came, and a few green spikelets poked through the charred sod. And each year there were more. The supposed worthless seed had started growing.

Well, then, thought plant men, why not simply harvest the seed and plant it? They developed harvesting machines—and just in time, because we were getting ready for war, and the Army urgently needed a hardy grass to hold down sand and dust around airfields being built in dry climates.

And then the blow fell; the planted seed wouldn't co-operate. Only a very little would come up the first season, a little more the next, and so on. Here was the secret of buffalo grass' ability to reincarnate itself after apparently dying out; the seed, it appeared, could sleep soundly for years, so that there was always some left to carry on, no matter what happened to the roots. But that was no help to the Army.

At this point, Leon E. Wenger, grass specialist of the Department of Agriculture, stationed at the Fort Hays Experiment Station, Hays, Kansas, reasoned as follows: evidently several seasons of hot and cold weather, plus some weathering action in the ground, served as the seed's alarm clock. Could the alarm be made to go off sooner? He took some seed and chilled it, to give the effect of winter, soaked it in acid (that was exposure in the ground) heated it up (that was summer) and washed and dried it just on general principles.

A Telegrapher's Mind

By H. M. M.
(In Windsor Star)

Almost everyone seems to have heard that the old-time railway telegrapher could sleep through the night beside his clacking key, awakening instantly when his own call was heard. Many have doubtless believed this to be a diverting little fable, but it is true. As a matter of fact, the knights of the wire wonder why people get so excited in telling it. They take it as a matter of course.

To the layman, some of the feats of telegraph operators are almost incredible. It is difficult to understand the high point to which the training of the ear can be carried. Telegraphers, after years of experience, actually get to the stage where the reading of the dots and dashes is entirely automatic. It is not necessary for them to give a conscious thought to their work of copying message, says a writer in Windsor Star.

Cease to Wonder

Newspapermen, coming in direct contact with operators, are accustomed to this. They have ceased to wonder. They come to take it as a matter of course that they can, without hesitation, approach an operator at work and engage him in conversation. He will talk away on any subject, and never miss a word that his flying fingers are copying on a typewriter. That is because he can devote his mind to the conversation and let his subconscious reflexes look after the clatter that, to the ordinary persons, seems meaningless and unintelligible.

We have heard of at least one operator, who, even among his fellows, was looked on as something special. He was often left alone in charge of a commercial office, having to copy messages and attend to the wants of the public over the counter. It was not a busy place, but a customer did come in occasionally. When this happened, the operator would get up from his place, leaving his instrument clicking, wait on the customer efficiently, then go back to his key and catch up on all that had come over the wire in the interval. His mind would automatically register the messages and retain them, while he was at the counter.

Amazing Detachment

Perhaps the most amazing story of this remarkable detachment, however, has to do with a man who was employed as an operator in a Western Canadian city. The story, by the way, is vouched for by the best authority. While copying messages one day, the clerk at the counter delivered a wire addressed to him. It told of the death of the operator's father in another city. He himself had copied the message as it came over the wire a few minutes before, and it had made not the slightest impression on his consciousness.

No Lack of News

During the war newspapers had little trouble making their pages interesting to their readers. Day by day events passed in review — defeats and victories, the long-drawn-out campaigns on the various war fronts, the agonies of apprehension of the first few years when it seemed as if the might of the enemy could never be stopped —all these phases of war were eagerly followed by the public because we all had such a tremendous stake in the final results.

Now this has been changed and people sometimes remark that it must be a lot more difficult getting out a paper now. In a way that is true because the change of pace, as it were, makes the selection of news stories a matter of greater study. This is exemplified when one glances over a number of papers printed the same day and observes the great variety of news stories selected for the leading stories for the day. Prominence in many cases is given to news of local happenings which, during the war, were more likely to appear on inside pages. In comparison to this a few months ago, editorial room staffs would often select a story which would be featured by most of the papers as if by common consent.

The situation is different now. Our soldiers are home or arriving back almost daily, and peace not war occupies our thoughts. War is now history and more interesting because we lived it and it became almost a part of our lives. And so editors and readers judge news by the standards of peace and not war.

We are becoming more interested in political news, the happenings in our own city and other communities and we share interest in these matters with what is happening over the world. The problems facing the occupation authorities in Japan and Germany, the trial of those who were in charge of the Belsen horror camp, the possibilities of the atomic bomb — all these and many more — hold our interest surprisingly well considering the exciting news of the past six years.

As a matter of fact it is good to get away from news of war for war represents waste, suffering, destruction and death while present-day news is more constructive and less harrowing. The problems of peace and re-establishment are uppermost in our minds now and it is only natural that we follow these developments with interest because their success or failure affect our welfare to a greater or lesser degree, depending on our circumstances.

Important changes are in the making throughout the world and the newspapers will have a great story to tell as they develop. There will be no dearth of interesting news and Canadians will continue to be proud of their country for Canada is assuming a greater place in the family of nations. As a consequence news of our country will loom larger than ever before in the news columns of the newspapers of the world. The problem is not going to be what will we do for news but lack of space for what we would like to put in.

Patton Not Tough Enough

General Patton seems to have a penchant for getting himself in the lime-light and incidentally into trouble. During the Italian Campaign he was removed from his command and received a severe reprimand for slapping a soldier's face while in a fit of temper while this week he was shifted from command of the famous U. S. Third Army, which he led in a spectacular drive across France into Germany, to head another army group which exists largely on paper. The last demotion arose from his too free and easy method of putting into effect the policies of General Eisenhower in one of the American zones of occupation.

His unfortunate statement that ninety-eight per cent of the German people were forced against their will to become Nazis did him no good. That being his opinion then it might be deduced that Gen. Eisenhower felt Patton would not be as tough in his handling of the Germans as was called for.

Of course it is difficult at this distance to pronounce judgment on what should or should not have been done but we feel that Eisenhower faced no easy task in removing a man who was a personal friend and whose military talents he held in high regard. However, he has an extremely difficult task ahead of him and there must be no compromise with the policies he has set up. The Germans need to be ruled with a heavy hand for a long time or else we will be confronted in a few years with a truculent nation which evolved from a defeated Germany after the last war.

Tipping

Tipping was once the aristocrat's way of showing his lordly pleasure with his humble servant. Nowadays it's a big business running into the millions, Robert Froman writes in Pageant.

Waiters and waitresses, for instance, share a $200,000,000 national tip each year, depend on tips for the largest part of their income. In New York, their average salary is $15-$18 a week. Tips boost this to $35-$55. Night club waiters, whose customers are in a free-spending mood, often take in as much as $70 a week in tips.

Doormen at hotels, night clubs and apartment houses also come in for a share of the millions Americans spend on tips each year, and so do bartenders in the higher priced bars. A bartender at the Stork Club in New York tells of the customer who paid a $10 check with a $100 bill and told him to keep the change.

Grindstones

(New York Times)

There are few chores on the farm more discouraging to a 12-year-old than turning the old grindstone that sits on its rickety box-bolstered frame behind the barn. The fact that a lad can sit down while he turns the crank round and round, has no appreciable bearing on the subject. Turning the grindstone is just plain work, monotonous, wearying, and very, very long in getting done.

There are moments of respite. Father lifts the scythe or the bar from the stone and unhurriedly proceeds to test the cutting edge with a calloused thumb. Then a lad faces a predicament: shall he exert just enough strength to keep the stone going round and round? Or shall he let it run down and stop? In the latter case it means considerable energy to get up momentum again. It's difficult decisions of this type that make life a problem for a lad.

Round and round goes the stone. Sometimes Father bears down hard to take a nick from the steel; then a fellow sets his teeth and gives it every ounce of muscle he has. Sometimes, the touch is light as the metal approaches its cutting edge. There's something a bit humorous in turning the grindstone — humorous to everyone except the boy who has to turn the crank. Some day, when all farms are electrified, a motor will replace boy power. Twelve-year-olds, so far polled to date, are unanimously in favor of rural electrification.

Shaw is Wrong Again

(Ottawa Journal)

John Bright used to say that he never felt sure that he was right until The London Times said he was wrong. Mr. Bernard Shaw having come out to say that American occupation of Japan is wrong, the advocates of occupation must now be sure they are right. Mr. Shaw's batting average in being wrong about nearly every conceivable subject under the sun must be nearly 100 percent.

Mr. Shaw is undoubtedly the world's greatest living dramatist, a master of English, a great wit. The pity is that he should go on blurring his fame as a thinker and philosopher, and as a useful citizen of the world, by prating unceasingly the most incredible nonsense. Mr. Shaw's admirers, taking the charitable view of his transgressions, insist that he talks mostly with his tongue in his cheek. But if a man of Mr. Shaw's nature insists on talking mostly with his tongue in his cheek, what good is he serving?

Post-War Break For Newspaper Reporters

(Port Arthur News-Chronicle)

The much-abused newspaper reporter is getting a post-war break. The science of electronics has provided him with a perfect defence against the person who says "I was misquoted — I didn't say that."

A pocket model wire recorder now reported available to civilian users will take down, with absolute accuracy, it is claimed, anything any speaker or interviewer says. After the speech or interview is over the reporter can play it back in his own office with accuracy guaranteed. The pocket model runs for 66 minutes.

If after a reasonable period following publication the speaker or interviewer has not complained that he was misquoted the wire is simply demagnetized, and used again. If there are any complaints —the complainant is simply invited to come into the office and listen to his own voice and his own words.

It's going to be tough on politicians but awfully nice for the reporters.

War on Enemy Pigeons

By MACDONALD HASTINGS

In London Calling.

Here is a story concerning the most bizarre squadron in the Allied air forces in the European war; so bizarre that, until V-E Day, its existence had to be a close secret. It was called officially the No. 2 Interception Unit. And the other day, in a tiny cottage which is the unit's headquarters, I was allowed to peep into the hangars and see inside.

Fifteen penetrating pairs of orange eyes glared back at me. Outlined against the whitewashed walls fifteen menacing shapes huddled on a long perch. Above them flew an ensign on a blue ground, the flag of the Royal Air Force. The No. 2 Interception Unit was a team of hawks, peregrine falons. And their war duty was to intercept pigeons suspected of carrying information to the enemy.

For three years, these falcons had been keeping patrol on the English coast. For three years they had been flying in secrecy for the Allies. And here, from the heart of the English countryside, from the headquarters of the Falcon (No. 2) Interception Unit, I met one of the two men who flew the hawks in what, surely, was the strangest battle of this war. His name is Bob Bromley. Young, handsome, tough as nails, eyes like a hawk himself, and as weathered as the shell of a walnut.

• • •

He told me that he and his partner in this job, Ronald Stevens, had been living like hawks these past three years. They had had their eyrie in the wildest parts of the coast. They had been virtually living like the birds on what they could kill for food, and had scarcely seen a living soul. The essence of the job was secrecy. If the Germans had got wise to it, the game would have been up.

"It was exciting, all right," said Bromley, "but the worst of it was that all our friends used to wonder what we were up to — some of them, I think, thought were were scrimshanking. You see, Stevens and I were both in the army to begin with, but when we were transferred to do this job, we were taken out of uniform, because that would have given the whole show away, and we had to behave as if we were civilians."

I asked him how this idea of using falcons started, and he replied: "You can scarcely call it an idea. Falcons were used to intercept pigeon messages at least as long ago as the siege of Jerusalem during the Crusades. The point was it was known by our Intelligence people that the Germans had a very efficient pigeon service; further, that unidentified birds were passing backwards and forwards over the English coast. It was essential to stop them, and the natural counter was the falcon — the pigeon's natural enemy.

"I suppose we were picked for the job because nobody else knew anything about falconry. It just happened that we were a couple of lunatics who had studied and practised the old sport or hawking as a hobby before the war. And we were asked to take on the job.

"First, we had to find our hawks. We caught wild falcons (passage hawks as they are called, took eyeasses — they are young birds—from the eyries on the cliffs. Dangling on a rope over a cliff was a bit tough on the nerves, but it had to be done. Then we trained the birds, and finally, we made such progress with practice, that we were able to put hawks in the air an hour at a time. If they got out, of course, we whistled them. When the patrol was over, we brought the birds down and put a new hawk up.

• • •

"We knew pretty well if a bird was suspect from Air Ministry reports. And, anyhow, any pigeon coming in or going out to sea from this island was obviously suspicious. We stopped plenty of suspicious birds with strange markings and odd messages.

"But we never asked questions and we never got any answers. Our job was to stop the pigeons and send anything we found on them (and the dead birds themselves) post-haste to the Air Ministry. And, frankly, after that we preferred to know nothing. Anyhow, you would not expect an espionage message to begin, 'Dear Hitler', but now that it is all over, we do know that German marked birds were accounted for."

Guam

When, in 1938, a special navy board headed by Admiral Arthur J. Hepburn suggested that Guam could be made into a major naval base at a cost of $150,000,000 or $200,000,000, nobody from the President down seemed interested. A bill calling for $5,000,000 in harbor improvements at Apra was turned down by the House when the Japanese began to bluster and there was no indication from the other end of Pennsylvania avenue of any disposition to support the measure, says The New York Sun. So when, just after Pearl Harbor, the Japanese arrived from nearby Saipan they found Guam a sleepy island of value principally as a stopping place for trans-Pacific airliners and as a beautiful honeymoon post for young naval officers. Its 22,000 natives existed comfortably on the fruits of the land—rice, bananas, pineapples, tobacco, coffee and, especially copra and cocoanut oil—and what money navy and airline pay rolls put into circulation.

Then on July 21, 1944, the navy came back. This time it brought overwhelming force and took the island after three weeks of intensive fighting. But before this shooting died down the Seabees were at work on what some engineers have called the greatest construction project of the war. Working night and day, they cut air strips out of the jungle, built miles of roads, constructed a huge breakwater, dredged the harbor and created repair bases and supply dumps. In less than a year after its recapture it was equipped as the base for Admiral Nimitz, and it was from there that CINCPAC (Commander in Chief, Pacific Fleet) functioned. Soon Admiral Nimitz is returning to Pearl Harbor, because from there he can more effectively speed released navy men homeward. Already the big moving job involved in shifting headquarters is in progress. Meanwhile, although details of construction and the cost thereof still are considered war secrets, it is probable that much more than the amount originally envisaged by Admiral Hepburn has been spent. Certainly Guam never will be the same as it was in December, 1941.

TEETH TO GAMBLE WITH

She cannot seem to get help from any doctor for paralyzed eyelids or droopy lids. One lid is completely down and the other halfway down. The focus is wrong but the eyesight is O.K. Twenty-six of her teeth were sound but were removed to see if it would help. It didn't help a bit

(K.H.G.)

Drooping eyelid (doctors call it ptosis) usually affects both upper lids, though one lid may droop more than the other.

If the condition is congenital (present at birth) the lids of both eyes droop and only operation which connects the lids with the muscles that elevate the brows will correct the trouble. In some cases of ptosis of only one lid the condition may be from paralysis and with medical treatment it may be remedied in the course of a few months. In any case if the lid droops enough to partially cover the pupils, so that the individual has to throw back the head to get clear vision or to see out from under the drooping lid, some sort of operation should be done.

This operation may be done under local anesthesia, painlessly. It involves no risk to the eyes or eyesight.

The correspondent states that "twenty-six of her teeth were sound but were removed to see if it would help. It didn't help a bit."

By way of compensation for that atrocity thirteen teeth of the dentist and thrirteen teeth of the doctor who conspired to perpetrate that crime should be removed to see if it would help, that is, if two such preposterous mountebanks can muster that many teeth between them.

This shocking malpractice, whether committed by the doctor or by the dentist or by both in collusion, calls for a drastic remedy. A lawsuit for damages in a reasonable sum—never less than $1000 per tooth—seems indicated. If my teeth were involved you betcha there would be such a suit.

Mind, now, I do not believe or imply that extraction of one or, rarely, more than one tooth, may not be the best treatment for this or that condition which, in the judgment of a physician and a dentist, is due to focal infection. I do believe and say that it is never justifiable to remove such a tooth or teeth in the circumstance unless the doctor and dentist have first considered the question in consultation and agreed upon the sacrifice of the tooth or teeth.

I wish people would not tell me these things. I shudder every time that statement recurs to mind: "Twenty-six of her teeth were sound but were removed to see if it would help." It seems painfully evident that something is rotten in the state of Medicine.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Lead Arsenate

May I have the instructions printed some time ago for removing lead arsenate residues from vegetables, leaves, fruit etc.

(Mrs. M. A. F.)

Answer—Ordinary washing will not remove all of the dried residues of such spray from greens, fruits and above ground vegetables. After ordinary washing, rinse or stand for a few minutes in 1 percent hydrochloric acid solution in water, then rinse the acid away with clear running water. To prepare 1 percent hydrochloric solution mix a pint of medicinal Dilute Hydrochloric Acid (USP, BP) which is 10 percent strength, with nine pints of plain water.

Bellyache and Nausea

What effect would mild poisoning from spray residue on lettuce, celery and other things eaten raw or in salads have if one got an overdose? (R.W.)

Answer—Suspicious enough to warrant excluding such items from the diet for a week are vague bellyache with nausea, with or without diarrhea.

Foods Leaving Acid Ash

Please give a list of foods that leave acid ash in the system.

(R. J. W.)

Answer—Egg, meat, fish, white bread are the main foods in the list. Send twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope for the red book—What to Eat and Why. It contains lists of acid-ash alkali-ash, neutral ash foods.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What birds cannot walk or hop?

Humming birds, swifts, swallows and martins cannot walk or hop on a horizontal surface with any degree of ease.

Of these the humming birds are the most helpless on the ground.

Swifts, swallows and martins have feet that are adapted only to perching and to clinging to perpendicular surfaces.

These birds spend much time on the wing and are truly creatures of the air.

It has been suggested that some swifts spend the entire night in flight at great heights.

They are so perfectly streamlined that even their nostrils point backward.

Swifts are peculiar among birds in that they flap their wings alternately rather than simultaneously.

Most swallows and swifts seldom alight on the ground and they capture insects for food, scoop up water from ponds and lakes for drink, and pluck twigs and gather other materials for their nests, all while on the wing.

When some species of swifts are placed on a smooth surface they make a very clumsy take-off.

Some naturalists assert that both the chimney and the white-throated swift pair while in flight although other authorities question this assertion and doubt that any species of bird actually mates in mid-air.

The feet of the albatross, the largest of sea birds, are also weak and are poorly adapted to walking and they are almost helpless on a smooth surface.

JEWISH REFUGEE PROBLEM TROUBLES ALLIES

One of the biggest problems facing the Allied governments today is the problem of finding homes for displaced Jews in Europe. An army of them have landed in Palestine, according to report, and are demanding that the British allow them to settle there. Complaints seep out from Germany that the Jews are not receiving fair treatment in American-occupied Germany. The picture above would seem to deny the latter report. Here Jewish displaced women are shown in their quarters at the Feloafing camp, Bavaria, before they were removed to German homes from which the occupants had been evicted by U. S. military authorities.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Emotional Storms Wreck Good-Looks.

What goes on in the mind is mirrored in the face. Don't forget that, my friend. No woman can afford to indulge in hatred. Hatred doesn't hurt the other fellow; he doesn't know anything about it. It is a terrible boomerang that comes right back home raises plenty of trouble. If you indulge in moments of hate you can make yourself downright ill. Every doctor has attended cases of that kind, found them hopeless until there was restoration to mental health.

A women doesn't have to be very smart to realize that she shouldn't fly into tantrums. Experience has taught her the ill effects of emotional indulgences. She read her lesson in the looking glass. The temple of beauty is not built alone on physical health; mental well-being is incorporated in the foundation of pulchritude.

Anger sets up a quickening of the pulse, the heart thumping and beating against the ribs. When anyone says: "I was so mad I saw red", he isn't far from the truth; anger has a depressing effect upon vision. Unpleasant emotions will cause the mouth to dry, the skin to become moist and cold. The digestive organs sometimes can't function normally when such disturbances are present, so appetite goes on a strike.

The human face is subject to change.

Fear is a horrible snorting dragon that robs a lovely woman of youthful bloom, makes her look old and wan. Worry is fear, fear that something will happen that may not happen at all. We cannot avoid anxiety, but worry can be side-stepped. Jealousy is fear, fear of losing a loved one. Selfishness is fear, fear that one won't always get the most and the best of everything. Any self respecting woman should be ashamed of these emotions. If she has them she will pay a heavy penalty in loss of health, happiness, and good appearance.

Unpleasant emotions interfere with restful sleep, which is necessary if one is to carry on courageously. Memories of quarrels will keep one awake. Regrets for sharp words uttered make one restless and miserable. The pangs of a guilty conscience are hard to endure.

The human face is subject to change. It is ever in the making or the unmaking. Your state of mind can create radiance or clouds. Its lights and shadows are reflected in the eyes, the expression of the mouth, even the pose of the body.

Courage, faith and confidence are the enemies of unpleasant emotions. When a woman has these attributes she is the captain of her life. Her carriage is erect, her eyes clear and bright, her step brisk. She has mental poise. She carries on like a good soldier. She is a woman unafraid and she is the salt of the earth.

Aims of Ontario Educational Assoc. Outlined

Last evening the convention of the South Hastings Educational Association opened in the auditorium of the Belleville Collegiate Institute. The opening address was given by Mr. Allan, B.S.A., president of the Association, who extended a welcome to the members and visitors and briefly outlined the activities of the Association during the past year. M. A. Campbell Guest Speaker

Mr. Macklem, inspector for public schools, was called upon to introduce the guest speaker, Mr. M. A. Campbell, of Toronto. Among other positions, Mr. Campbell holds that of secretary of The Ontario Trustees' and Ratepayers' Association and editor of the Canadian School Journal. He is a former president of the Ontario Educational Association.

Mr. Campbell briefly outlined the aims of the latter association: first, to co-operate with the Department of Education in the development of youth second, to elevate the character and advance the efficiency of the teaching profession. He emphasized the importance of teaching pupils the actual meanings of words. The speaker stated, "The function of the school is to educate young people to be good citizens in a Christian democracy". He then went on to analyze the actual words of his statement to give his listeners a clear understanding of it.

Good Citizenship Stressed

Mr. Campbell stated that at a meeting in Kirkland Lake that he had attended, several good points were brought out: first, that the teaching of citizenship and of the value of the government should be stressed, and second, that the standards of political life should be elevated since pupils should be taught to take an interest in it.

The speaker next outlined the duties of a trustee. The most important of these is to provide the services offered by the Department of Education, for example, libraries, radios, films, and transportation. He said that some of these services were not used as they should be. Another duty of the trustee is to choose the teachers and to provide the teacher with the facilities with which to work. The board of trustees must co-operate with the teacher, and with other organizations in the school and community, such as the Home and School Club.

Co-operation Important

The chief duty of the ratepayer, Mr. Campbell stated, was to select the trustees. Again he emphasized the importance of co-operation between teacher and trustees, between teacher and ratepayer and home and between trustees and ratepayer.

In closing, Mr. Campbell paid tribute to Dr. Althouse, chief director of Education for Ontario. A vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Fred Wilson. Following this, a solo was sung by Miss Margaret Atkinson.

An informal panel discussion followed, the subject for discussion being 'How Our Elementary Schools May Better Serve Rural Life".

Little Benny's Note Book

I came in to see if dinner was ready and to get washed for it if I had to, and pop said, Look here, young man, I make it a point never to stick my nose where it has no business, but I'm the man who has to pay for your clothes, so when I see you going around with your pockits stuffed out with a lot of weighty and probably useless junk, I think I have a legitimate intrist in inquiring into the matter. Now for instance what's that vicious looking bulge in your back pockit? he said.

Sir? That? That's a door nob, I said, and pop said, Of course, something as destructive as it is unnecessery.

Well aw jimmony, pop, what's unnecessery about a door nob? I said, and pop said, Nothing at all when it's on a door, or perhaps even a carpeter's pockit, but in a boy's pockit it's totally unnecessery.

No sir, pop, I can tell you lots of ways it's necessary, I said. Suppose some smart guy bet me a cent I didn't have a door nob in my pockit. If I didn't have one I'd lose a cintchy chance to make a cent. Or suppose somebody suddenly needed a paper weight on account of their important papers starting to blow away. This door nob would be a perfect paper weight, and you might be the very one the important papers were blowing away from. That's 2 ways right there, pop, and I can tell you more, I said.

Never mind the others, I'm afraid they'd be just as reasonable pop said. And I dont even want to know what other objects you're staggering around with. I'd rather keep their identity a mystery than listen to the explination of their usefulness in your ultra-mysterious scheme of things, he said.

The result being I didn't show him what else was in my pockits, such as the top of a hammer and the bottom of a ice pick.

Hank Greenberg's Bat Makes Detroit Favorite as Tigers And Cubs Meet in Third Game

Virgil Trucks Fires Seven-Hitter and Greenberg Parks One in Bleachers for 4-1 Win

By SID FEDER

Detroit, Oct. 5 — (AP) — The big "clutch" game — the crucial third tussle — comes up in the World Series today, and the National Leaguers are wondering if there isn't some way they can get Hank Greenberg out of town.

Lanky Hank is "money in the bank" up there any time, as one veteran National Leaguer put it yesterday when Greenberg's 3-run homer in the fifth inning gave the Tigers a 4-1 victory over the Cubs in the second scuffle and tied the series at one game apiece.

To many of the older hands in the industry, this third game is a "must" win in the series whenever the two teams split the first two games. It is extra special stuff for the Tigers today, because it will not only put the Bengals one down if they blow it, but would leave them in a spot where they'd have to win three out of four games in the enemy's backyard.

Manager Steve O'Neill, still believing southpaw hurling can stop the Chicago shotmakers in spite of what happened to Hal Newhouser in the opener, is relying on the squat stubby Overmire, an erratic little twirler who wound up the season with a nine-and-nine won-lost record. Against him there'll be the Cubs' Claude Passeau, who won 17 and lost nine this year.

Hank the Big Number

Hank's been the big number ever since he came back from the United States Army last July. He put the Bengals into the World Series with a homer last Sunday. He kept them in it with another yesterday, just when Wednesday's 9-0 defeat and a 1-0 lead the Cubs grabbed in the fourth inning of the second game made it begin to look as if Detroit was just in the Fall frolics on a rain check.

Furthermore, yesterday's game probably was saved when Hank heaved a "strike" from left field to the plate in the first inning to cut off a run that might have touched off a Cub scoring explosion such as Chicago unloaded in the opener.

Of course, Hank had a lot of help from Virgil Trucks' zip-ball, even though he tired in the 8th.

The only run off the 28-year-old pitcher who's fresh out of the Navy came in the fourth inning on Phil Cavarretta's double and Bill Nicholson's single. This tally wouldn't have scored if Tiger outfielders Doc Cramer and Roy Cullenbine hadn't decided to hold a debate about who was going to field Phil's whack, enabling him to reach second.

But without taking a thing away from Trucks, Greenberg and that 375-foot clutch clout of his in the fifth frame, when the Tigers turned in all their runs to wreck a great pitching performance by Hank Wyse, put the game on ice.

DON PENNISTON DEVELOPER OF HOCKEY TALENT

New Coach of Hershey Bears Has Sent Many Players Up to Big Leagues

Hershey, Pa., Oct. 5. — Don Penniston, new coach of the Hershey Bears, has been a developer of hockey talent for almost a score of years, and among his youthful stars have been Mike McMahon, Jerry Heffernan, Kenny Mosdell, Buddy O'Connor and Jerry Haggerty of the Montreal Canadiens; Frank Eddolls, who played with the Toronto Maple Leafs, but who was sent to the Hershey Bears for seasoning; Connie Brown of the Detroit Red Wings and the Indianapolis Caps; Lynn Patrick and Joe Watson of the New York Rangers; and red-headed Pete Kelly of the Springfield Indians, who set a new American Hockey League record of 33 goals and 44 assists for 77 points in the season of 1941-42, which stood until Wally Kilrea of the Hershey Bears topped it with 31 goals and 68 assists for 99 points in the season of 1942-43.

He also trained Stew Smith of the Washington Lions, Bill MacKenzie of the Cleveland Barons and Roger Bessette of the Pittsburgh Hornets. There are on the reserve list of the National Hockey League, 40 players who have had the Penniston tutelage since they came into hockey uniform.

Penniston looks for a leveling off process early in the season, with the return of players from the armed forces, who, doubtless, will require time to reach the peak of timing, carrying the puck and reaching the goal mouth with the rubber.

"We have lost practically one whole generation of players", said Penniston today. "The Dominion of Canada was in the war for practically six years, and those players who were 19 and 20 before they were called to the service are now 25 and 26. I am thinking of the 'Kraut Line' of the Boston Bruins—Bobby Bauer, Milt Schmidt and Porky Dumart.

"Then, too, there was the line of two Colville boys and Shibicky with the New York Rangers. If and when these stars come back, it will take some time for them to get the feel of hockey. That would be true also of men in the American Hockey League, who also have been out of hockey for several years.

"Meanwhile, of course, we will have to draw upon the youngsters who have been coming up in the amateur ranks and doing right well for themselves".

Porcupine Combines Defeat Copper Cliff

Timmins, Oct. 5 — (CP)—Porcupine Combines scored two runs off three hits to defeat Copper Cliff Redmen 2-1 in the first game of their Northern Ontario Baseball championship series here last night.

Combines were trailing 1-0 as they entered their half of the 9th.

Continuing cold weather, which kept the attendance down to less than 300, led officials to decide to play the remaining games at Sudbury during the coming weekend.

NEWARK BEARS DEFEAT ROYALS IN SEVENTH GAME

Win Governors' Cup and Right to Meet Louisville Colonels in Little World Series

Montreal, Oct. 5—(CP)—Fighting a close game for six innings last night, Montreal Royals gave up three runs to Newark Bears in the seventh frame on two errors, and the Bears came through with a 5-1 victory and the Governors' Cup in the last game of a best-of-seven final International play-off series. The Bears won the series 4-3, and with it the right to meet Louisville Colonels of the American Association in the Little World Series.

Frank Hiller on the mound for Newark did a masterful job, giving up four hits and a walk. Hiller struck out four to win his second game in the series with Montreal. Losing pitcher was Jean Pierre Roy, who had already defeated the Bears twice in the series. Roy was wild throughout, walked six men and gave up 10 hits before he was removed in the ninth. John Banta was sent in as relief hurler.

Bill Steinecke carried the batting honors for Newark with three hits in four trips to the plate. All told, he knocked in three runs.

The Bears got their first run in the second inning on Steinecke's single after two walks, scoring Phil Weintraub. Royals got this one back in their half when Roland Gladu doubled and came home on Salty Parker's single.

All was well until the Bears' part of the seventh, when a single, an error by Roy, and another by Parker, loaded the bases. Roy Nichols missed a throw from Al Todd and Weintraub scored. Then Steinecke singled and Buzas and Baker ran home.

To make the game more certain, Steinecke singled and reached home on singles by Hiller and Bill Rabe.

BILL KERR STOWS AWAY GOLF TITLE

Toronto, Oct. 5. (CP)—Bill Kerr stowed away his third major links prize of the summer-fall campaign yesterday after a jittery putter cost Jules Huot of Laval-Sur-Le-Lac a chance for a grandstand finish in the 72-hole Canadian Professional Golfers' Association tournament at suburban Cedar Brae

Kerr held an 11-stroke lead over Huot entering the final 18 holes of the $1,000 tourney, carded an unimpressive 79 and watched Huot whittle his margin to one stroke at the 17th hole. Then Huot's putter started to misbehave and the Quebec invader finished three strokes behind.

His 71 for the final 18 gave him a 72-hole total of 291 compared with 288 for Kerr, the professional who won the Millar Trophy early this summer and later took the P.G.A. open at Montreal Islesmere.

Kerr picked up the Ross trophy and $300 prize money in winning the title taken last year by Gord Brydson of Toronto Mississauga.

Stan Horne of Islesmere was third behind Kerr and Huot with 292, one stroke ahead of Jack Littler of Kingston, Ont.

LONDON MAJORS DEFEAT WELLAND

London, Ont., Oct. 5 (CP) — London Majors came from behind last night to score a 7-3 decision over Welland Atlas Steel in the opening game of the Senior O.B.A. finals, played here before 2,500 fans. A sterling relief hurling chore by Hank Biasatti highlighted the London victory. Coming into the game with Welland leading by 3-0 and the sacks filled in the fifth, Biasatti shutout the Niagara champs the rest of the way and gave up only three safe blows.

Smoky Comy started on the hill for Welland and went well until the fifth when London scored twice. He was pounced on for three straight hits in the last of the sixth,—one of them a triple by Woods and before Eddie Bush stopped the rampage, London had four runs and the ball game.

HEAVY HOLIDAY RUGBY PROGRAM CARDED IN EAST

Seven Games Will be Played and Anything Can Happen

(By The Canadian Press)

A crowded holiday weekend program involves Eastern Canada's major football leagues in a total of seven games starting Friday night and promises to muddle the standings as thoroughly as the pumpkins in mother's Thanksgiving day pie.

Four Ontario Union and three Big Four contests are scheduled, as follows:—

FRIDAY— Ottawa Trojans at Toronto Indians (O.R.F.U.)

SATURDAY—Montreal Hornets at Toronto Argonauts and Hamilton Tigers at Ottawa Rough Riders (Big Four) Toronto Balmy Beach at Windsor Rockets (O.R.F.U.);

MONDAY— Hamilton Wildcats at Balmy Beach and Windsor at Ottawa Trojans (O.R.F.U.); Hornets at Hamilton Tigers, (Big Four).

A glance at the over-all picture seems to indicate the possibility that three teams—Trojans, Hornets and Rockets—may be weeded out of their respective races on the basis of weekend results. If Trojans lose to Indians under floodlights at Maple Leaf Stadium, it would be their season's third loss and constitute a knockout blow to their hopes of gaining one of two play-off spots in the O.R.F.U.

Rockets, lacking a victory to date, will be out of the picture entirely if they fail in their tests against undefeated Balmy Beach Saturday and Trojans Thanksgiving Day.

The outlook is less doleful for Hornets but it's bad enough. Beaten by Tigers 5-0 in their seasonal debut, the Montreal entry will be underdogs in their Saturday match with Argos, who have shuffled their starting backfield for greater striking power by inserting Andy Tommy at quarter. The former Rough Rider ace, just discharged from the army, will call the signals for a backfield cast revamped to give big Doug Smylie a greater share of the ball carrying.

Even if Hornets surprise with a victory over Argos, they will be out of the frying pan into the fire in their Thanksgiving Day game against Tigers in Hamilton. Coach Brian Timmis has acquired triple threat Al Lenard and Lineman Bill Schwenger this week to add further strength to a team already packed with name players.

Results of the seven games may threaten Indians' lead in the O.R.F.U. Beaches, undefeated in two games to date, appear in fair shape to sweep their weekend doubleheader—a conclusion which would assure them at least a tie with Indians depending on Friday's results.

The Big Four race currently finds Argos, Tigers and Riders locked in a first-place tie with one victory apiece. Of the three teams Tigers have the best chance to go into the lead, because they play two games compared with one apiece for Argos and Riders.

World Series Notes

By JERRY LISKA

Detroit, Oct. 5 — (AP) — The Chicago Cub survivors of the 1935 World Series against Detroit — both batting flops of that show — are heading the hit parade in baseball's current battle royal between the same two contenders.

They are first baseman Phil Cavarretta and third sacker Stan Hack, each owning a .500 average as the Blue Ribbon competition swings into its third day.

Cavarretta, who was the real bust in 1935 with a puny .125 on three hits, all singles, in 24 trips, has started the present series with four-for-eight, including a double and a homer.

Hack went through the six games in 1935 with five hits in 22 appearances for .227. Now, he also has four-for-eight, including a 2-bagger. That's really improving with age.

The important runs-batted-in business, however, is dominated by Hank Greenberg, whose three-run homer finished the Cubs yesterday, and Bill Nicholson who has four R.B.I.s, three in Chicago's victorious opener and the only Bruin marker yesterday.

Silent Hank Borowy informed manager Charlie Grimm he would be ready for another crack at the Tigers Saturday if need be, although the ex-Yankee usually needs more than three days rest between assignments. "I'll be ready if you want me," said Borowy.

The Cubs will have a tougher time than the Tigers in accommodating the fans in the windy city phase of the series. For one thing, Chicago's Wrigley Field holds some 13,000 fewer people than Detroit's Briggs Stadium. General manager Jimmy Gallagher reports the demand for tickets was so great in Chicago that one day after the Cubs had advertised ticket applications would be accepted, 355,000 requests were received in the mail.

A large number of fans are making the trip to give the lads some moral and vocal support ... At Batawa the Thornbury nine meet the Shoemakers in their 3rd and final set-to and the third meeting between "Smoky" Smith and Jack "Lefty" Garten should be a thriller . . . There are not two better intermediate southpaws in Ontario today and the forksiders will likely hook up in a mound duel that promises to be a honey . . . Tickets are on sale at Bill Cook's . . . No mention as yet of the locale of the third game if necessary.

Trucks Never Won Game For Tigers In Regular Season

By FRANK KENESSON

Detroit, Oct. 5 — (AP)—There is something new under the sun.

Virgil Trucks, 26-year-old Detroit Tiger righthander who stopped Chicago Cubs 4-1 with his blazing fast ball, laid his claim today to a unique honor — that of capturing a World Series victory for a club he didn't win once for during the regular season.

"If such a thing ever occurred before I didn't know it," the Detroit fireballer said yesterday.

Trucks, released from the United States Navy only a week ago after 19 months in service, became eligible for the World Series under a special dispensation waiving eligibility rules for returning servicemen.

The Kibitzer

When playing with three hot-shots, you know you are in a bridge game. You are always conscious of guarding yourself against a couple of wolves. You earn every trick you take.

You must be vigilant. You must be observing. You must be mentally alert. You must be able to count. You must be able to plan. Then is when bridge is really worth playing.

In such a game, suppose you are sitting south as declarer at a three no-trump contract in this deal:

NORTH
♠7 5 4
♥A K 3
♦J 9 7 4
♣A 10 3

WEST
♠A 10 8 6 2
♥J 7
♦6 5 2
♣9 7 4

EAST
♠Q 9
♥Q 10 6 4
♦10 8 3
♣K 8 6 5

SOUTH
♠K J 3
♥9 8 5 2
♦A K Q
♣Q J 2

The opening lead from west is the spade six. With that lead, a spade trick seems assured. You see cinch tricks in the red suits. One sure and one developing trick can be seen in clubs.

With your needed nine tricks thus staring you in the face, what are you waiting for? Why not take them and call it a deal? Is there something to worry about? There is.

Suppose you win the first spade trick with jack or king. For a ninth trick, you must still finesse clubs or deliberately give up a trick in it. East may win that and return a spade.

Is that bad? Could be. If west started with an original heap of five spades, you are a gone goose. Their club trick and four in the spade suit cuts you down before you get in again.

Your best bet is to refuse the first spade trick. When east puts on the queen, drop your three on it. When east returns a spade, your jack or king forces the west ace and you still have control.

Should west then lead another spade, it is not serious. Because if east has another, west will not have five. If east does not have a third spade, you are not afraid of east any more.

With east out of spades, you can safely take the club finesse. Even if it loses, you have enough to bring in your needed nine with no fear of what east may lead back.

CHARGE DISMISSED

Goderich, Oct. 5 (CP)—Magistrate A. F. Cook yesterday dismissed for lack of evidence a charge of manslaughter against Herman L. Fisher, Colborne Township farmer. Fisher was arrested last Friday following the death in London of Basil P. (Mike) Laws, a war veteran, of injuries suffered during a fracas with Fisher outside a dance hall.

AGRICULTURE POWERHOUSE

A special feature for the N.H.L. opening game at Toronto Oct. 27 with Boston Bruins as guest artists will be the attendance of five Canadian winners of the Victoria Cross in the Second Great War, it was announced last night by the Toronto Leafs. The five heroes who have accepted invitations are Pte. Ernest (Smokey) Smith of New Westminster, Lt.-Col. Paul Triquet of Cabano, Que., Maj. J. K. Mahoney of New Westminster, Lt.-Col. C. C. I. Merritt of Vancouver and Maj. Fred Tilston of Windsor.

The club also announced that defenceman Babe Pratt had already signed his new playing contract in contrast to the delay in obtaining his signature a year ago.

Ed Furgol of Detroit and Harold McSpaden of Sanford, Me., set the first-round pace yesterday in the $10,000 open golf tournament at Tacoma, Wash., each turning in 66, or four under par. Well down in the list was Byron Nelson of Toledo at par.

In a race against time, Titan Hanover, three-year-old champion owned by E. Roland Harriman, covered the mile in two minutes flat at the Lexington, Ky., trots yesterday but failed by two seconds to equal his own world's trotting record of last year. Darnley required four heats to win the $3,897 Messenger trot.

Detroit N.H.L. Red Wings yesterday sold defenceman Gordon (Moose) Sherritt of Indianapolis Capitals to Cleveland Barons for cash. The Barons are training at the University of Michigan arena, Ann Arbor.

London, Ont., can lay claim to being the "diamond city" of Canadian baseball this season. Four London teams are in the Ontario championship finals of their respective series. A fifth nine, the bantams, also reached playoff competition but have been eliminated.

Dean Griffing, who played his football in Toronto last season, Jerry Searight, veteran snapback, have taken hold of the Calgary Bronks, late entry in the Western Football Conference in which Winnipeg and Regina also will play.

St. Catharines Athletics, Mann Cup defenders, arrived at Vancouver yesterday for their senior lacrosse championship series with the Burrards of the Terminal City. The best of five series opens tonight. The eastern party numbered 28 players and officials.

SPORT SHORTS FROM BRITAIN

By GORDON McKEAN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Oct. 3—(CP)—Flt. Lt. Len Harvey, 38, Britain's best heavyweight boxer for many years, has been demobilized from the Royal Air Force after six years service. He will rejoin his wife in managing a hotel at Erith, Kent.

Harvey won the British middle, cruiser and heavyweight championships several times. He retired from the ring a few months after losing to Freddy Mills at Tottenham in June 1942. During his career Harvey fought 414 bouts, losing only 10.

Two well-known British footballers died recently. They were Bob Hawkes, 64, of Luton, and Joseph C. McAllen, of Belfast. Hawkes, a brilliant left half, gained 20 amateur international caps during his first 12 years with Luton Town, which he joined in 1901.

McAllen, an outside left, played for Ireland in nine international matches. His first was against England in 1896. For many years he played Irish association football for Linfield.

Jack Smith, 26, is planning a fresh start in British heavyweight boxing. The Worcester boy, who won a $9,000 Daily Mail competition in 1938, had his career cut short soon after when he joined the army.

Smith now is managed by Lou Walsh, who managed Ben Foord. Walsh is looking for suitable opponents for his charge. Smith has no illusions about his six years in the army and has no wish to rush things.

"I'll see how I get on," he told his manager, "and if I don't make good I shall stay in the army."

Smith served with the B. E. F. in France, fought his way back through Dunkerque and ended up in hospital with shell-shock.

Joe Payne, Chelsea football club's centre forward, may get into action with his team this season after an operation on his ankle. Three pieces of bone were removed and Payne is making such progress that Billy Burrell, Chelsea manager, said, "There is a real hope that Payne will not only make a full recovery, but will be turning out for Chelsea again this season."

Young Cameron Buchanan, who caused a sensation when Frank Buckley signed him to play football for Wolverhampton Wanderers as a 13-year-old in '42 is in the news again. He refused to sign as a professional for the club and is reported considering offers from Glasgow Rangers and two London clubs. Buchanan played his first game as a 14-year-old with the Wolves first team and is appearing regularly in the Central League side this season.

Argentine Students Expected to Surrender Buildings Peacefully

Buenos Aires, Oct. 5 — (AP) — Col. Filomeno Velazoo, Chief of the Federal Police, announced that the siege of Argentine universities would end today, when students barricaded within the institutions are expected to surrender the buildings peacefully.

Col. Velazoo said he had ordered the withdrawal at 11 a.m. (Buenos Aires Time) of police forces which have been besieging the buildings, and that only a few guards would be left to prevent new disturbances.

The week-long strike of 30,000 Argentine students reached a violent climax last night when a 20-year-old student was killed by revolver fire during a student clash with Nationalist groups in front of the University of Buenos Aires Engineering School.

The death was the first in the rebellion of the students against the government's reimposed state of siege. The revolt began when the students of the six Argentine universities occupied their buildings in protest against repressive government measures.

Reports from La Plata University said many students had been injured in the fierce brushes with police and Nationalists. Police authorities said police moved in because several of their number had been injured by bullets fired from within the college buildings.

The police carried the La Plata buildings by storm and ousted the students completely, taking several away in ambulances. There had been little active resistance from the students, who merely attempted to barricade themselves in most cases.

WILL RESTRICT IMPORTS

London, Oct. 4 — (Reuters) — Britain will have to restrict her imports, giving highest priorities to food and raw material supplies, until her trade balance has been regained, Dr. Hugh Dalton, Chancellor of the Exchequer, told the Lord Mayor's dinner here last night. Exports would have to be increased within the same policy, he said.

CHAPTER 3

She called Lee at his hotel to congratulate him, but no one answered. When she stepped out of Brann's car later that evening for the opening night of her own play, to be swept up by the crowd of people milling in front of the theatre, she could see Lee standing alone in the lobby, looking at her.

She pushed through the crowd to Lee. He seemed nervous but glad to see Elaine. "I was just going into the theatre. Thought I'd take in your play."

"Good. You can come backstage with me if you like."

They waited silently in the lobby for Brann, who was talking with a short, thin man with premature gray hair who wrote a gossip column and talked in a high, nervous voice over the radio once a week.

"I think it's wonderful that you got the Critics' award," Elaine said.

"Thanks," Lee answered, staring moodily at the people filing into the theatre, nodding at a dramatic critic.

"I caught it one night," Elaine continued. "Karen was superb, of course."

"Karen is always superb. Even when she messes up a line, Karen is superb." His voice was flat horribly flat and bitter. "Why didn't you answere my letter? he said abruptly.

Elaine shrugged. "I didn't see much use in it. After all, you're engaged to Karen. What happened at the apartment that night was a mistake. But it happened, so let's forget about the letter and everything else, Lee. I'm happy for your success, but that's all there is to it."

Lee started to speak but Brann approached them. He turned silently to stare at a lobby display ad, lighting a cigaret. "You know," he said just before Brann reached them, "the play wouldn't have been a success without the work you did on it. We could have been a great team, Elaine." He flipped the cigaret away, looking deep into her eyes. . .

* * * *

At first she did not recognize the voice on the telephone, but when the man laughed and asked how her ankle was feeling, she gasped in pleasant surprise: "Paul! Paul Mason! What are you doing in town?"

"Visiting our New York offices," he answered. "How about dinner tonight?"

Elaine, curled up in a chair with the telephone in her lap, stared happily at her ankle. A few hours later she would be with Paul. His voice had sounded good over the telephone; better than she had ever thought it would sound to her. She grinned to no one in particular and kick-a pom-pom tipped mule gaily across the room.

The door buzzer sounded and she jumped up, running awkwardly to the door, picking up the mule on her way and slipping it on, dancing on one foot and opening the door at the same time.

A delivery boy stuck a long, green box in her hand, made her sign a receipt, then vanished down the hall to the elevator.

Elaine tore the box open and gazed at the roses, the beautiful long-stemmed red roses with Paul's card tucked in them.

"That wonderful, wonderful fullback," she sighed, carrying the roses into her room.

She dressed with extra care for the dinner date, and when Paul buzzed at the door she was halfway to it before she stopped realizing she was running. She quickly turned to a mirror over the radio, touched her hair, looked at the long flowing black dinner dress. She winked at herself and let Paul in.

His deep brown eyes were smiling at her, then slowly they clouded. Elaine's heart jumped and her hand nervously moved to her throat. "Is—is there something wrong?" she whispered.

Paul shook his head, stepping in and staring at Elaine. "You're beautiful. I kept remembering you as being plain and rather unattractive. It sort of meant I wouldn't have any competition and you'd be glad to marry me because I'd probably be the first man who spoke to you in years. But that isn't at all true, and now you probably won't marry me after all."

Elaine smiled up at him, her eyes shining happily. "If it will help you out any, wonderful fullback, I won't let another man look at me tonight."

Paul's eyes swept across her face like a little boy inside a candy shop. "Try to stop them—or me," he whispered, and his eyes went on being like the little boy.

Paul was talking about Hollywood and picture people when Karen and John Warren entered the supper room of the big hotel. Elaine's eyes wandered from Paul to watch Karen and Warren cross the room to a table. She looked back at the entrance, expecting to see Lee. But only people she did not know were crowding against the velvet cord, waiting for the headwaiter to admit them.

"Am I boring you?" Paul's voice sliced into her thoughts.

She whirled her attention back to him, her cheeks red. "I'm sorry. I thought I saw somebody I knew."

Paul smiled. "You mean Karen Stoddard and John Warren?"

Elaine's face grew more red. "Yes," she answered humbly. "How did you know?"

"I saw them too."

"Do you know them?"

"I know Warren. I've seen Miss Stoddard's pictures in the papers. Friends of yours?"

"Uh—no, just acquaintances," she lied.

It was impossible for her to concentrate on the meal. She watched Karen and Warren talk, she watched them eat, and she watched them dance. She felt ashamed of her actions, but she did not care. She only knew that Karen's actions with Warren were not those of a girl engaged.

Paul was silently watching Elaine stare at Karen and Warren as they danced near their table. "Snoop," he said gently.

"Let's go, Paul," she said, turning her eyes away from Karen, who was letting Warren hold her close while they danced.

The night air was mild, even a little warm, and the clop-clop of the horses pulling the delapidated hansom through Central Park echoed.

Paul handed her a lighted cigaret, asking: "What are you going to do this summer? Scout for Annie?"

"No, I'm my own boss now, although I'm spending a few weeks with the Branns at their summer home."

"These rich playwrights."

Elaine smiled and let the stillness of the night relax her. She could understand the bitterness in Lee's voice now when he had spoken of Karen. She felt only pity for him, not daring herself a thought of the night at her apartment.

"Why don't you come to Hollywood?" Paul asked, a tinge of seriousness in his question.

"Haven't been asked yet."

He gestured impatiently. "I'll take care of that first thing in the morning."

Elaine turned to him. "I believe you would. I honestly think you would arrange it."

Paul looked thoughtful. "If it were anybody else, I'd feel that I was being used for some ulterior purpose."

"Thanks for the compliment, fullback."

"Don't mention it." He was silent, listening to the clop-clop that echoed. "You see," he said after a moment, "I'd just like to have you in Hollywood where you'd be handy whenever I get paid and feel like buying you a meal now and then."

"That shows you're a thoughtful man, fullback." Elaine did not move her hand away when she felt Paul's touch hers, felt his fingers lace through hers and pull her a little closer.

"Think it over, will you?"

Elaine shook her head. "Sorry. All dated up for the summer."

"With what? Another play? How many do you expect to have on Broadway at one time? You've got two running now, and they don't look like they'll ever stop unless the cast folds from sheer exhaustion."

Elaine looked at Paul. "I'm going to write a book."

Paul swung around in the little seat.

"Did that sound too dramatic?" she asked. "I didn't mean it that way. But I'm going to be a novelist, too."

"Lord, a career girl!"

"Well, why not?"

"You could marry me."

"As the saying goes: 'I hardly know you.'"

"You know I played fullback. That's enough, isn't it?"

Elaine laughed, leaning over and kissing him on the cheek. "You're sweet, fullback. Thanks for the offer of Hollywood."

"And marriage," he reminded her.

"And marriage. Especially marriage. Mind if I take a rain check on that?"

Paul looked down at her hand. "If I could only be sure that what they say about the California weather—."

The elderly cabbie, his battered top hat pushed back on one ear, smoked his pipe and listened contentedly to the gay laughter inside the cab. . .

* * * *

Elaine was staring in a window of the Fifth Avenue book store, staring at the display of books in their colorful jackets, at the picture of a young and pretty girl who had written one of the books.

The fall wind scattered her hair and she brushed aside a few strands, pulling the collar of her sport coat around her tighter.

It was fall, 1937 and the armies of Francisco Franco were besieging Madrid and the Japanese were beginning a systematic attack upon China. It was fall, 1937, and people were littering living rooms with books of reference because of a cigaret company's puzzle contest, and staring at maps and pointing out the area where Amelia Earheart Putnam and her silvery airplane had disappeared into the Pacific.

It was fall, 1937, and "Lost Horizon" was popular at motion picture theatres and Carolina students were working out the steps of "The Big Apple," and women were wearing the odd-looking peaked hats and openwork hats.

And Elaine Grayson was staring at the window display of her novel and the picture of the young and pretty girl which was herself.

If she felt proud and happy when her first play had been produced, it was mild compared to the excitement that surged through her now. She did not know how well the book was selling, nor did she care, really. It was an accomplishment. It lifted her high in literary world. She was versatile. She could write a play or a novel.

Standing there, her hands dug deep in the heavy herringbone coat, she played with the idea of a short story. Then she smiled at her reflection in the window. She thought: How large your head has grown, my dear, wonderful, famous Miss Grayson. So terribly out of proportion to what it has in it, my dear, wonderful Miss Grayson.

Elaine turned from the window, feeling happy that her reflection in the window—the one with the rather big head—evaporated when she moved. Her head, she was determined, would stay on the small side, no matter how good she might be.

History of A London Newspaper

Parliament and press stand as the twin pillars of national liberty in Britain, maintain the editor of London's "News Chronicle." He backs his contention with this brief history of the newspaper which had Charles Dickens as its first editor.

By Gerald Barry, in London Calling

If we follow the growth of the English press, the growth of our national life itself begins to take shape. As good an example to take as any, I suppose, is the daily newspaper of which I am Editor.

This newspaper, the Daily News now called the News Chronicle (since it was amalgamated fifteen years ago with the Daily Chronicle and assumed the joint name) can fairly claim to have played a serious part in the social and political life of Britain for the past century.

Its first issue appeared in February, 1846 — ninety-nine years ago. Its first Editor happened to be the great English novelist Charles Dickens.

In the Editor's room of the News Chronicle today stands a plain leather-seated chair with a wooden back to which is attached a small brass plate commemorating the fact that Charles Dickens sat in it to produce the first number of the paper.

In fact he sat very close to where the Editor sits today: the original small offices were only one street away from the present large offices.

London's newspapers never seem to have moved far from the surroundings of Fleet Street; and, today, the windows of the modern News Chronicle look out over the roof-tops and plane trees of the Temple, where Addison and Steele strolled on the lawns and wrote for the Rambler and the Spectator and other coffee-house news-sheets of the eighteenth century. The tradition is unbroken, though everything else has changed.

• • •

By all accounts, Dickens did not make a particularly good Editor, and he did not stay long, but, perhaps, it was he who set the literary tradition which ever since has enabled the Daily News to carry on the English Press custom of engaging distinguished men of letters to write for the popular newspaper. In the pages of English journalism the best English find its place as well as the worst.

The Daily News was born into the throes of one of the most tremendous political battles that has shaken our country since the days of the Reformation: the battle of the Corn Laws, that was to end in the downfall of the long rule of Protection, which had existed in one form or another in this Island from the time of the Plantagenets. The paper was, in fact, created specifically to fight on behalf of the great new forces released by the Industrial Revolution.

In the next fifty years it played a leading part in the heated Radical controversies of the times. It became the champion of Free Trade, of the emergent nationalism of Italy under Mazzini. It supported Mr. Gladstone in his great stand for the Bulgarians and the Armenians; it was among the first to raise its voice for arbitration instead of war as a means of settling international disputes.

The Daily News played a leading part in the fight for the second Reform Bill of 1867 (which gave the working man a vote), and for universal education, as well as for religious freedom.

In a word, the files of this newspaper afford a pretty fair guide to the struggle for English democracy in the nineteenth century. The same, of course, is equally true right up to the present day: the pages of a free Press are a reasonable index to the great political and social controversies of any period—and also of its follies, its frailties, and changing habits and fashions.

This is one of the noteworthy things about our popular Press—that while it plays an invaluable part in maintaining the freedom and progress of our democracy, it also plays a less noble part in catering for that democracy's lower tastes.

Let us glance back for a moment to the year in which the Daily News was born, because to do so, gives us a chance to see how the pattern of English life has changed in a hundred years. What was happening then?

The price of bread was 9d. or 10d. for a four-pound loaf. The great Macready was playing Hamlet at the Surrey Theatre. The big new excitement of the day was the advent of the railway. The Daily News appointed a special 'railway editor,' and in its advance, advertisements laid special emphasis on the accuracy and completeness of its news on railway affairs—as today we might advertise our news of stratosphere-travel or television.

• • •

By this time the English Press had already won, thanks to John Wilkes, the decisive round of the great battle for freedom, but newspapers were still heavily taxed. As a result, a daily paper of eight pages in those days still cost 5d. The principle of free expression of opinion was established; but the great revolution in the newspaper world which was to give birth to modern journalism, and the penny and half-penny paper, had still to come.

It followed half a century later, and two things brought it about. One was the rapid advance of mechanical invention; the other was the Education Act of 1884, establishing free universal education. And so, what the Daily News had fought for as the right of the common man, that is to say free education, was now, when won, to bring it new and fierce competitors. A new technique of journalism was born.

It was a man called Lord Northcliffe, then Alfred Harmsworth, who first grasped the opportunities which universal education offered to the Press. Harmsworth was the founder of modern journalism. He saw that now that knowledge had been cheapened—perhaps in both senses of the word—a vast new field of enterprise was opened up to newspapers and periodicals.

The results of this complete revolution have been remarkable—and mixed. One result has been that the whole tempo of newspaper life has been fantastically speeded up, and competition correspondingly intensified. Another has been that the newspapers have tended to become less serious, because I suppose, they cater for a much wider and less informed or less serious-minded section of the public.

But the most significant development of all, and the one that has had the most striking effects, is that the production and sale of newspapers are criticized, as they frequently are nowadays, for not being this, that, or the other, it is well to remember this point, that the Press is an industry.

This means that, while it is in most cases properly concuned with its duty of informing and influencing public opinion, it is also concerned—like any other industry—with making profits for its shareholders. In other words, the modern newspaper is an article of commerce as well as an organ of opinion. Bear this in mind, and much will be explained.

Among the question-marks over-hanging the future, one naturally thinks of the social effects of the Press, and the lines on which the Press is likely to develop under competition from radio and television. Here I must leave the matter with two reflections.

The first is that, by and large, a people gets the Press it deserves. The people create the demand, and can quickly affect the quality of the supply by the time-honored process of changing their custom. Believe me, newspapers are quite as sensitive to public opinion as public opinion is to newspapers.

And the second reflection is this. With all its shortcomings, the English Press does remain an indispensable bulwark of English freedom. Throughout the war, even at the most desperate turns of our fortune, newspaper comment remained entirely free from censorship, and was used constantly, and hardly once irresponsibly, to question, criticize and expose. The war was a great test, and the Press survived it with honors.

SAY ALCOHOLISM HEALTH PROBLEM

Chicago, Oct. 4 (AP) — Two medical writers declared yesterday that alcoholism in the United States "is a serious national health problem," estimating that there are 600,000 chronic alcoholic addicts, 2,000,000 heavy drinkers and 38,000,000 "social drinkers."

A metal identification disc found near the dead woman's body led to Hurley's apprehension.

High Octane Is Slow to Ignite

(Cleveland Plain Dealer)

A new high octane fuel is practically fireproof in the sense that it is slow to ignite in the open, reserves its release of power until injected into a motor cylinder. That a demonstration of its safety was made in a New York office building should be ample proof of its makers' belief in its ability to resist ordinary fire.

Until its temperature is raised to 100 degrees Fahrenheit the fuel does not give off the vapor required for ignition by flash fire or by a spark. That quality should add appreciably to the safety of flying, since it practically eliminates the danger of fire following the crash of a plane. Often it is true that few of the passengers in a crash will care whether there is a consequent fire, but sometimes it is not.

That the fuel is to be fed by injection and vaporized by heat generated during its compression indicates that the motor built to use it will be a cross between the present conventional type and the Diesel. Do not expect it soon in the automobile.

Meat Ration Coupons' Values To be Revised

Most Cooked Meats, Some Uncooked Meats to Change

Ottawa, Oct. 6 — (CP) — The coupon values on most cooked meats and some uncooked meats of Canada's much-criticized meat rationing system will be revised, but it was not expected the revision would result in any substantial increase in the overall amount of 1 ⅓ pounds per week available to Canadians.

In making the announcement in the Commons yesterday as a result of further meat conferences here, Finance Minister Ilsley warned that the over-all consumption of meat still must be kept within the target of 130 to 135 pounds per person per year. The target has been set so that Canada may meet heavy overseas commitments of meat to help feed Britain and Europe.

The Finance Minister said that a retail advisory committee which met Prices Board officials here earlier in the week had recommended that such cooked meats as bologna, weiners, meat loaves and jellied meats be taken off the ration. However, the Prices Board could not accept the suggestion and still keep consumption within the required limit.

He added that revision of the coupon values on these appeared the most acceptable alternative to the meat trade. In addition, he said, it appeared the coupon values of some cuts of uncooked meats were 'not accurately matched' with consumer buying preferences. Here too, changes in the coupon values would be made.

He expected the revisions to go into effect by the middle of the end of next week.

Three Young Men Given Five Years

St. Catharines, Oct. 6 (CP) — Five-year penitentiary terms were imposed Friday by Magistrate J. H. Campbell on three young men who admitted the armed robbery September 29 of Roy Smith, St. Catharines taxi driver, and the theft of his taxi. The men were Albert G. Bowden, 25, of Thorold; John Monteith, 17, and Herbert R. Dunlop, 19, both of St. Catharines.

The trio admitted that they planned the robbery in a restaurant, called a taxi and ordered the driver to take them to Jordan, at Jordan they slugged Smith, relieved him of $18.75. They kept him at gunpoint in the back seat while one of the robbers drove. At Lindsay they ordered Smith out of the car and when he complained that he was "broke" they gave him back $2.

They were arrested at Peterborough a few hours later.

U. S. Strikes At-a-Glance

Back-to-work orders expected to cut number of United States workers idle over labor disputes from record 1945 high of more than 550,000 to under 400,000.

Major trouble spots:

Coal — Government moves to avert threatened country-wide coal strike as spreading stoppages leave 155,000 miners idle, close more than 500 pits in six states.

Labor Secretary L. B. Schwellenbach calls in soft coal operators and United Mine Workers to seek some means of ending the work stoppages in six states.

Oil — Striking C.I.O. oil workers vote on union president's back-to- work order after government seizure of properties in 15 states.

Automotive — C.I.O., United Automobile Workers say Kelsey-Hayes strike in Detroit ended but company disagrees; Ford Motor Company, on basis of expected end of long walkout, recalls nearly 60,000 laid-off workers next week; union to file notice with National Labor Relations Board Monday of intent to strike by 145,000 Ford workers; Union-General Motors to renew discussions on 30 per cent wage rate increase.

Shipping — Indications point to end of longshoremen's strike, involving about 60,000 workers, which has tied up shipping in New York harbor this week, as major local union votes back to work Monday.

Communications — Request for strike vote for Independent Union of Telephone Operators and employees indicated after country-wide four-hour walkout yesterday as test of union strength.

Lumber — Water movement of lumber slowed down in Pacific northwest as sailors union supported the 61,000 striking A.F.L. lumber workers' efforts to close down the industry; some 40,000 C.I.O. lumber workers remain on job.

Transportation—Strike of 2,700 A.F.L. bus drivers over wage demands continues, crippling travel in seven northwest states.

5 Pay Penalty For Their Crime

London, Oct. 6 —(CP)— Five German prisoners of war were hanged today for the murder of a fellow prisoner whom they had "tried" and condemned for deserting the Nazi creed.

The sentences of death were announced last night by the War Office.

The men were accused of having tried in a "kangaroo court" Sgt. Maj. Wolfgang Rosterg, whom they hanged in a Scottish prison-camp latrine two days before Christmas last year, a day after his arrival at the camp.

Counter Measures to Atomic Bomb Already in Sight Says McNaughton

Detroit, Oct. 6. (CP) — Gen. McNaughton, co-chairman of the joint Canada-United States Permanent Defence Board, said here last night counter measures to the atomic bomb "are already clearly in sight".

He did not elaborate on this observation made in an address prepared for delivery to a joint meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Engineering Institute of Canada.

The address, first public utterance since his resignation as Defence Minister, contained his first official occount of the grim military situation in Britain in 1940 when he was commander of the Canadian overseas forces. At that period of expected invasion, the Canadians had the only fully-equipped division in Britain.

Urging constant vigilance in producing newer and better weapons, the General cited the example of the weakness of the Allies early in the war. Those were days of improvisation that included a search of ancient manuscripts in the old Bodleian library at Oxford to find the exact composition of Greek fire which had been used in 1100 when Alexius of Constantinople used it to route a Pisan fleet. The composition of phosphorous and naptha was put into bottles which burst into hot flame on impact and this weapon was the substitute for badly-needed anti-tank guns.

He recalled the early days of the conflict when Canada had plans for a rifle factory that had not been built.

There was hardly anything else and anyone unfamiliar with the country and with its potentialities "must have thought we were very rash indeed to go to war and launch and expedition overseas".

The 1st Canadian Division sailed, leaving behind with the Canadian automobile industry orders for its transport. And by the Spring of 1940 when part of the Division made an abortive sally into France "many thousands of vehicles required had been delivered to us overseas mostly from our own plants in Canada".

POST-WAR ARMY AND NAVY DETAILS GIVEN NEXT WEEK

Finance Minister Ilsley Discloses Budget Will be Brought Down Next Friday

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 6 —(CP)— Canada's parliamentary representatives, vitally interested in the place the Dominion will take in the post-war lineup of the world's nations, may be given details of the government's plans for her peacetime navy and army when they meet again next Tuesday.

Air Minister Gibson, who told the House Thursday that tentative post-war air force plans call for a force of between 15,000 and 20,000, said yesterday that Defence Minister Abbott will be prepared to give details on the navy and army at the next sitting.

Veterans Minister Mackenzie, acting House Leader, said Mr. Abbott would take the floor after a bill ratifying the setting up of a world food and agricultural organization has been advanced.

Speculation as to Size.

As a result of preliminary remarks made Tuesday by Mr. Abbott, there has been speculation that the size of the permanent post-war navy will be about 10,000 men and 20 ships.

Discussion on the air force estimates brought no new details about the post-war organization to light. Col. Gibson said all plans were on a tentative basis until international and regional security commitments were known.

Before the House got down to the estimates, Finance Minister Ilsley disclosed that he will bring down next Friday the budget for the 1945-46 fiscal year.

ELECTRIC "TIN FISH" STOWED ON SUB

The crew of a submarine re-provisioning at an advanced base in the Pacific, stow an electric torpedo below decks. These electrically-driven weapons, a carefully guarded secret during the war years, now are revealed by the navy to have accounted for over 1,000,000 tons of enemy shipping. The torpedoes are driven by electric motors powered by specially designed lead acid type storage batteries, and are gyroscope-controlled. They leave no tell-tale wake behind them as the conventional steam-turbine driven torpedoes do. Over 20 feet long, they weigh about a ton and a half.

BEAST OF BELSEN ADMITS GASSING CAMP PRISONERS

Joseph Kramer Gives Signed Statement to Court Trying War Criminals

By CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN

Lunenburg, Germany, Oct. 6—(AP)— Joseph Kramer, "The Beast of Belsen," confessed that he gassed prisoners at Natzweiler concentration camp in a signed statement presented today as the prosecution concluded its case against 45 S.S. men and women guards accused of conspiracy to commit mass murder.

Kramer, who saw duty at five concentration camps, also admitted he was fully aware of the gas chamber and crematorium at the Oswiecim camp he commanded.

Kramer's confession contradicted an earlier statement, which was introduced by Prosecutor T. M. Backhouse four days ago. At that time the surly Nazi denied the existence of a gas chamber at Osweisim and categorically denied allegations of former prisoners that there were mass executions, whippings and other demonstrations of cruelty.

Kramer's statement closed the prosecution's case.

The defence is expected to summon 40 witnesses, and the trial may continue another three weeks. All the accused probably will be examined individually.

Signed statements by camp leaders Hilde Lobauer, Elizabeth Volenrath and Antoni Aurizlej, and the second deposition from Kramer, were read into the record today by the prosecution. Kramer and 11 of the guards also are accused of crimes at the Osweicim camp.

Face Strained.

His face strained and ashen, Kramer listened to the prosecution read the deposition, which said:

"With reference to orders I received at Natzweiler to gas certain women and dispatch them to Strassbourg University, as sworn by me before commandant Jadin of the French army, I give the following details:

"Orders I received were in writing, signed by order of Reichsfuehrer Himmer by Gruppenfuehrer Glucks. As nearly as I can remember they stated a special transport would arrive from Oswiecim and that people on it were to be killed and their bodies sent to Strassbourg to Professor Hirt. It further said that I should communicate with Professor Hirt as to how the killing was to take place.

"This I did and was given by Hirt a container of gas crystals with instructions how to use them. There was no regular gas chamber in the Struthof section of Natzweiler but he described how an ordinary room could be used."

Tried to Remedy.

My feelings about orders in regard to the gas chamber were to be slightly surprised and wonder to myself whether such action was really right.

"In regard to conditions at Belsen, I say once more that I did everything I could to remedy them."

It surprises me very much to hear there were large and adequate stocks of food in the Wehrmacht camp nearby.

BARON SHIDEHARA BECOMES PREMIER AT CRITICAL TIME

Retirement 14 Years Ago Forced Upon Him by Jap Militarists

Tokyo, Oct. 6 — (AP) — The trembling old hands of Baron Kijuro Shidehara, who fought Japanese military aggression from its start, today picked up the reins of Japanese government — which he said he hopes to make truly liberal.

The 73-year-old Baron was summoned dramatically from 14 years of retirement, forced upon him by the militarists whom he opposed, to become premier of Japan at the most critical point in that country's history.

He promised Emperor Hirohito to "do my best" to form a cabinet that would meet with the approval of Allied occupation authorities. Ex-Premier Prince Higashi-Kuni and the first post-war cabinet resigned en bloc yesterday because they were unable to put into effect sweeping measures designed to substitute Democratic freedom for feudalism in Japan.

Shidehara's first official act was to reappoint Shigeru Yoshida as foreign minister, Domei reported. Yoshida, who had stepped out with the Higashi-Kuni cabinet, was said to have accepted the reappointment.

The new premier announced that he expected to complete his cabinet within two or three days.

Invested by Emperor

Shidehara was invested by the Emperor at 1:22 p.m. (11:22 p. m. E.S.T. Friday).

Allied and Japanese sources said the new premier was expected to call on Gen. MacArthur at the first "suitable opportunity," but probably not until after cabinet appointments are completed.

An informant close to Shidehara said no appointment with Gen. MacArthur had been requested and that the incoming premier does not consider a formal call necessary immediately.

He was propelled dramatically into the new role after a confused day of manoeuvring in which all authoritative sources had pointed to another Liberal, Shigeru Yoshida, a friend of Shidehara, as the choice.

Shidehara had at first declined because of his age.

At Washington in 1912

A former member of the House of Peers, Shidehara was councillor in the Japanese Embassy at Washington as far back as 1912.

He was Minister of the Netherlands in 1914. After his Ambassadorship at Washington, he twice served as Foreign Minister of Japan in 1924 and again in 1929.

He had retired completely from the scene 14 years ago.

The former premier, Prince Higashi-Kuni, who quit with his cabinet when Gen. MacArthur's directives in the interest of freedom in Japan became too hot to handle, had pointed out that his own knowledge of foreign countries was limited largely to France and Great Britain.

No Objection

Japanese sources said Lt.-Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, Gen. MacArthur's Chief of Staff, had told Nippon's foreign ministry in a conference that the occupation authorities had no objection to Shidehara's appointment.

LAVAL EXPELLED FROM COURTROOM FOR SECOND TIME

Judge Paul Mongibeaux Suspends Session For What He Terms An "Indefinite Period"

Paris, Oct. 6 — (AP) — Pierre Laval's trial was suspended today after the former Vichy Chief of government was expelled from the courtroom for the second time in three days and then refused to continue his defence when recalled to the Chamber.

After ordering Laval from the French High Court of Justice for failing to answer a question from the Bench, Judge Paul Mongibeaux announced that the session was suspended for an "indefinite period."

Laval was brought back into the court a short time later, but went on a one-man sit-down strike. Judge Mongibeaux immediately discontinued the interrogation of Laval and suspended the session a second time when there were no witnesses present to continue the trial.

Produced Uproar

On his return to the courtroom, Laval said:

"The insulting way you put your questions and the behavior of some of the jurors lead me to believe you are about to commit a judiciary crime in which I will not take part and I, therefore, prefer to sit down."

Laval's expulsion and the day's first suspension produced an uproar in the court. Everyone rose.

A juror shouted: "That's not French justice!"

In the press box someone within earshot of the judge said: "Laval is right."

Laval, successful yesterday in contesting accusations that he plotted against France's domestic security, still faced the more serious charge of having had intelligence with the enemy during the 1940 meeting of Marshal Petain and Hitler at Montoire.

Laval was expelled Thursday from the French High Court of Justice on the first day of his trial but was readmitted to the courtroom yesterday and made a lengthy plea in his own behalf.

The expulsion order today came after a heated argument between Laval, prosecutor Andre Mornet and Judge Mongibeaux.

Judge Mongibeaux attempted to obtain from Laval an answer as to who brought him back to power in the Vichy regime in 1942 after Petain had ordered him arrested. Laval refused to answer the question.

The defendant said he had first to answer a statement from Prosecutor Mornet, whereupon Judge Mongibeaux interjected: "It was Abetz. It was the Germans who put you back in power".

(Otto Abetz was the German ambassador to Occupied France.)

Laval shouted: "I must answer the prosecutor. He says that I was condemned to death at Marseille. I protest".

The jury almost en masse then shouted: "We want you to answer the question of the judge".

"You maintain your attitude?" Judge Mongibeaux asked.

"You asked me a question and gave the answer at the same time," screamed Laval. "That is illegal".

30 HORSES BURNED

Boston, Oct. 6 — (AP) — At least 30 horses were burned to death yesterday in a fire which razed the J. C. Keith stables in the Brighton district and caused damage estimated by Keith at between $75,000 and $100,000.

20,051 DISCHARGED IN WEEK

Ottawa, Oct. 6 — (CP) — Defence Headquarters last night announced the discharge of another 20,051 men and women from Canada's armed services during the week ended Sept. 29 and at the same time made known that war service gratuity payments to ex-Army personnel totalled $51,439,719 up to the end of August.

Pale Cast of Gloom Hangs Over Wigwam of Indian After Tilt with Law

Orillia, Ont., Oct. 6 (CP) — Over the wigwam of Douglas King hangs a pale cast of gloom. Against him, the long arm of coincidence had combined with the White Man's wartime substitute for Demon Rum—demon lemon extract and the magistrate wasn't a movie fan.

For many moons, the 26-year-old Indian had wanted an engagement ring for his fiancee, Martha Shilling. He bought one, paid a down payment, but returned later to say he did not want it —and got back his down payment. When he left again, the jeweller missed another ring.

A few moons later King was arrested on a charge of appropriating certain bottles of demon lemon extract from a grocery store. His fiancee went bail, hocking a diamond ring with a restaurant keeper to get the cash. The restaurant man went to the jeweller to have the ring evaluated. Yep, it was the same ring.

King was charged with this second theft. His fiancee, acting as defence counsel, argued long and fluently on his behalf. But the magistrate hadn't heard of the romantic ending Hollywood has worked out for situations like that.

The result: convicted on both charges. The sentence: two months in jail.

Six Killed When Train Hits Car At Chesterville

Returned Serviceman One Of Victims of Accident

Montreal, Oct. 6 — (CP) — A level crossing accident at Chesterville, Ont., early today caused the deaths of six persons when the automobile in which they were travelling was struck by an east-bound Canadian Pacific Railway freight train, it was announced here at C.P.R. headquarters.

Driver of the car, the announcement said, was Howard Beckstead, 52, of Chesterville, which is 40 miles southeast of Ottawa.

The others killed were:

Herbert Irving, 50, of Ottawa;

Gwendolyn Irving, 18, his daughter;

Pauline Seguin, 20, Chesterville; Omer Groulx, 25, Chesterville and Earl Ouderkirk, 26, Berwick, Ont.

The accident occurred at 2:55 a. m., E.S.T. The "wig-wag" crossing signal was operating, the announcement added, "but apparently the driver of the car did not see it." Three bodies were thrown from the automobile and three were dragged along the right of way.

Only 120 Points Needed to Get Out

Ottawa, Oct. 6 —(CP)— Defence Headquarters last night announced another 10-point reduction in the point-score total required for priority discharge from the Canadian army and said effective as from Oct. 1 army men with 120 points or more could get out of the service on a priority basis.

Reduction in the minimum total points required from 130 to 120 is the second such reduction within a month and is line with the policy of maintaining a steady flow of men going into the discharge stream.

Telephone Workers Authorized to Request Formal Strike Vote

New York, Oct. 6 (AP)— The National Federation of Telephone Workers was authorized today to request a formal strike vote, after 130,000 to 200,000 operators gave the United States a sample of what a general walkout would mean.

Operators and other phone workers quit work for four hours yesterday in a "show of union strength," paralyzing all long distance calls except those classified emergency or priority, and tying up some local service except for dial phone.

Ordinarily, 87,336,000 calls a day are handled—4,404,000 of them long distance calls.

Joseph Beirne, President of the Independent Union which called the stoppage, said in Washington that the workers at mass meeting voted to authorize their leaders to schedule a strike vote under the War Labor Disputes Act.

He told a news conference that the request for the formal vote probably would be made within 15 days. Thirty days would then elapse before actual balloting.

The walkout yesterday from 2 to 6 p.m. E.S.T. was the first of its kind. The union estimated that 200,000 workers left their posts.

RAN INTO TRUCK

Toronto, Oct. 6 — (CP)—Struck by a truck in West Toronto late yesterday afternoon, Bobby Burr, aged four years, died last night in hospital. Police said the child ran into the path of the truck.

Double Murder, Suicide Shocks N.B. Countryside

Smith Crossing, N.B., Oct. 6—(CP)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police in this shocked and curious Northumberland County community today searched for the motive behind the baffling murder-suicide yesterday in which Earl Smith, 40-year-old farmer, apparently shot his invalid mother and his two-year-old child, then turned an old-fashioned rifle on his own body.

The bullet-riddled bodies of Smith, his 75-year-old, widowed and bed-ridden mother, Margaret, and his small daughter, Lynne, were found early Friday evening by the dead man's brother, James Smith. R.C.M.P. Corporal Leonard Copp said it was apparent that Smith had shot his mother and child, then suicided. No motive was apparent.

The brother, who lives just across the road from the scene of the tragedy in this settlement one mile from Blackville and on the road leading to Newcastle, N.B., found the child, shot in the stomach, on a couch downstairs. Her father's body was upstairs near that of the grandmother.

He last saw his brother alive about seven o'clock yesterday morning, at milking time, and Coroner Dr. J. B. Hamilton of Doaktown said the shootings must have occurred soon after.

The dead man had been working at the naval base in nearby Renous, but stayed home yesterday. His wife, who formerly worked in a Saint John beauty parlor, had been in Bathurst since the night before, but returned home when she learned of the tragedy.

The grandmother, widow of Mortimer Smith, had been an invalid for years and had been confined to her bed the past year.

Strike Leaders Freed on Bail

Hollywood, Oct. 6 —(AP)— Nine film strike leaders were free on $500 bail each today after a riot at Warner Brothers Studio in which 25 or more men and women were injured by flying missiles.

Violence started yesterday shortly after mass picketing by members of the conference of studio unions who have been on strike since March 12, in an A.F.L. union jurisdictional dispute.

Herbert Sorrell, G.S.U. president, and one of those arrested on charges of rioting, said the National Labor Relations Board was "not giving us a fair deal and it is about time to stop the stalling. We have decided to get into the fight and end this thing."

Blayney Matthews, chief of police at Warners, said the studio would "fight it out, and if the pickets are back today we'll meet 'em with the same weapon."

He said no conciliation conference was planned.

NOTE IN BOTTLE FOUND IN U. S.

A note placed in a sealed bottle and dropped in Lake Ontario midway between Cobourg and Rochester N.Y. by Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Card, 208 Bridge St. East and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Buskard, 10 St. Charles St. was found and a letter sent to the party by the finder, Jackie Richards, 13, of Syracuse, N.Y. The little girl with two other companions saw the bottle drifting near the shore at Lakeview, N.Y. and was about to throw it back into the lake when they noticed the note inside. The bottle was broken and the contents noted and a reply was sent. The note was placed in the bottle the latter part of June and the answer was not received until today although the letter was dated August 4th.

WILD RASPBERRIES FOUND AT HOLLOWAY

Probably residents of the district are due for some war weather before the winter sets in if second blooming of fruit and plants can be taken as a criterion. Little Joyce Lott of Holloway on her way home from school on Wednesday picked a quantity of second growth wild raspberries and, taking them home had enough for her mother to make a berry and apple pie. The little girl brought evidence of her find to this office. The fruit is perfectly formed and of good taste, despite the lateness of the season.

MOTOR DAMAGED BY SHORT CIRCUIT

Short circuiting of an electric refrigeration motor in the basement of the New Service Lunch on Front Street caused the local fire department a brief run to that premises shortly before nine o'clock Friday evening. Fire Chief William Lynch stated there was no damage to the building, the wiring and motor parts being the only loss to the owner.

MOTORIST ARRESTED FOR ERRATIC DRIVING

Lawrence Villeneuve, 278 Wellington St., Kingston, was charged under the Highway Traffic Act here on Friday following driving his auto in a very erratic manner on Pinnacle St. When his car was inspected by police constables, the steering gear was found to be in bad state of repair and there were no brakes on the car.

Late Thursday night while motoring on Highway No. 14 north of Belleville, Mr. Villeneuve ran into a colt owned by Arthur Vermilyea injuring it so badly that it had to be shot. One of Mr. Vermilyea's mares with the colt had broken out of the pasture feld and strayed onto the highway.

Londoners Fed Up With Queues

By NORMAN CRIBBENS
(C.P. Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 6 (CP) — The notion that war-tried Londoners take their queues philosophically and do not grouse about having to wait for the things they want most is fast disappearing.

Londoners in queues are grousing and grousing plenty. Their patience has been strained almost to breaking point by a daily tussle with queues that are seemingly just as inevitable now as they were in wartime.

There was a line-up nearly 100 yards long at a bus stop near Victoria Station and working men and women, anxious to get to their jobs on time, waited anything from 20 minutes to half an hour before they could get anywhere near the running board.

One man, a middle-aged office worker, summed up the feelings of the crowd when he said angrily:

"If a public enterprise like the London county council can't do better than this it's time the private companies had a try."

London's newest type of line-up is found outside the tobacconist shops. Smoke-hungry workers have an uncanny knack of knowing just when a fresh consignment of cigarettes has arrived at any particular store.

There will be queues for a long time yet and Londoners are prepared to put up with them. But to say they put up with them gladly and in a spirit of sacrifice is gross exaggeration.

They are fed up with 'em.

Sgt. E. Warren, Former City Resident, With Canadian Embassy in Washington

Former resident of this city and now a member of the Veterans Guard of Canada stationed at the Canadian Embassy in Washington, D.C., Sergt. Eustace Warren recently concluded a furlough spent in the city and district.

Born in England, Sergt. Warren came to Canada in 1923 and obtained employment with the C.N.R. in this city. Later he became associated with the Ontario Provincial Police and the Mackenzie Feeds firm.

He joined the Veterans Guard of Canada in 1940 and after certain phases of training was posted to Kingston where he guarded prisoners of war. After a year at Fort Henry he was transferred to Parliament Hill, Ottawa. A few months later going to Washington, D.C., in charge of the Canadian guard at the Dominion Embassy there. He has had this position for approximately four years.

Three daughters, Barbara, Verna and Jean live with their father in Washington and are attending school there. During their residence in this city they were pupils at Queen Alexandra School.

Sergt. Warren expects to stay in the army for some time as there has been no indication of the demobilization of his unit.

Miss Cora Casselman Has Had Experience In Public Affairs

For more than twenty-five years a keen student of international affairs, Mrs. Cora Casselman, of Edmonton, the only woman sitting on the Liberal side of the House of Commons, was Prime Minister Mackenzie King's choice as sole lady delegate to the San Francisco Conference.

Mrs. Casselman will speak to an open meeting of the Belleville Women's Canadian Club at Bridge Street United Church on Tuesday, October 9, at 8.15 p.m.

She had a good background of preparation for the famous conference. At Queen's University from which she graduated with honors in English and history in 1912, she tutored in history while attending the Faculty of Education. She was awarded the 1913 medal from that faculty and went on to teach in the Kingston Collegiate Institute for the next six years.

In Edmonton, where her husband practised law and later became member of the Federal House for Edmonton East, the seat to which she succeeded following his death last June, she conducted a study group on international affairs for ten years. She was president of the League of Nations' Society in the Albertan capital; now she is a member of the national executive. She has lectured extensively on the Atlantic Charter and international developments. She has, on several occasions spoken in the House on international affairs.

BARON SHIDEHARA

The international spotlight last was turned upon Shidehara late in 1931, after the Japanese had struck in Manchuria. Shidehara, noted for his Liberal views, had opposed the use of force by the Japanese in Manchuria, but after the die was cast, it was his duty to present his country's case to the League of Nations.

Coal Dealers View Spreading Strikes With Alarm

Belleville coal dealers are viewing with alarm spreading labor strikes in the United States which now have spread to the coal mining industry and state if they are prolonged the tie-up will almost assuredly seriously affect coal shipments to this country. Fortunately anthracite miners are still not affected by the walk-out, the strike so far having been confined to the soft coal industry.

Opinion on the current coal supply in the city seems divided on the part of dealers. One or two dealers stated definitely that shipments of anthracite from the United States had dwindled to a dangerously low point, while another stated prospects of consumer deliveries in the city were no darker than for the past year or so.

Smaller dealers stated although their orders for winter supplies had been sent in months ago, only a very few cars were being received and there were no assurances as to when shipments would be made. Another dealer stated his regular shipments were coming through and local deliveries were being made as rapidly as possible.

Through the recent easing of certain regulations, dealers may supply customers with anthracite for 75 percent of their order, the balance to be made up of coke or soft coal.

But the big trouble and worry of local consumers, the same as in many other Canadian centres, is to get those deliveries.

Large Offering Poultry For Thanksgiving

Offering of chicken, ducks and geese for the Thanksgiving market featured the local produce mart on Saturday morning as one of the largest attendances of the current season was seen.

Spurred possibly by the demand for Thanksgiving the price of fowl seemed slightly firmer with vendors asking from 40 to 43 cents for top grade chicken. Ducks were to be had at from $2 to $2.50 each, while a few geese were quoted at around $4 each.

Price of eggs also took on a slightly firmer note with first grade bringing 50 cents the dozen and mediums selling at 48 cents.

On the outside market McIntosh and Snow apples were offered in some quantity, the former bringing 50 cents the half peck for top grade, while the latter sold at 40 cents the half peck. Blue grapes brought 65 cents the six-quart basket with the red variety fetching a nickel more. Frost plums sold at 95 cents and Blue Damson plums at 90 cents the six quart basket. Crab apples were 15 cents quart box.

Carrots sold at 40 cents the peck with potatoes quoted at $2.35 the bag. Onions were 50 cents the basket and cauliflower up to 35 cents each. Tomatoes were 50 cents the basket, with musk melons fetching up to 35 cents and watermelons up to 45 cents.

Young pigs sold at $8 each, while a few Pecan ducks were quoted at $2 each. Mixed slabwood was held at $8 the cord.

Community Progress

Editor,
The Ontario Intelligencer.
5th October 1945.

The war is over. It is now time for all good men to come to the air of—not their party—but their country. We are going to have trouble before the country is readjusted back to somewhere near normal. There is much to be done and willing hands are needed.

As the first President of our local Chamber of Commerce and, with the late Col. Marsh, very largely the organizer, I have been asked to give a helping hand to get all progressive citizens into the organization. And remember I have not been on the directorate for the last 10 or 15 years, because I thought it high time that other citizens took a hand. I think those jobs should not be held for too many years to the exclusion of our young and coming citizens.

Eastern Ontario is said by those living west of Toronto to be somewhat unprogressive, somewhat decanent — and I shall leave you to be the judge of this, and of the part you take, or do not take in allowing this to be said. I would, however, like to see all progressively minded citizens come in to the organization, tell them what you like about it or do not like, and this will go a long way towards the formation or reforming of the progressive spirit that we certainly had a few years ago. The proposed St. Lawrence waterway will make a tremendous difference to eastern Ontario. Let's get together and give things a push. Write in and tell the Secretary-Manager you are joining right now. This is YOUR home and YOUR City. It will very largely be in future what YOU make it.

Yours very truly,
Jamieson Bone.

Use Training School As Community Centre

London, Ont., Oct. 6 (CP) — Col. T. L. Kennedy, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, last night announced that the air training school at Cayuga, Ont., would be used as a rural youth community centre, that the Ontario government plans to give increased assistance to agricultural research, and that L. E. O'Neill, former director of the Ontario Livestock Branch, had been appointed Provincial Livestock Commissioner.

In co-operation with the Junior Farmer Association in Haldimand County, arrangements have been made for short courses for farm youths to be given at Cayuga in December, January and February. Students will occupy quarters formerly used by airmen in training and will attend classes in a converted hangar.

Col. Kennedy said the Cayuga project will be duplicated in other Ontario counties and the long-range goal is a community centre in every county.

Referring to research plans, Col. Kennedy said research workers could provide technical assistance to farmers with problems of maintaining and incerasing fertility in the soil.

Mr. O'Neill will be in charge of the province's post-war program for livestock, Col. Kennedy said, including expansion of the Animal Nutrition Department at the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph.

Veteran of the heavy fighting in Sicily and Italy and member of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment during its service in the Mediterranean war theatre Captain Jack B. Morgan, son of Dr. W. C. Morgan and Mrs. Morgan of this city, marched with the "repatriates" on Thursday during the official welcome of the Hasty Pees in this city.

Captain Morgan went to the Mediterranean with the 1st Division and was there until January, 1944, when after the battle of Ortona he was returned to England as instructor. In September of the same year he returned to Italy and following the battle of the Lamone River was returned to Canada. He enlisted with the Hasty Pees in February, 1940, as a lieutenant and went to England from Camp Borden in August of the same year.

Capt. Morgan commanded the 3rd company in the parade of H. & P. E. veterans at Picton Fair.

Council to Finance Placing Floodlights at Fairgrounds Charging Same to Parks Board

Assessors Association and Council Will Meet in City, Mayor to Act as Host

Co-operation of the public utilities regarding the installation of piping facilities for city water in the same ditches as used for sanitary sewers was asked by the city council during committee meeting Friday evening when the recommendation was passed asking that wherever possible in new construction the same ditch be used for both facilities.

Installation of facilities for city water in the sanitary sewer ditches would be made under the supervision of the city engineer. Doubling up regarding the installation of both facilities would include both main sewer and lateral ditches.

Dufferin Avenue, between Queen Street and Victoria Ave., will also be put in a state of repair to accommodate vehicular traffic, it was recommended, while the tender of H. J. McFarland Construction Company for excavation and back filling of Purdy Street sewers was accepted.

Purchase Three-ton Truck

Council recommended the purchase of a three-ton truck with dual-purpose axle and combination body for snow removal purposes and other work.

Mayor Frank S. Follwell and any other member of council desirous of attending the convention will act as host to Hon. G. H. Dunbar, Mr. Grey, Mr. Coombe, the president of the Assessors Association, and the two local members of parliament at the forthcoming meeting of the assessors association here.

With the tourist season now practically at an end for another year, council members voted to close the Belleville Tourist Camp on October 27th, with all trailers now occupying the premises to be off the camp grounds by November 1st.

To Finance Project

Following a discussion on parks matters, it was recommended that the cost of installing floodlights at the Belleville fair grounds, amounting to $8,500, be paid by the city, with the cost to be charged back to the Parks Board on terms to be arranged. The city solicitor in the same recommendation was asked to prepare the necessary by-law.

Under city property, the offers of H. Clarke for Lot 24, W. Bleecker, and also the offers of Ambrose McDonald for lot 7 W. Coleman be accepted. The building covenant of M. Wodzark at lot 6 W. Gordon St., was released while the covenant of Mrs. J. A. Robinson was extended for another year.

The city comptroller was asked to obtain an appraisal of the property requested by the Canadian Legion for their memorial home, the appraisal to be obtained from at least two Belleville appraisers.

A committee of Aldermen Chamberlain, Allen, Clarke and Mayor Follwell was appointed to consult with the city solicitor and make a recommendation to council regarding the matter of the provincial government boat house on the Belleville Harbor being retained as city property.

Partridge Hunters On Way to Woods As Season Opens

Partridge hunters' trigger fingers itched today as the official season, which lasts for one week, opened this morning. Several are leaving for the northern part of Hastings County to get the quota of the succulent birds, with weather anything but conducive to good hunting.

Semi-official reports stated that the birds are fairly plentiful in certain parts of the district, but some hunters this morning declared that the farmers have posted signs forbidding hunting on their property. And, the hunters claim, these are the spots where the birds are said to be apparent in goodly numbers.

Among those who left today on the seventy-mile jaunt for the birds was Mr. W. A. Woodley and party. Mr. Woodley, an ardent duck hunter, stated that his hauls of ducks during the past few days have been good. Nine fell to his gun the other day in little over two hours' shooting.

Long Search Reaches Climax In Murder Trial

Cornwall, Oct. 6. (CP)—A long, weary search ended when a shallow grave in lonely swampland country yielded the decomposed body of a man last March. . . . Next Tuesday in Supreme Court here a 33-year-old farmhand will go on trial on a charge of murder.

The body was that of George McFadden, 58, Cardinal, Ont., approximately 35 miles southeast of here. He had disappeared from his home in August of 1943 but the disappearance was not reported to police until the following spring.

In May, 1944, police arrested Clarence Hutt, Williamsburg Township farmer on a charge of uttering a forged document in connection with the sale of McFadden's automobile. A nephew of McFadden, he was sentenced to one year in jail.

Hutt had only a few days of that sentence to serve when McFadden's body was found. Within a few hours the murder charge was laid and Hutt was kept in jail.

Search for McFadden extended into the United States and Western Canada before the trail led back to this district. Police, acting on information obtained through unnamed sources, stomped through greasy backwoods country four miles northeast of Williamsburg, drained the area, shovelled in clay and located the body covered in only a few inches of mud.

Presiding at the trial will be Mr. Justice E. R. E. Chevrier with Cecil Snyder, K.C., deputy attorney-general, prosecuting for the Crown. Hutt's defence will be conducted by J. S. Latchford of Cornwall.

The trial opens in the afternoon and there is no indication as to its length.

ADMIRAL MAKES CHARGE

Washington, Oct. 6 — (CP) — Rear Admiral Husband E. Kimmel testified that the Army failed to advise the navy until two days after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor that a radar check had been recorded on the approach of the Japanese attacking planes, it was disclosed last night in a supplementary report by the Army Investigating Board.

LAVAL EXPELLED

"I call your questions and charges an aggression," Judge Mongibeaux replied. "Guards, lead the defendant out. The session is suspended".

Earlier Laval read into the record a lengthy letter he had written to the Minister of Justice, Sept. 22, protesting the early holding of his trial. This action by the defendant brought from Prosecutor Mornet the charge that Laval was using dilatory tactics in trying to "draw out this trial as long as possible".

"The policy which we have to judge today is criminal", the prosecutor continued. "It is the policy under which we have suffered for four years".

"I have never been an agent of the Germans", Laval interrupted.

Full Discussion.

As his trial went into its third day, defence counsels predicted the former Vichy chief of government would offer a full discussion of his negotiations with the Germans. They said Laval might try to make these points:

That Generalissimo Francisco Franco asked Hitler for part of French Morocco for Spain, but was refused because of Laval's meeting with the Fuehrer the day before.

That the armistice terms with Germany — not the Montoire agreement — were responsible for the collaboration policy.

That Laval was ready to come to a secret understanding with Free French authorities at Algiers after the liberation of North Africa.

The court admitted yesterday that Laval's pre-trial examination was inadequate, although it refused to postpone the trial.

Even the prosecution declined to contest his assertion that he could not be singled out for responsibility because both houses voted constituent powers to Petain July 10, 1940.

The prosecution conceded that Laval could not be held especially responsible for the armistice with Germany.

BETHEL HALL TO HEAR DR. EDGAR AINSLIE

A series of lectures on the book of the Revelation, entitled "The Dawn of the Scarlet Age," starts on Sunday next at Bethel Hall. The lectures will be given by Dr. Edgar Ainslie, who until recently was a member of the faculty of Purdue University. Purdue is a state college in Indiana, and is located in the city of Lafayette, Ind., where Dr. Ainslie resides.

The speaker is a member of a British family that has given three sons to the ministry of the Gospel. Alfred E. Ainslie who some years ago preached in this part of the country, but who is now deceased, and Walter Ainslie of England, are brothers of Dr. Ainslie.

A large chart is used to show the sequences of events so vividly and picturesquely related in the Book of the Revelation.

Coalition Asks Re-election In Oct. 25 Voting

Victoria (CP) — The two old-line parties, traditional enemies in British Columbia since Sir Richard McBride introduced party government into the province in 1903, are asking voters to endorse a coalition of the two, formed in 1941, in the October 25th. provincial general election.

Liberals and Progressive Conservatives, basing their appeal on their wartime record and post-war plans, seek to continue the Coalition government formed four years ago when T. D. Pattullo, Liberal premier from 1933, failed to gain a majority in the election of October 21, 1941. Mr. Pattullo himself did not enter the merger.

Major opposition to the Coalition is the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation which first entered B.C. politics on a large scale in 1933 and through the years has become a strong opposition. Under 38-year-old Harold Winch the C.C.F. is campaigning on a platform of public ownership as far as that is possible within provincial jurisdiction.

Formation of the Coalition government saw John Hart, finance minister and colleague for many years of Mr. Pattullo, named as head of the administration.

The government drew up measures aimed at improving social and living standards and at dissolution the 66-year-old premier said the government felt it had completed its program. "We now require a mandate from the people to proceed with a development policy which involves expenditures of large sums of public funds and which are far-reaching in their effect."

Social Credit in Field.

Four-cornered contests loomed in many of the 48 ridings with the announcement that the Social Credit party, comparatively inactive in previous provincial elections, would place candidates in all ridings.

The C.C.F. planned to nominate 48, Coalitionists 47, and Labor-Progressive at least 25. Lone constituency the Coalitionists are not contesting is Prince Rupert where Mr. Pattulo is running as an independent Liberal. Coalitionists have announced they will support Mr. Pattullo who has been Prince Rupert's legislative representative for 25 years.

Only one member of the 20th. legislature was actually elected as a Coalitionist. He was Byron Johnson, elected in a New Westminster by-election last May to fill the vacancy caused by the death of A. Wells Gray, minister of municipal affairs in the Coalition government.

Coming into power during the Second Great War, the Coalition government faced the task of preparing the province for peace years. It studied educational costs and systems and laid the groundwork for a more advanced system. Commissions were set up to inquire into the lumbering industry and a huge programe of electrification for the benefit of industry and agriculture was charted.

Since Sir Richard McBride broke a 32-year-old tradition and established party government in 1903, British Columbia has voted either Liberal or Conservative governments into office, with the C.C.F. first challenging the two-party rivalry 12 years ago.

Thanksgiving

The approach of Thanksgiving this year should cause all Canadians to reflect on the great debt we owe to a benevolent Providence for the security of peace which we are now enjoying. The past six years have been shadowed by the uncertainties of war which have tempered any thought of celebration.

Our country has completed a good harvest and we can view the future with equanimity. Our boys are home from the battlefronts or coming home and we know their families and loved ones can ask for no greater reward than that. Our thoughts go out to those who have been bereaved by the supreme sacrifice made by those they loved best. They are the ones who have been deeply touched by the price of war. Were it not for the sacrifices made by those who are resting in foreign lands and those who have served so well we would not be enjoying the fruits of victory which we are able to do this year.

With these thoughts, then, in mind it would be well if we paused for a brief period during this time of Thanksgiving and offer up our gratitude in prayer, and thank God that we have been spared the great suffering that has been the lot of those in countries devastated by the savagery of war.

Belleville Should be Prepared

President Truman's action this week in pressing for Congress approval for the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power project is a matter of considerable interest to Canadians. It means an early resumption of that gigantic project's long-delayed progress toward completion.

It would mean a shipping route to the very heart of the country along with a plentiful supply of electric power that would stave off any threatened shortage for a long time to come. If construction is started comparatively soon it would provide employment for thousands of workmen at a time when there is likely to be a period of unemployment.

Industrial firms are attracted by cheap power and this will be available in due course. This is a matter of interest to the whole of the upper St. Lawrence valley, ourselves included, for it means a considerable increase in business activities of all kinds and Belleville will get her share of the increase.

This brings up the thought of industrial sites in the city and there is some opinion here which believes we could do with more space for that purpose. As it is now we are told that when an industry seeks a location in the city about the only places available are those close to residential areas. This in turn brings complaints from residents who might be affected so that our industrial commissions meet pressure from two groups — those who want new industries and those who do not wish to live too closely to factories for reasons which are readily understood. Not only that but we do not think it good policy to use land which has potential use as park property at some time in the future whether it be ten or a hundred years from now.

It has been suggested that an expert be employed to survey the situation and make recommendations which could be studied in good time, but not too long. Our personal view is that our water front should be kept free of further expansion and that industry should be located far enough from residential areas as has been done in other cities as to forestall complaints.

This matter is a big problem and also a pressing one and the main thing is to get started and be prepared with a plan so that we can meet with those who are seeking factory sites and offer them property which will not encroach on the rights of others. If some such plan is not put into motion in the near future then Belleville is going to be the loser when opportunities present themselves as they surely will before and after the St. Lawrence Waterway project is completed.

Truly a War Loan

Nowadays we are being jostled by problems of peace. Almost everything we read, all the utterances of public men, tends to emphasize the fact that the war is now history.

Yet, the Ninth Victory Loan which will be opened to the public on October 22, is definitely a war loan.

There exists no magic wand one can use to waft military forces from the scenes of battle to their normal home surroundings overnight. Unfortunately, long after the enemy cries surrender, the cost of war goes on. It is estimated, for example, that the country of Canada must raise a sum of about $25,000,000 during the present year to provide adequate medical attention and hospitalization for the men who are coming back wounded and sick. Last year members of the House of Commons were told that at that time $750,000,000 would be needed to pay gratuities and take care of re-establishment credits to men returning from battle. One year having passed since then, the cost of that important undertaking has now reached about $900,000,000. In addition to all that, the Canadian people must meet the cost of bringing the troops home, the maintenance of our forces of occupation in Germany. Pay of the men who are waiting demobilisation goes on. Cheques to dependents keep going out until the soldier has his discharge paper.

There are heavy domestic expenditures, made heavier by the unprecedented demands of this period of re-construction in the country, which are included in the total of the Ninth Victory Loan objective. But of this we can be sure. The major portion of the money which Canadians will provide for the purchase of bonds in October and November is needed to cover the cost of war.

Church Gardens

(Montreal Star)

In Plainfield, New Jersey, there is a garden-loving woman, Mrs. Garret Smith, who is making her life's voluntary work the beautification of church property.

"Proprietors of hotels and road-houses," she explains, "spend millions annually on gardens with terraces, trees, plants and fountains. It pays. Crowds flock there." On the other hand, most church grounds do not boast even one garden bench. But Mrs. Smith does not urge upon churchmen simply the beautification of church grounds. She feels that the grounds should be developed usefully into gardens offering a combined "outdoor sanctuary" for religious services and "outdoor parish house" for social activities.

In the last few years, Mrs. Smith's activities have taken her from her home in New England as far as Texas, and scores of churches have found that a little attention to land about the church has done much to maintain interest in congregational activities during the summer months. Experience has shown that such developments have cost the churches little, and the investment has been returned manyfold, not only in the appearance of the property but in the great new interest the experiment has stimulated in the work of the church.

Tragic Memorial

(London Daily Mail)

On August 23, 1944, 38 children were killed when a United States Liberator crashed on the village school at Freckleton, Lancashire.

Just three days short of the first anniversary of the tragedy a garden playground has been dedicated to the memory of these young victims and to the future happiness of generations to come.

It is a gift from the officers and men of the American air station nearby, built by them and paid for by subscriptions amounting to $10,400.

Mothers of the dead children took part in the simple but moving ceremony of dedication, while former schoolmates played in the background on swings, slides and roundabouts.

A granite stone, covered with a white silk parachute and a Union Jack, was unveiled.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

(Copyright, 1945, Edgar A. Guest)

FIRST CHOICE

Upon the fickle winds of chance
Careers of men must swing,
For singers often want to dance
And dancers want to sing.
Whatever be the task men find
To fashion or to hew,
There is another heart and mind
Have always wished to do.

There's many a teacher in the schools
Would rather paint or write.
The actor longs to work with tools,
Mechanics sing at night.
Against the labors of the day,
To which men grow resigned,
Are other forms of work or play
To please the heart and mind.

Thus, some who toil at lathe and bench
Give hearts to violins.
The skilful man with plane and wrench
Would preach us from our sins.
There's none of us, though high or low,
But hopes his lifetime through
That some day freedom he will know
For all the heart would do.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

"Poteen" (or potheen") is derived from Irish "poitin," meaning "little pot." The original potten was whisky made in small quantities in Irish home stills to avoid paying the British liquor duties.

Shakespeare says:

If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work.
But when they seldom come, they wish'd for come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.

What makes the hair stand up on a cat's back?

Each hair on the bodies of most mammals is equipped with a tiny muscle capable, when properly stimulated, of pulling the hair erect. The muscles are all connected with the sympathetic nervous system by means of nerve fibres and they can act simultaneously in response to a single stimulus. They are especially well developed on the backs of cats and certain other mammals. When a cat is suddenly frightened or infuriated the hair on its back rises with an explosive-like rapidity. It has been suggested that this raising of the hair was originally a protective feature in all animals, similar to the porcupine's ability to raise its quills in defence.

What Indian is pictured on the buffalo nickel?

No particular Indian posed for the design on the United States five-cent piece bearing a buffalo on the obverse side and an Indian head on the reverse side. The head is the composite of several models and is the sculptor's ideal of an American aborigine. James Earle Fraser, an American sculptor, designed the nickel, which was first issued in 1913. "The head," declared Fraser, "is an idealized portrait and represents no particular Indian." Several Indians have obtained considerable publicity by being introduced in different parts of the country as "the Indian chief whose likeness appears on the buffalo nickel."

Triple Confession Read Into Records Of War Guilt Trial

Lunenberg, Germany, Oct. 6 (CP) — The prosecution read into the war guilt trial of 45 Nazi concentration camp functionaries Friday a triple confession by hard faced Irma Grese who said all S.S. personnel shared guilt for German atrocities at the institutions.

The young blonde guard has been called the "worst of the S.S. women." Her three statements were made after the Belsen camp was overrun last spring and were read despite defence contention that they were obtained under duress.

"Himmler (Heinrich Himmler, Gestapo chief who took his own life) is responsible for all that has happened, but I suppose I have as much guilt as all the others above me," her first statement said.

"I mean by this that simply by being in the S.S. and seeing crimes committed on orders from those in authority and doing nothing to protest or stop them from being committed makes anybody in the S.S. as guilty as anybody else. The crimes I refer to are gassing people at Oswiecim and the killing of thousands at Belsen by starvation and untended disease.

"I consider the crime to be murder."

Affidavit Secured.

An affidavit by Elizabeth Harbst, a Czech girl, read earlier, accused Hilde Lobauer, a woman warder at the Belsen camp, of torturing women by pretending to save them from a ditch in which bodies were floating apparently dead and then pushing them under the water with a pole.

Previously the court heard in an affidavit how Ando Engel, another Czech, protected his hands with pieces of cloth while burning corpses. Anton Polanski, another of the accused, took the cloth from his hands and stuffed it into his mouth, although it had already been in contact with the dead bodies.

Statements Read.

The prosecutor, drawing toward a close of its case, started reading statements by the defendants. The first was by Helena Koppers, a lengthy accusation against nine other defendants.

The woman declared another defendant, Irma Grese, sent an average of 30 prisoners a day to their deaths at the hands of armed guards at Oswiecim by ordering them to go beyond a guarded barrier. The Jewish prisoners could not understand orders of the guards given in German, the statement said, and were shot.

The murder of 300 internees at the Oswiecin camp was described yesterday.

Capital Closeups

By JACK BRAYLEY

Ottawa, Oct. 6 (CP) — A school for parliamentary tyros has been adding polish to some of the 100 new members of the new House of Commons.

A brisk, bilingual class of Liberals is meeting regularly and listening to the experience of sagacious and exuberant Jean Francois Pouliot, veteran member for Temiscouata in Quebec.

A group of new C.C.F. members have been schooled by Stanley Knowles, member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Pouliot's classes are a revival of something he started back in 1936. Veterans, remembering previous benefits to the Liberal party of his schooling in procedure in the House rules, persuaded him to take the new members in tow.

He sent out a general invitation and for his first class 40 members turned up. He gave them a lesson in how to ask questions, what parliamentary language and terms meant and ended each session by taking them on a tour to illustrate his points on how sessional papers were handled.

He asked them to shoot questions at him.

"They are the most alert bunch I've ever handled," said Mr Pouliot, whose 21 years in the House makes him its sixth oldest member in point of service.

Mr. Pouliot measures his years by his unbroken record in the House and smilingly won't admit to his age of 55. "I was first elected in 1924 and that means I reach my majority December 1 — I'm no older than that."

FILIBUSTER: Private Members' Day returned to the Commons this week and as in pre-war sessions, three was little indication that the back benches would get anything on the statute books.

Nobody would admit to filibustering in the Commons but this process of marathon-talking often sees a Private Members' pet bill go to the end of the list which means it has to wait its turn for re-introduction—weeks, perhaps months.

PURCHASE MILLION PAIRS

Ottawa, Oct. 6 —(CP)— The United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration has purchased 1,000,000 pairs of Canadian shoes for distribution in the Low Countries and France and possibly Norway. It was learned Friday.

It was estimated the shoes would be sold for $3.50 to $4 a pair, which would bring Canadian manufacturers $3,500,000 to $4,000,000.

LUCUBRATIONE ON LUBRICATION

A reader inquires whether mineral oil is harmful to use regularly as laxative or internal lubricant.

Mineral oil, liquid petroleum, liquid paraffin, Russian oil, American oil, as it is variously called, does not coat the lining of stomach or intestine to serve as lubricant, but mixes intimately with the stomach and intestinal contents, becomes emulsified.

Mineral oil is not antiseptic. It is not absorbed, hence has no food value. Contrary to common theory it does not cause or predispose to cancer.

Mineral oil retards digestion by coating particles of food and preventing the digestive juices from reaching them. It interferes with absorption of minerals and vitamins from the food, for the same reason. It prevents reabsorption of bile from the intestine and thereby lessens both biliary and pancreatic secretion. This lessening of secretion of bile and pancreatic juice means lessening or failure of the normal physiological stimulation of the bowel wall, lowering of intestinal "tone" or vigor of peristaltic action.

Mineral oil also prevents absorption of water from the fecal masses in the colon and this tends to keep the intestinal contents both bulky and soft. These effects may be desirable in a few exceptional cases. But the untoward effects of mineral oil—interference with digestion and assimilation of essentials of nutrition — outweigh any such beneficial effects, in my opinion, and condemn it, in whatever form, as a remedy for or corrective of constipation.

I have some suggestions which, if you follow them, will do all the good mineral oil can do for you and at the same time actually benefit your health.

Buy from drugstore or seedstore a pound of unground flaxseeds. Take a teaspoonful or a tablespoonful daily, washed down with water or mixed with jelly or breakfast cereal. I believe this more nearly serves the purpose of a natural intestinal lubricant than mineral oil.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Going to the Chair

Young woman gets so nervous and weak she can hardly walk out of the dentist's office after a filling. She is not afraid, sits quietly for the injection to numb the tooth, but when the drill starts she goes all to pieces.

(K. C. W.)

Answer—For such a patient the dentist or the physician may give the patient a suitable sedative before such treatment.

Country Doctor's Book

Once you recommended highly a kind of guidebook for diabetics by a country doctor somewhere in Michigan. Recently I learned that I have diabetes and so . .

(O.C.H.)

Answer—"A Book for Us Diabetics," by Dr. Don H. Duffie, Central Lake, Michigan, the best $2 investment a diabetic can make or a friend can make for him. Yes, Dr. Duffie is a country doctor of whom all country doctors—and city doctors—may be proud.

Rheumatiz

Started taking 200,000 units of vitamin D daily . . . in a short time I noticed a marked improvement. However, Dr.——learned about it and had me so upset . . . I asked that he consult two doctors at—— hospital. He told me they advised against it . . . . but I preferred to continue rather than do nothing at all . . . . in another two weeks I was up and around, the swelling gone from hands . . . in six months so much better I was practically well.

(Mrs.——)

Answer—Thank you, Ma'am. In the booklet "The Ills Called Rheumatism" I describe briefly the massive dose vitamin D treatment (200,000 to 500,000 units daily) but that is all—the treatment requires your physician's supervision. For the booklet send ten cents and stamped self addressed envelope. If I had chronic arthritis I'd make it a rule to eat an optimal daily ration of calcium and vitamin D as regularly as breakfast regardless of any special treatment. I give details of this in the pamphlet "Calcium and Rheumatiz"—available on written request (clipping will not suffice if you provide stamped self-addressed envelope.

Another Policyholder Reports...

"MY HUSBAND owns three policies in The Mutual Life of Canada, which he has taken out at various times for my protection and our retirement. Two are Ordinary Life and one is Family Income.

"If anything happens to him and I am left alone to bring up the children, I shall have an income from the insurance, and some cash to pay the bills and a reserve for emergencies. And if he lives to retirement age the cash values will give us an income.

"But I also have a policy on my own life, because I want him to be able to provide proper care for the children if anything happens to me. Our Mutual Life representative pointed out that Canadian government figures prove that in one case out of every three the wife dies before the husband.

DEBATE USE OF ANCIENT MOUND.

Bradford-on-Avon, England — (CP) — The urban district council in this Wiltshire town has decided to build ten temporary houses on a prehistoric site mound, in spite of Councillor Guy Underwood who discovered the mound, dated by experts at 2,000 B.C. in the bronze age.

B. S. St. O'Neil, inspector of ancient monuments, said he was glad to hear that a minimum of damage would be done the site. He would prefer that none of the houses be placed within the earth bank but in view of all circumstances he was not in a position to press the point.

Councillor Underwood said the program would "destroy" the mound.

Windsor Board Votes Limited Assistance To Striking Workers

Windsor, Oct. 6—(CP)—Windsor board of control members have voted limited financial assistance to striking workers of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd., after hearing a delegation from Local 200, United Automobile Workers, at a special session in Mayor Arthur Reaume's office.

City council will be asked Tuesday to ratify the action at a special meeting.

The strike, called by the union Sept. 12, has kept approximately 10,000 production workers idle and barred 1,000 non-striking office employees from working by a union picket line.

Union spokesmen said that only their members were given relief by the union and that only food vouchers are issued. It was reported that union funds are not ample for shelter or fuel allowances. Of the 10,000 on strike, the union said from 8,500 to 8,700 are members.

The union has received almost 400 applications for assistance.

The meeting "was called primarily to discuss what, if anything, we are going to do to assist the families of those on strike," Mayor Reaume said. "We've got to make up our minds. There's no use beating around the bush. Either we help them or we don't."

One-Storey Type School Recommended

Toronto, Oct. 6 —(CP)— An interim report by a special Ontario government committee Friday recommended development of a one-storey type of elementary school in the province. The committee was appointed in Nov. 1944.

The report said a one-storey building lent itself to easy extension, greater flexibility of arrangement, speedy construction and easy demolition.

"Conditions of site, local materials and the ingenuity of the architect would prevent the building of stereotyped schools throughout the province," the report added.

Tomcats Win Battle With Northern Rats

Edmonton (CP) — Tooth to tooth street fighting by scrap-happy North Edmonton tomcats backed by the artillery of a sharpshooting resident have succeeded in repelling an invasion into the city of big, tough Norwegian rats.

Co-operating with the City Health Department, the cats which nightly prowl the North Edmonton dump, battled the fierce rodents, killing two of them.

The first encounter eliminated two-thirds of the disease-spreading trio, apparently brought here in a shipment of goods from Eastern Canada or the United States.

A short time later a North Edmonton citien put an end to the third invader and added a notch to his .22 rifle. After a search to uncover further intruders the health authorities expressed confidence that the threatened plague had been stopped and Edmonton was again ratless.

Queenston-Chippawa Generating Plant
Burlington Transformer Station

HYDRO provides fast, dependable

"Made to order" SERVICE

Do you realize that Hydro power must be made to your order . . . made and delivered to you so quickly that it would seem to be always there? Electricity cannot be stored. It must be made within a tiny fraction of a second of the time it is used. The flow of water to the generators is controlled by sensitive automatic gates, so as to make only enough for the demands of the moment.

Whenever you flip a switch, you use electricity before the water which made it can leave the power house. Your order is received and filled faster than a good camera can wink its eye. Yet the power comes to you through a giant transformer station, a local distribution station, a small transformer near your home . . . all connected by many miles of transmission and distribution lines.

Millions of dollars worth of equipment and a multitude of watchful personnel stand ready to serve you at the touch of your finger on a switch, at any moment of the day or night. That is what Ontario has learned to expect from Hydro service.

A Municipal Distribution Station

ONLY THIS ONE PART DEPENDS ON YOU

Your house must be adequately wired if you are to have full benefit from the electricity you may want to use. If your place is wired for a range and a waterheater, you can assume that you have enough wiring from the small transformer to your house. From there, be sure that you have enough circuits and plenty of outlets conveniently placed in every room. Remember that any one outlet can supply only a limited amount of power efficiently and safely. Remember, too, that you will want an ever-growing number of electrical conveniences in the years to come: The economical time to wire adequately is when you are building or making major alterations. Plan now for your electrical future by wiring completely.

Air Stewardesses Important Factor in Modern Travel

St. Paul, Minn. (CP) — Young women who intend to fly high in this post-war world are attending a new kind of finishing school here.

It is called a "comportment course," and it's for the sole benefit of stewardesses of Northwest Airlines, a company which intends to combine charm and efficiency in its feminine personnel.

Each student must write a thesis before graduation—a booklet in which she sets down her aims and records her daily accomplishments. Here's a sample extract from a typical thesis:

"In building a career, the development of personality is something to be planned—a personality does not fall upon you. The stewardess is successful if she possesses a good quality, and it is her greatest asset."

The writer is a stewardess newly engaged by Camille L. (Rosie) Stein, one of the best known women executives in aviation. The booklet records the lessons she has learned in the finishing course which Northwest has provided so that, in meeting the public, she may be an impressive representative of the airline.

There is a physical fitness program, in which the stewardess is taught how to recondition her body if it has noticeable faults; to stand at ease with perfect balance; to walk lightly; to sit without sprawling.

Exercise isn't intended to develop bulging muscles, explains instructor Zell McConnell, an expert on the handling and developing of career girls. Its purpose, she says, is to provide figures, weight control, symmetrical lines, grace, firmness of muscles, perfect proportions. She adds:

"For good posture, one must think tall, walk tall and stretch tall."

There is a lot more to this physical fitness from the "toe tonic" and "foot arch" designed to correct foot troubles, to the "neck nip" to strengthen muscles of the neck and throat.

Value of a Smile.

Keep smiling—that's one of the injunctions, for a smile isn't just a dimple and a gleam of teeth; it's the reflection of a mental attitude.

"If you can't smile," writes the student, a bit waggishly, in her booklet, "try to imitate somebody who can."

The girls are taught the secrets of makeup, first studying the contour of their faces in order to bring out lights and shadows. They are given formulas for [illegible] their hair in condition; to pick their wardrobes; to buy jewelry; to budget their earnings according to the most effective expenditure of available funds.

Stewardesses, explains Miss Stein, are highly qualified even before they come to Northwest Airlines—most of them are college graduates and have held important positions in other fields. But she insists that they take this course so they may achieve the ultimate. For Miss Stein, who is partial to her stewardesses, puts it this way:

"The stewardess is one of the airline's best advertisements."

God of Thanksgivings past
—stay by our side.
God of our harrowed years
—still be our guide.
Thou who delivered us from our distress
Teach us humility, that from our anguish

Apportion to us honesty; grant us integrity,

Making Illustrations To Fit Symphonies

By H. P. A. IN WINDSOR STAR

Sometimes the artists who design covers for phonograph record albums do a good job in making them appropriate to the music, and sometimes their choice would seem open to question, but probably that is because music symbolism is not always clear, and arguments are still current as to the meaning of certain symphonies, written a century or more ago.

When record makers first started putting complete symphonies in albums, they were content with plain covers bearing the name of the composer, the orchestra, conductor and maker of records. But later copies have borne designs supposed to give one an idea of the music.

For dance albums and songs, the task is fairly easy. You'll see pictures of Benny Goodman, Glenn Miller and Byng Crosby on their albums, and what could be more appropriate than a Mississippi River steamboat, darkies and bales of cotton for selections from Jerome Kern's "Showboat," in which "Ole Man River" is the best known theme?

Problem More Difficult

With symphonies, the problem is a little more difficult. The artist wants to show what the symphony means and devise a picture that might be called up in the mind of the listener. Again he may work on the title of the symphony, for many of them are named as well as numbered, such as Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique," Beethoven's "Pastoral" or the "New World" symphony of Anton Dvorak, the Czech composer who came to Iowa and lived in a Bohemian colony near Cedar Rapids where he wrote music so thoroughly American in feeling that some people think the song "Going Home" (the principal theme of the second movement of the symphony) is a traditional melody of the Old South.

But one artist who designed a cover for the New World symphony picked an Alaskan totem pole; Alaska is American, all right, but the composer embodied far more of the feeling of the Negro spiritual in his symphony than he did that of the American Indian, although he is supposed to have done that by some who write about music and its meaning.

Singularly appropriate, as far as the commonly understood meaning of the music concerned, is a cover designed for Tschaikowsy's Sixth Symphony, the one universally called the "Pathetic Symphony," because it throbs with a great sadness, relieved in spots with the music of hope and reassurance and even joy. The artist who did the job drew a hooded figure descending a stone stairs in a vaulted chamber, suggesting the darkness of an underground tomb. And you get it; "down into the tomb," which is just exactly what you think when you hear the unutterable sadness of the bassoon passage which opens the symphony and the dirge which pervades the entire final movement.

Sunshiny Melodies

Another seemingly appropriate cover is one designed for the Third Symphony of Brahms, which has more sunshiny melodies in it than you can find anywhere else.

Years ago when the radio was new and Walter Damrosch was introducing the works of the great symphonic masters to the listening public and giving his explanation of their meaning, he had his orchestra play a bit from the third movement of the symphony and then asked, "Now doesn't that make you think of taking a walk on a Sunday afternoon in the early summer time?" I was being educated in music at that time, and the suggestion stuck. It became associated in my mind with a certain street in my home town where there was a flowering quince bush, a smoke tree and other shrubbery they used to grow 60 years back. Thus I never hear the symphony without that picture comes to my mind, and my name for it is "The Sunday Afternnon symphony."

Possibly the artist who drew the cover design for my "Sunday Afternoon" symphony heard what Mr. Damrosch had to say about it those many years ago. Possibly the idea arose in his mind, just as it did in the mind of Dr. Damrosch. But, anyway he chose to picture strollers walking in a square with Old World houses and shops for a background. They wear the clothes of Brahms' day and you can see that they are dressed in their best, out for a walk on a Sunday afternoon.

Two of Mendelssohn's symphonies are easy, for he named one of them "Scotch" and the other "Italian." For the Scotch symphony (which has unmistakable Scotch music in it) the cover on a copy we have at home bears a castle and a couple of kilted figures dancing in the foreground. Barring that the castle looks too much like a chessboard the picture is Scotch all right. And as the "Italian" symphony opens with a strain like an Italian street song (the same feeling you get in ("Funicull, Funicula") you see just that on the cover.

Presbyterian Music

I have never seen a cover design for Mendelssohn's "Reformation" symphony, but if I did, I would expect the interior of a Scottish kirk with the domine in the pulpit giving out a psalm. If ever a symphony had a lot of Presbyterian music in it, Mendelssohn's "Reformation" is the one.

They did not have much trouble designing a cover for Beethoven's Fifth symphony. A big white "V" for victory and the morse code symbol for "V" three dots and a dash, on a vivid orange background did the trick. This was the symbolism which made the Allies adopt the symphony, written by a German, as a musical slogan to infuriate the Germans during the war. The symphony starts with three short beats and a long one, and that cadence often recurs in it. They used to say that it represented fate knocking at the door, but that symbolism is out of date and Beethoven's Fifth means victory for the Allies to millions now.

As to what might be done in designing a symphony cover, I might suggest one for Brahms' First. When you hear the last movement it sounds like your idea of seraphim and cherubim singing triumphant praise before the throne of God. But an artist would have to handle that with care. Possibly the interior of a vast Gothic cathedral would be better. At any rate the theme of that movement is religious and it does triumph.

Tales of Spiders and Lace

MARIE VALLENCE
(In Christian Science Monitor)

"Oh, Look at that little yellow spider!" my niece exclaimed.

I looked. It was smaller than a seed-pearl and had a seed-pearl's delicate sheen. Really an exquisite marvel was this minute creature with its pale golden legs, nimbler than any acrobat's as they ran along the air-borne filament spinning out from the spider's voyage through space away from the flower to which her thread-tip was tied. By mistake, she had strayed indoors upon a bouquet, but her venturesome instinct would not be denied. Voyage she must upon ether like many of her kin, whethed indoors or out!

The travel of spiders over autumn fields is a wonderful sight. On serene dawns, young and old will rise on their hind legs, spin out a bit of gossamer, and let the air waft them where it will. Upon these fairy aerials they sail off through iridescent light, trusting the earth to supply landing. Perhaps the first dreamer about balloons got his idea from watching the flights of spiders!

Personally, I have a sort of affection for spiders, dating back to childhood and a tale I read then. Clearly I remember how a fleeing chieftain hid in a cave and slept there, overcome by fatigue. During his hours of sleep, a spider wove her web across the cave's mouth, garnished the grim rock with her silken lace. Soldiers in hot pursuit saw this lace, and said to each other: "He could not have entered there—the web is unbroken." So they galloped on and the chieftain's life was saved. I've forgotten his name. Was it Robert Bruce, defender of Scotland? In any event, from that day on spiders have seemed to me not evil, but beneficent.

Like human lace-makers, the spiders have their names! Among them are Agalena and Theridion and Epeira diadema, our common garden spider, whose circular lace spreads across the tips of hollyhocks or anchors itself among stiffer lily leaves. Once, for a long time, I enjoyed such a beautiful web, spun between two tall stems of lilies in our perennial border. For weeks, the Epeira sat at the centre of her web-by house, head downwards, as her habit is. Maybe the puffs of perfume from the lilies' white mouths brought her delight, as they did me. She was a striking creature, this eight-legged maker of lace, with her bold brown body bearing a triple golden cross. It was not I, but the wind, who finally tore her home away. Theridion is a stalwart title, from the Greek signifying "little wild creature." If you find a gossamer covering over the ripening grapes on your vines this autumn, don't tear it off! The Theridion's work will protect your fruits from the attack of lesser insects. The Agelena has another manner of spinning—she erects a fragile, fairy tent upon the tips of the grass and sits out of sight in her silken tunnel underneath. On certain summer mornings, the cropped lawns show clusters of tents, aglisten with dew, each a veritable masterpiece of ephemeral architecture. It is as if, silently by night, an encampment of sultanas had convened to sit in decorous withdrawal beneath their silvery canopies!

Italy has been for centuries a home of lacemaking, and I remember visiting the lace-mart in Florence some fifteen years ago. It was a delight to watch the lively faces of the women as they bargained over the products of their own strong, nimble hands! Peasant women they were, who had stridden down the hillsides with loaded baskets, the contents of which would soon be turned into soiled coins of the city. Into every square of lace its creator puts a bit of dream, together with her fingers' skill. The dreams of hill folk are clean and simple. The mats I bought are cleanadds mb mats I bought reflect that; for they are oblong and strong of mesh with threads of two colors, yellow and cream. The yellow of spiders is in them and the vigor of living vine. On many a clear Tuscan morning, their maker must have stood in her own vineyard, watching the spiders at work, seeing the shapes of grapes and their leaves. A stalwart woman, whose black eyes grew brilliant as she pinched the webbedecked fruits. How beautiful their purple was shining through the lace! Purple was a color she loved. She had it on her own head and her skirt was scarlet beneath her green apron. I think of her when I lay the mats upon my table. For fifteen summers, her handiwork has served me well and there is long life in it.

Greek girls did beautiful embroidery. Chlamy's and chiton were banded with rich color as were the togas of the early Romans. In those days, the garments of men were also rich and bright. Graceful Penelopes in the isles of Greece busied themselves with gold and colored borders for their husbands' tunics, even as, centuries before them, the wives of the Pharaohs had busied themselves beside the Nile. Thousands of years ago, Egypt was famous for its flax and for linen finer than any that is machine-made. However, it was reserved for later ages to develop the delicate art of lace. True lace was part of the Renaissance—that great rebirth of the arts, which began in Italy and washed like a wave over all Europe. This happened in the fourteenth century, a hundred years ahead of America's discovery. To sail out into uncombed space, Columbus, the Genoan, left a land where horses were caparisoned in gold-thread lace. Dreams of the human heart are tameless and unpredictable, for the boy Christopher had been bred to the trade of wool-comber like his father before him. Yes his fingers knew the feel of fine wool, yet he went out from the city where lords slept in lace night-caps, to weave a vast, fleeting lace upon the silver waters with keels of ships!

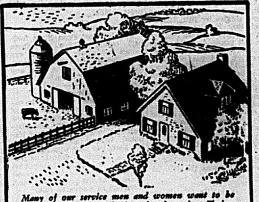
VICTORY MUST NOT BE IN VAIN!

NOW that the war is over and the world is at peace, it's a time for rejoicing, thanksgiving and of gratitude. Rejoicing because victory is ours; thanksgiving to God; and gratitude to our service men and women. All of us owe a great debt to these men and women who gave up the best years of their lives that we might be free. Money can never repay this debt we owe. But money—and the things money can buy—will provide them with medical care and attention, educational opportunities and a new chance in a world at peace. Your purchase of Victory Bonds in the Ninth Victory Loan is your opportunity to show your appreciation and gratitude to Canada's gallant service men and women.

53,073 Canadian service men and women were wounded in the war. More than 9,000 others were prisoners-of-war. Many of these will need medical care for a long time. Your purchase of Victory Bonds will help these men and women along the road to recovery.

Thousands of Canadian boys went direct from school into the fighting forces. Today these young men must be trained in peacetime occupations and equipped to compete with more experienced workmen. We owe them the opportunity of a fresh start in life.

Nearly 38,000 Canadian service men made the supreme sacrifice that we might enjoy freedom—and our way of life. Today Canada asks you to lend your money to help dependent wives, mothers and children by the payment of pensions.



Many of our service men and women want to be independent—to be in business for themselves. Today, your country needs your extra dollars to pay these men and women gratuities with which they can establish a business, buy a home or own a farm.

Claude Passeau Hurls 1-Hitter, 2nd in World Series History, To Defeat Detroit Tigers 3-0

Chicago Pitcher Had Only Twenty-Eight Face Him in Entire Game

By SID FEDER

Chicago, Oct. 6 (AP)—Chicago Cubs brought their first halfway world series lead in 37 years into their own backyard today before an expectant crowd of 44,200 for another whack at the dazed Detroit Tigers who sincerely wished they had said "Goodby, Mr. Chips" before they ever said hello.

Mr. Chips is curver Claude Passeau who appeared in a world series contest for the first time yesterday and went to town on Detroit in a manner that made world series history, allowing one hit and one base on balls as the Cubs —took the third game 3-0.

With a season record of 17 victories and nine defeats, Passeau was dubbed "Chips" by his boss, Jolly Cholly Grimm, because the pitcher has some bone chips in the elbow of his salary wing which brought on an operation last spring.

When Passeau finished up facing just 28 batters for the all-time series slinging stunt, the Cubs were in front two games to one for the first time in eight fall frolics they've been in since 'way back in 1908.

On top of Wednesday's opener victory 9-0 this marked the first time any club has been blanked twice in the post-season set since the Yankees shut out the Giants in the first two games in 1921, and then lost the series. Passeau's performance put the Tigers up against the high hurdle of taking three of the four games, starting here today.

That's why the generous bookmaking gentlemen not only zipped the Chicago champs up to 5-11 to take the whole pot, but for the first time in this series tabbed them in an individual game—5-6 in today's game.

Like Prim to Beat Trout.

Also they liked old Ray (Pappy) Prim, the greying, 38-year-old southpaw to top the forgotten man of this series, Dizzy (strong arm) Trout.

It's the Cubs' first roll of the dice with a left-hander, and they're hoping 13-game winner Prim has better luck than two off-hand heavers the Tigers tried —Hal Newhouser, who was practically pulverized in the opener, and squat Stubby Overmire, who ran into the red-hot Passeau and one bad inning together yesterday.

The bad inning was the fourth, when Peanuts Lowrey's double, a walk and singles by Bill Nicholson and Roy Hughes pushed a pair or runs into the cash register for the ball game—something the record Detroit series crowd of 55,000 didn't find too pleasant.

This chalked up Nicholson's fifth run batted in for the set to date, which not only installed him as head man of the series in the important R.B.I. department, but constituted some pretty fair clouting by the guy just wound up the worst hitting season of his career.

Reulbach Hurled One-Hitter.

But you can't put anything in front of that job Mr. Chips wrote in the record books yesterday. The only previous one-hitter the series ever saw was the job Ed Reulbach turned in for the Cubs against the White Sox in 1906, and compared to Claude's classic it's not even close.

Along with the hit Jiggs Donahue got, Reulbach gave up a run, half a dozen walks, let go a wild pitch and hit one batsman. The 36-year-old Passeau walked only one, opening the sixth, and this runner was erased on a double play immediately afterward. Earlier, Rudy York had singled with two away in the second and was stranded.

Passeau wound up getting 11 men in a row, and in the second inning he pushed a wide breaking curve for a third strike past Greenberg.

Sports Roundup

(By HUGH FULLERTON, JR)

New York, Oct. 6 —(AP)—Possibly Boxing Commissioner Eddie Eagan was right in throwing the book at Harold Green and his retine for that near-riot after the Rocky Graziano fight, but this corner can't quite understand his reasoning . . . Sol Gold and Freddie Brown, who did their best to keep Green under control but couldn't hold him, were handed suspensions along with the rest . . . possibly Eddie intended it as a warning that the commission wouldn't stand for any more such Shennanigans, but it doesn't jib with the penalties he has handed out on other occasions . . . For instance, there was Freddie Fiducia's bribe story when, as we got it, the decision was: "We don't believe it, but you get 30 days for not telling us sooner." . . . Anyway, Green, Gold and Brown all were painted pretty black.

Quote, Unquote.

Bob Higgins, Penn State football coach: "There are three things everybody thinks he can do better than the other fellow—build a fire, run a hotel and coach a football team."

Dot's All, Brothers.

Detroit Lions are sure to extend one of the streaks against the Green Bay Packers tomorrow and hope it's the right one. Detroit has won six straight National League games but have lost their last nine with the Packers . . . Depth of despair as recorded in a Rutgers handout on today's Swarthmore game: "Neither of the teams will start the game in a favored role."

World Series Notes

By JERRY LISKA

Chicago, Oct. 6 (AP)—With Chicago Cubs taking up in the world series where St. Louis Cardinals left off last year, a terrific ticket demand today greeted the Windy City phase of the fall classic.

Choice box seats are said to be bringing scalpers as much as $200 a set, and long-apportioned reserved grand-stand seats are attracting upwards of $75.

As the battle scene changed, the experts were firmly convinced that the Bruins would repeat the Cardinals' convincing National League triumph in 1944. Like the Red Bird contingent the Cubs have amazed American League die-hards with their fielding dexterity.

Scribes who picked the Tigers, now admit the American Leaguers only have a chance if they get air-tight pitching and a lot of long ball hitting from Hank Greenberg and Rudy York. Otherwise, they reason, the eight-year age difference in fielders between the clubs—the Tigers average 35 and the Cubs 27—will hand Chicago the title on a platter.

The Cubs, who paced the National League in hitting and fielding all the way, are doing the same thing in the series with a .277 swat average and a perfect score afield with 106 chances. The Tigers, with Greenberg's three-run homer in the second game the only bright spot, are batting a puny .17 and have committed two errors and two passed balls.

Toronto, Oct. 6 — (CP) — At the risk of endangering the solidarity of Ontario-Quebec bicycling groups, this department feels bound to report a slight difference of opinion (involving a few 100,000 miles or so) between Romeo Morin, president of the Metropole Cycling Club of Montreal, and C. B. Raynham of (13 Fern Ave.) Weston, a Toronto suburb.

Raynham is chief consul for Canada of the Cyclists Touring Clubs of England and he looks askance at Morin's recent statements in Ottawa concerning the "longest cycling tour ever made by a Canadian."

Morin, who didn't specify the length of the trip beyond saying it was his third tour of more than 1,000 miles this year, also volunteered this information: he has cycled 20 years, has travelled 85,000 miles since acquiring a cyclometer 17 years ago, has used 41 tires since buying his first machine and has had 250 flats.

Raynham doesn't take issue with the number of flats, but he's mildly reproachful on the mileage question. "To those of us who cycle 10,000 to 20,000 miles a year," says Raynham in a letter to this office, "Morin's record of 85,000 miles in 17 years is a joke."

A little checking gives Raynham the edge. He is credited in newspaper files with a recorded 200,000 mileage from 1929 to July this year. In that stretch his bicycle has taken him to Montreal eight times, Quebec five, Sarnia four, Sault Ste. Marie twice, North Bay five, Ottawa seven, to the Adirondacks five and to Georgia once. Before 1929, he burned up highways in England, France, Belgium and Germany.

Raynham contends his friend Gus Hogben, president of the Maple Leaf Cycling Club in Hamilton, can give Morin some pointers on wheel wisdom too. Hogben is 58 and lost his right arm at Ypres in 1915, but still has managed to ride a bicycle more than 10,000 miles a year for the last 13 years.

Teaching himself to ride with an artificial arm was "easy," said Hogben.

He finished eighth among more than 50 contestants in the 175-mile race from Quebec to Montreal in 1940. For the last six years, Hogben and Raynham have been the only Canadians to earn a cycling honor rating on mileage charts issued yearly in England

Hogben wrote Raynham that "some of your tours would make Morin's record look like a ride around the block."

The two Ontario cyclists confess they can't compete with Tommy Goodwin, who covered 100,000 miles in 500 days in England 7 years ago. Still, they think Morin better check his figures.

How about it, Mr. Morin?

Burrards Outfoot St. Catharines To Win by 12-6 Score

Vancouver Lacrosse Team Appears Headed for the Dominion Title

By LORNE BRUCE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Vancouver, Oct. 6 — (CP)—St. Catharines Athletics must find some answer for Vancouver Burrards' speed if they hope to retain the Canadian Senior Men's lacrosse championship.

Burrards buzzed all around the eastern champions for an easy 12-6 victory here Friday night in the first game of the best-of-five series and established themselves as favorites for the second game at New Westminster Monday.

Burrards' early jitters and the goal-tending of Bill Whittaker in the St. Catharines' net combined to keep the teams on even terms for the first 25 minutes but after that the Western champions took control and won going away.

George Cleverley's Athletics looked ponderous beside the fleet Burrards. Although the Garden City crew outweighed Burrards, the weight appeared to be in the wrong places.

Superb Condition

The superb condition that won the western championship for Burrards was the deciding factor as they got off on the right foot in the Dominion finals. Coach Johnny Dale has been giving his team vitamin tablets and last night it looked as if the "speed-balls" may have been beneficial.

A capacity crowd of slightly more than 6,000 fans saw the western champions outfoot Athletics from the opening whistle. Once Burrards settled down and had their passing plays clicking the St. Catherines never looked as if they would win.

Part Theale, Burrards' husky defenceman who usually plays a quietly efficient game that doesn't catch the fans' eyes, chose last night to break loose and his first-half scoring flurry was just what was needed to settle the wobbly Vancouver team.

Failed to Solve Defence

Burrards failed to solve the defence of goalie Whittaker until Theale's blazing shot from 20 feet out tied the count at 1-1 shortly before the first quarter ended. Theale added another early in the second to put Burrards' ahead and several minutes later set up the play that gave Vancouver a 5-3 lead and an injection of confidence.

For the remainder of the game, it was just a question of what the score would be. Burrards finished the first half with a 6-3 lead, increased the margin to 11-6 in the third and scored the only goal of the fourth as St. Catharines slowed down to a walk.

Turn Aside 13 in Quarter

The shots-stopped record shows what Whittaker did in the first half. Big Bill turned aside 13 in the first quarter while missing 1 and smothered 11 in the second as Burrards put five behind him. He grabbed another 14 in the second half for a total of 38 over the 60-minute route. Meanwhile Walt Lee in the Burrards' goal was stopping 22.

Doug Cove, the man with the slow legs and the fast arms, led the St. Catharines' scorers with 2 goals. George Urquhart, Bill Nelson, Frank Madsen and Punk Morton got the others for Athletics.

Vancouver scorers besides Theale were Roddy McLeod and Fred Whittaker with two apiece and John Cavallin, Bill Morphett, Frank Lee, John McDonald and Bill Harris with one each.

RALPH McCABE SOLD TO INDIANS OF AMERICAN LOOP

Pitched for Wilkesbarre, Pa., in Eastern League Winning 15 and Losing 5; Native of Belleville

Ralph (High Pockets) McCabe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert McCabe, Chatham Street and erstwhile star hurler for the Wilkesbarre team in the Eastern Baseball League, has been sold outright to the Cleveland Indians and will report for duty at Clearwater, Florida, some time next February for Spring training.

The Tribe paid considerable cash for the twenty-four year old pitcher, and a Wilkesbarre outfielded named Ward.

The big right-hander had a creditable record in the Eastern League, winning fifteen and losing five. He won nine games in a row and made sports headlines when he threw a no-hitter against Binghampton last June.

Wilkesbarre lost the odd game in seven in the Eastern League championship series against Albany. McCabe won two of the team's three victories yielding but one run in both games.

"High-Pockets" learned his baseballing in this city and in 1937 pitched for the Oshawa Intermediates. The next year saw him hurling for the junior team of that city and in 1939 he went to Copper Cliff where he had a very successful season.

In 1940 he hurled for the Noranda team.

Last year the Toronto Maple Leafs signed him but he was traded in mid-season to Albany for a second baseman. Wilkesbarre signed him this year and after a sterling season Cleveland scouts took a liking to him and the deal was put through.

He is at present in the city and will remain here for the winter months, or at least until he has to report for training in sunny Florida.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press.)

Preparatory to their expected heavyweight-title clash next summer, champion Joe Louis and Challenger Billy Conn, both recently released from the U.S. Army, will make separate exhibition tours of Europe in the coming months, it was announced last night at New York. The European exhibitions will replace any preliminary bouts before they meet for the heavyweight crown.

No site has been chosen by Mike Jacobs for the big fight but a $3,000,000 gate is predicted, whenever it is staged.

Montreal Canadiens of the N.H.L. will take to the Forum ice on Monday to start pre-season training for the first league game with Chicago Black Hawks Oct. 27 at Montreal. An offer to turn pro with the Habitants has been made to left-winger Bill Reay of the Allan Cup Quebec Aces.

Ouster Volo, 14-year-old trotter owned and driven by Guy Cleveland of Carmi, N.Y., came through with his fourth victory in the Lexington, Ky., trots yesterday when he defeated five horses in a $500 race, doing the mile in 2:05 1-2.

President Bill Tobin of Chicago Black Hawks put in an appearance yesterday at the Club's training camp at Regina and the 40 team aspirants put their best foot forward under the direction of Coach Johnny Gottselig.

In their second tussle of the Western gridiron season, blue bombers trounced North Dakota State college 27-0 last night at Winnipeg although half of the game was played under American football rules with unlimited interference.

Chalky Wright, former featherweight champion from city of Los Angeles, spotted Bobby Ruffin of New York, six pounds but gained the unanimous decision in their 10-round bout at Detroit's Olympic arena last night before a crowd of 4,853.

Straight heats were the rule in the harness racing yesterday which featured the 98th annual South Perth Fair at St. Mary's with 8,000 present. Gordon Flash, owned by J. Bannerman of Stratford swept the 2:24 event while Lady Victoria gave G. Morrissey of Crediton the 2:28 race.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By GEORGE H. CARVER

Goes to Cleveland.

"High Pockets" McCabe relaxed in a chair, and cocked a quizzical eye at the ceiling. A smile lightened up in his face as he remarked "Y'know I think I'm going to like being in the big leagues . . it is something every kid who plays baseball dreams about and now my dream is coming true."

He has been bought by the Cleveland Indians of the American League and will report to the Tribe in Florida some time in February.

While Mac has played a lot of baseball and has been in the vicinity of major league parks on many occasions he has yet to see his first major loop game. "I made up my mind that when I went to a big league ball park it would be as a player. And that is that," he remarked.

He had an impressive record in the Eastern League this summer while with the Wilkes Barre squad. His nine straight wins were highlighted with a no-hitter which he tossed at the Binghampton team back in June and which earned him a niche in the league's hall of fame.

The big righthander has lots of confidence and isn't the least bit nervous about being up there with the big company. Professional ball players are like any other group of men, he says, sometimes there is one with whom nearly all disagree but generally speaking they are a congenial bunch of fellows.

"High Pockets" stands well over six feet and is the rangy type of thrower. Right now he feels in the proverbial "pink" and is convinced that his experiences in the Eastern and International leagues have fitted him for the big time. Lotsa luck, fella, and stay in there pitching.

A Neat Effort.

Claude Passeau, veteran Chicago Cub hurler, knocked at the door to the baseball Hall of Fame in yesterday's World Series when he flung a one-hitter at the Detroit Tigers to take a 2-1 lead in the big baseball event. He equalled the record set by Ruelbach away back in 1906. The veteran was never in any difficulty and his fireball was working to perfection. The bombasting bats of York and Greenberg were ineffective against the Passeau pitching, although the first base Tiger Kickapoo spoiled a nohitter in the fourth with his scratch single. Dizzy Trout will likely be Steve O'Neill's choice for mound duty today with the Cub selection still a mystery, at time of writing.

Splinters . . .

The prize sports tidbit this afternoon is the Batawa-Thornbury tilt being played at the Batawa ball park at two o'clock. "Smoky" Smith and "Lefty" Garten headline the casts and the diamond drama should be just that. . . . Meanwhile Speedy St. Louis' kids will be baseball battling in Hamilton against the Dresden nine. . . . The Columbian Squires will meet the Hamilton Charles at the Fair Grounds here on Monday afternoon instead of this afternoon as was originally scheduled. . . . Tickets are on sale at Bill Cook's Tobacco Store and weather permitting the kids should draw a plentiful supply of the softball faithful . . . That 39½-pound "musky" that Maurice Callaghan extricated from Muscote Bay the other day was a fine speciman. . . . Young Maurice hooked the beauty but the Boss had to pitch in and help him land the big fella.

MEYER NOMINATES DREWS TO PITCH OPENING GAME

Newark Bears, Who Finished Second in League, Will Play Louisville Colonels

Newark, N.J., Oct. 6. (AP)—Manager Bill Meyer of Newark Bears has nominated Karl Drews to pitch the opening game of the Little World Series here tonight against Louisville Colonels who will send George Diehl to the hill.

Drews won 19 games and led the International League with six shutouts, adding three decisions against Toronto in the semi-final play-off series. Diehl was the victor in three American Association play-off tilts for Manager Nemo Lebold

Business Manager Ray Kennedy of the Bears announced a change in the starting time of Sunday's game from 2.30 p.m. to 2 p.m. The Saturday game starts at 8 p.m. E.S.T.

The Bears, who finished second to Montreal in the International League Pennant chase, won the right to participate in the junior classic by eliminating the champions four games to three in the loop's final play-offs.

The Colonel's third in the regular campaign, won four in a row from St. Paul, after losing the first two games, in the association's final play-off. The champion Milwaukee Brewers were ousted in the League's semi-final play-offs.

Last year Louisville got into the Little Series the same way after finishing third in the pennant scramble. They were defeated four games to two by Baltimore.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 800
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Nobody wants you to stifle your instinct or initiative in a bridge game. But if your basic training is sound, you are better equipped to make the most corrective decisions.

Review your basic training with this hand:

♠6
♥A K 10 6 5
♦A Q 10 4 2
♣K J

Pick this hand to pieces. See what you know about each detail in it. Decide what you should do with it. Then if you decide to use instinct, you will know what danger there is, if any.

A sure trick is an ace or K Q; or A K, two. A high card is any ace or king or queen. A trick is a high card or a short card. An opening one bid promises five tricks, four high cards, two sure tricks.

So, you have all the needs for an opening bid of one; and a bit more in each of the essential ingredients. You have a suit that is worth showing. So, your opening bid is one in a suit.

With two showable suits of the same length, always show first the one of higher rank. Consequently, your correct opening bid with this hand is one heart.

When you get a second chance to bid, show your diamond suit. If you get a third chance to bid, rebid your diamond suit. That orders partner to tell you which of your two suits he likes best.

If your partner has had sound basic training, your pair will reach the best final contract. If he sticks to what he knows is the correct procedure, it will help you make the best decision.

When is a suit showable (biddable?) When it is at least Q J 3 2 or J 5 4 3 2 or 7 6 5 4 3 2. Add an honor (a ten or better) and it is a rebiddable suit.

These are your basics. They tell you what is exactly correct. When you know these basics, you know when your instinct is on the beam.

Does your instinct tell you to skimp a little? Your basic training will tell you how short you are. You may get caught that way.

TORONTO INDIANS DEFEAT OTTAWA TROJANS BY 16-11

Play Second Game Under Hayman and Annis Stukus Emerges a Star

Toronto, Oct. 6 — (CP) — A bountiful Thanksgiving offering of football gave Toronto Indians a head start in the weekend victory column but the betting boys had it that those pesky Toronto Balmy Beachers would catch up before sundown Monday.

Indians finished their weekend chores early and also all but finished Ottawa Trojans' chances of a playoff spot in the Ontario Rugby Football Union by bashing Trojans 16-11 before some 2,000 under Toronto Maple Leaf Stadium floodlights Friday night.

It was the fourth victory for Indians, playing their 2nd game under their new coach, Lew Hayman, a crafty gent who often has been called "maker of champions."

Ted Reeve's Beachers can tie the Indians, and have a game in hand, by winning their two weekend fixtures — and on form, they should. Beaches meet Windsor Rockets in that city tomorrow and entertain Hamilton Wildcats at home Monday.

Only undefeated team in the league, the Beaches have won two, including a 16-15 decision over Indians in Toronto last week that marked Indians' only loss so far.

Last night's Trojan-Indian brawl was a rough affair in which that great sportsman Annis Stukus played one of the greatest games of his career and scored nine points — all on kicks. The battered Trojans have a short rest before meeting Windsor in Ottawa Monday.

Suffer Bitter Blow

Trojans suffered a bitter blow on the last play of the first half against Indians when Arnie McWatters, their smooth-working field general who smashed over for the first touchdown of the game, suffered a mild concussion. Club officials said, however, they expected he would be in shape for Monday's game.

Indians, too, lost one of their stars. Bullet-passer Bill Stukus suffered a pulled leg muscle midway through the first half and his return to the lineup is indefinite.

Annis Stukus kicked two field goals, two other attempted placements from difficult angles went for singles, and he also booted a convert. Doug Pyzer, one of rugby's fleetest performers, raced 55 yards for the only Indian touchdown and Freddy Kijek's long hoists went for two singles.

Besides McWatters, Stan Molinski, who several times tore the Indian line to shreds, went over for a major and the other Ottawa point came on a single by hard-driving Ted Edwards.

Toronto grid followers get another game today with a Big Four battle between Toronto Argonauts and Montreal Hornets at Varsity Stadium. Hamilton Tigers meet the powerful Rough Riders in Ottawa. Hornets and Tigers face each other in Hamilton for the only Big Four match Monday.

Davey Thompson, Oshawa Lightweight, Scores Technical K. O. Over Glen Dafoe of City

Referee Baby Yack Stops Fight After Dafoe Floored Twice by Hard Rights

Davey Thompson, crack Oshawa lightweight, connected solidly with the jaw of Glen Dafoe, hard-hitting Trenton fighter in the 3rd round of their scheduled main bout, five-round affair at the Hume Arena Friday night and after flooring the Trentonian twice was awarded the nod on a technical knockout when Referee Baby Yack, stopped the fight.

The bout was a torrid affair from the opening gong and both fighters threw all they had into the fray with the bout at times taking on the atmosphere of a wrestling melee. Tall rangy Thompson took everything the hard-hitting Dafoe had and nailed him several times with a swinging right. Dafoe however, showed plenty of willingness to mix matters and the first two rounds proved to be a wild swinging melee, that had the faithful in an uproar.

Both fighters swept into action from the opening gong with Dafoe throwing punches willy-nilly in a first round effort to gain an edge. Thompson, in the same style of fighting matched his opponent and the first go finished in a wild flurry of fists.

Carried the Fight

In the second round, Thompson carried the fight to Dafoe, connecting with solid rights but taking some punishment from the infighting of the Trenton boy. Referee Yack warned both men about resorting to wrestling methods.

In the third round Thompson went all out in a fierce attack with both fists swinging. He connected solidly on the Dafoe button with a stiff right and the Trentonian went down for a count. He came up fighting but Thompson nailed him several times in a wild melee on the ropes and Dafoe hit the canvas again. Then Referee Yack stepped in and stopped the fight and that was that.

Draw Decision

In a substitution semi-final bout that originally called for Bud Runion and Bruce Lidster, Grant McIntyre crossed gloves with Benny Cross of the Gardens Athletic Club and after three rounds of furious milling eked out a draw.

Don Shore got the judges' decision over the popular Baldy Hardsands while "Soup" Mondeville, spotting Bud Henry of Oshawa at least ten pounds, pummelled his way to a well-earned win.

Ronny Mansfield of the Gardens Athletic Club knocked out Lorne Cheseborough of Oshawa after flooring his opponent for the count of nine in the second round. Mansfield took advantage of the situation and let go a hard right that finished the job.

Terry Masson, Oshawa, got the judges' nod after three rounds of fighting over "Soup" Whitney of Trenton. The bout was productive of fast action and the result was in doubt until the official verdict was given.

Given Decision

Bob Tyler was given the decision over Bobby McFee, Oshawa, with Bill Anderson, Gardens A.C. getting the official acclaim over "Flash" Dube in the curtain raiser.

"Baby" Yack, former Canadian bantamweight champion was the third man in the ring for all the bouts and turned out a good effort as referee.

Manager Harold Kurtz, of the Gardens Athletic Club announced that another card would be presented in the Arena two weeks from last night.

SERIES PACKED WITH SENTIMENT

By FRANK KENESSON

Chicago, Oct. 6 (AP)—If ever a world series was packed with sentiment, this 1945 edition last of a wartime era of patched-up lineups and aging competitors, gets the brass ring.

Jolly Cholly Grimm, keeper of the Cubs, keynoted the clambake with his announcement that Ray Prime, 38-year-old pitcher, would unload his southpaw slants, cultivated of necessity when an accidental burn left his right hand without gripping power, against Detroit Tigers' "old men" in today's important fourth game.

"He's nearly 40 years old and bustin' to pitch his first series ball game, so he'll get the chance" Grimm said.

On the other side of the field Detroit's Manager Steve O'Neill, sentimental Irishman that he is, had a heart full of situations paralleling Grimm's sincere interest in his steady Cub lefthander.

Chuck Hostetler, spare outfielder the Tigers snatched out of a factory two years ago to add depth to a garden depleted by the war, literally begged O'Neill for a chance to get his name in a world series box score before he retires—again—from the game he's played for more than 20 summers. Hostetler, now 40 years old, drew two opportunities as a pinch-hitter.

Hubby Walker, up with the Tigers for the third time since breaking in as a Bengal with brother Gerald 14 years ago, also was used in a pinch role and 32-year-old Jim Tobin, knuckleballer whose best pitching days definitely are behind him, saw three innings of relief duty.

"They all gave every ounce in carrying us through to the flag. They deserve to play now too and they will, wherever it works out," Steve promised.

Local Boxers Lose in Toronto

Two knockouts featured the appearance of Belleville and Oshawa boxers in Toronto on Thursday night.

Lil Arthur King, Toronto easily disposed of George Polmanter in one minute and 25 seconds of the first round, knocking him kicking with a sharp left hook to the solar plexus.

Bud Runion, Campbellford, also lost by the K.O. route when Brancetti of Toronto connected with sharp rights that put the Campbellford fighter out of commission late in the second round.

Frank Mondeville and Baldy Hardsands fought three fast rounds to a draw while Ronny Mansfield got the decision over Lorne Cheseborough after knocking him through the ropes in the third round.

Jerry Downes did not fight due to the fact that Haines, the official opposition failed to put in an appearance.

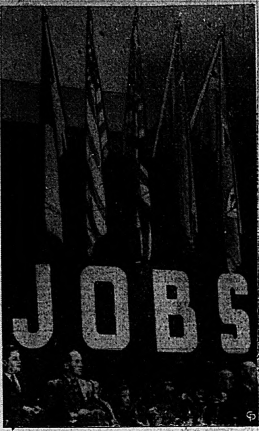
TEN THOUSAND ATTEND LABOR RALLY



Ten thousand from different parts of Ontario attended the Labor Day Rally in Maple Leaf Gardens, Toronto, and endorsed the sending of a mass delegation to Queen's Park to demand that the Drew government take action to end the present labor crisis. They also demanded the government tackle the problem of jobs, housing, reconversion, labor code and settlement of the Windsor and Guelph strikes. Here flags of the United Nations form a background on the speakers' platform.

LATVIAN FARMERS GIVEN LAND DEEDS

A government agent is shown presenting land deeds to Latvian farmers in a rural district of the country under the new Soviet policy of giving farm lands to the people. These deeds entitle the holder to free and permanent possession of the land on which he will produce food crops for the nation's markets.

DRAMATIC AFTERMATH DETROIT HOLDUP

This dramatic photo was made as Patrolman Alphonse Kemper was dying of bullet wounds received when he intercepted two men holding up the Frazier Paint Co. of Detroit, Mich. He is shown signing his will over to his wife, Clara Kemper, sobbing in background. Kemper had shot and killed one of the holdup men and was in turn, seriously wounded. The second holdup man got away with about $300.

OFF TO AUSTRALIA

Judith Robertson, photographed at Windsor Station, Montreal, is one of the youngest Canadians off on the long journey to Australia to make her home there. She travels with her parents, Flt.-Lieut. A. J. Robertson of the Royal Australian Air Force and Mrs. Robertson of Quebec City.

IN SHADOW OF DEATH

Oblivious of the death that hangs over her head every moment, Madelaine Carone, of Brooklyn, N.Y., plays with a doll. The two-year-old child is under death sentence from cyanosis—lack of oxygen in the blood, due to cardiac malformation. Heart and baby specialists who have examined the child hold out no hope that death can be averted.

POLIO VICTIM FLIES FROM BOMBAY

Little 12-year-old Pamela McCarthy, poliomyelitis victim, and her father, Horace McCarthy, are shown in the children's hospital in Baltimore, Md., after their 8,000-mile flight from Bombay, India. The child, partly paralyzed, was flown to the U. S. in Army Transport Command planes, for expert treatments not available in India. Pamela used to sing to troop shows and was known among the men as the "Little Crooner."

SOMETHING TO CROW ABOUT

L. A. Olsen, of Fruita, Colo., holds the head of his rooster, "Mike," in his left hand. He holds an eye-dropper with which he feeds "Mike" in his right hand. No. We aren't crazy. The headless rooster lives on, apparently not missing his head. Olsen cut it off two weeks ago when he had a yen for a chicken dinner. But decapitation was merely a mild inconvenience to the bird. There was no blood and the rooster walked about as usual. Scientists of the University of Utah are going to investigate the phenomenon.

ONTARIO LPW's. COMING HOME

These happy liberated prisoners of war who recently flew across the Pacific to San Francisco, reached Vancouver Tuesday en route home. Here they pose for the photographer beside the railway coach that bore them from the California city. All members of the famed Royal Rifles of Canada, they are shown here in the front row (from left to right): Rfn. C. H. McKee, Chapleau, Ont.; Rfn. J. E. Glenn, Trenton Ont.; Rfn. C. A. DETROIT MOTORISTS HEAD FOR CANADIAN GAS

Long lines of American motorists cross the Ambassador Bridge connecting Detroit and Windsor, Ont., as they head toward Canadian gas stations to replenish low tanks. The strike in the oil industry has cut Detroit's supply of gasoline to nothing more than a mere trickle.

DEMANDS APOLOGY

Edward T. McCaffrey, National Commander of Catholic War Veterans (shown) has lodged a resolution with U. S. Secretary of State James Byrnes, demanding official protest to the governments of Great Britain and the U.S.S.R., asking apologies for addresses delivered at the "Spanish Refugee Appeal" in New York. The C.W.V. resolution declared that the Soviet charge d'affaires, Nicolai Novikov, and Harold Laski, of Great Britain "used the prestige of their positions to expound class and religious hatreds."

MOLAR FIXER — JAP STYLE

On the lookout for patients, a Jap dentist whose office was bombed to rubble by U. S. planes continues to ply his profession on this ingenious ox-drawn cart. Here he is on the outskirts of Yokohama with his old-fashioned, but still efficient, equipment.

STARBRIGHT

CHAPTER 9

But she allowed herself one more quick look at the display of books and the picture of herself.

A lot of people walked past the bookstore and so it was not unusual that Karen and Lee should pass. But it made Elaine feel guilty when they stopped and Karen said: "Why darling, you're actually admiring yourself, aren't you?"

Elaine thought that men sometimes had the best of it, because they were always talking about how "they hauled off and smacked somebody on the nose." Elaine stared thoughtfully at Karen's pertly turned-up nose.

"We're on our way to Ricardo's darling," Karen said, her arm through Lee's. "Share a table with us?"

Elaine hesitated. She didn't particularly care about going to Ricardo's with them, yet she knew it was foolish to run from them. "Why not?" she said, walking away from the book shop.

"How clever of you, darling, to write a book," Karen was saying, swinging her shapely form along under the cover of an open fur coat. She looked sleek. She was beautiful and a stage star, and she knew it. "But then, your last play wasn't so good, was it, darling? Isn't that what you said, Lee?"

Lee's face was white and stony. He answered through thin lips. "Elaine's last play was an astounding success is what I recall saying. And stop calling people 'darling.' I'm tired of it."

Karen whitened for a moment. Then she smiled at Elaine. "Lee's head is giving him trouble today. He has the false impression that Scotch and soda helps conjure up produceable plays."

Elaine said nothing during the walk from the book shop to Ricardo's. When they were inside the steaming cafe, filled with people from all sorts of theatrical jobs and lives, Elaine hoped she might see someone she knew who would offer her an excuse to break away from Karen and Lee. She felt she was becoming involved in an argument that did not specifically concern her.

"Please don't mind our little fusses," Karen was saying, pulling off her rich kid gloves. "You know how Lee can be, darling."

"Stop calling people 'darling.'"

Karen ignored him, gave the waiter her order, and looked directly at Elaine. "Did you find Lee stubborn when you went with him? I do; he's terrible that way. He keeps insisting that we get married now."

Elaine looked at Lee. He was tense with anger.

"Must you tell everyone our business?" he demanded.

"Oh, but Elaine isn't everyone," Karen explained. "She's—she's really one of us. You know, college and all that." she directed her attention again to Elaine. "I keep telling Lee that now is a bad time for us to marry. He isn't secure yet. And while I'm more or less established, it wouldn't do my career any good to be married. You understand what I mean, don't you, darling?"

Elaine shrugged. "Why stay engaged then?"

Karen's eyes narrowed and she studied Elaine thoroughly. Then she tossed her impatiently. "Oh, that doesn't matter. It rather adds to my career. Romantically, you know."

Lee was gripping the edge of the table until his knuckles shone white. "Stop talking about it, Karen."

"Please, Lee. Do something about that hangover, ."Karen snapped. Again she looked at Elaine.

"Do you think I should mary Lee now? It might hamper my chances of getting to Hollywood if I have a husband."

Lee stood up jerkily, sending his chair crashing over to the floor. "Shut up, I told you!" He picked up his hat and walked rapidly out of Ricardo's.

Karen followed him with her eyes, the expression on her face totally void of any sensation or emotion! She had her head tipped back a little, one hand folded loosely under her chin. She looked regal, pompous, domineering. She showed no love for Lee in her face, Elaine noticed.

Without turning her head, Karen shifted her blue eyes to Elaine. "He's becoming rather a boor lately. I'm a little sorry Warren has a contract with him for another play. I'm sure it shall fail miserably."

Slowly she lowered her hand and looked at the diamond engagement ring on her finger. Elaine imagined that she would remove it from her finger were she not present.

"You'd better keep that," Elaine said, pushing aside her coffee cup. "It might be good insurance against that flop you were just speaking of." She stood up.

Karen lifted her eyes, cold and steely now. Her lips curled a little. "How terribly thoughtful of you, darling." The rasp of sarcasm was heavy.

"The sick and needy are my weaknesses — darling," Elaine said, and walked out of Ricardo's.

Lee was still a little drunk when he pushed Elaine's door buzzer. The first snow of the year was settling over the city, and the shoulders of his overcoat were powdered white.

Elaine admitted him, watched him walk slowly to a deep chair and sink into it with a sigh. He held his hat dangling over the side of the chair and rubbed his forehead with his other hand. He needed a shave and his shirt collar was soiled. A script book was rolled in his pocket.

Elaine walked to the cabinet on the far side of the room, poured a drink and returned to him, setting the glass down on the little table next to the chair. "Here," she said, "This will make life seem worth while again."

He looked at the glass, frowning, then reached for it.

"How long have you been like this?" Elaine asked, sitting down opposite him.

"A week, I guess. Maybe not so long. Maybe longer. What time is it?"

"After seven. Have you eaten?"

"I'm not hungry." He set the glass down heavily and looked at Elaine. "Sweet face. Always a sweet face."

"Let's not get started on that."

He shrugged. "All right, let's not. I didn't come here for that, anyway."

Elaine waited while he shifted in his chair.

"I'm in trouble," he said, rubbing his face. "Warren's pressing me for this play. He wants it by Christmas. I—I can't do it." He looked at her, his eyes pleading. "Help me Elaine?"

She crossed her arms, leaned on her elbows on her knees. He pulled the script book out of his pocket, put it on the end table.

"I'm heading for a flop unless you rewrite this." His voice was a little sad.

She was about to speak when the phone rang. She had to get up, cross to the other side of the room to answer it, her back to Lee.

It was Paul.

"Paul," she exclaimed. "Where are you?" Excitement flushed through her and her heart beat unsteadily.

"I'm in Hollywood. Now, listen closely. This call is costing International plenty. So don't bother telling me you love me right now."

She grasped the receiver tighter and her voice was weak when she said: "I'm listening, fullback, what is it?"

"Sam likes your book. He wants you to come out here right away."

"Who's Sam?"

"Who's Sam?" Paul retorted. "Everybody knows Sam. Sam's Sam B. Lewin, production chief of International. Who's Sam?" he mimicked.

"I'm sorry. I'm from the sticks."

"Never mind your background," Paul hurried on. "This is costing Sam plenty, and he doesn't care where you're from. He just likes your book and is willing to pay thousands of dollars for the screen rights. He also wants you should come to Hollywood on the first train, if not sooner. That's what Sam said and the way he said it."

"But, what does he want with me?" Elaine's voice shook and she was having trouble holding receiver.

"Sam has a writer's contract waiting for you that will pay you thousands of more dollars. He wants you should do a screen version of yodr novel."

"You're beginning to sound like Sam."

"Well, how about it?"

"But I've never written movies. And anyway, Hollywood scares me."

Paul groaned. "Look, Elaine. I love you. Sam loves you. International loves you. And the government will love you if you sign this contract. It pays plenty. Then you can support me."

Elaine bit her lip, her voice serious. "I don't know, Paul. Hollywood is a long way off and maybe I can't write for the screen."

She heard a faint click in the room, turned to where Lee had sat. The chair was empty. She looked at the door, could see the knob slowly turning shut from the outside. The script book was gone from the end table.

Elaine stared at the closed door for a moment.

"Hey!" she could hear Paul yelling. "Hey, this is costing International."

Her voice was soft when she answered and there was a tear slowly rolling down her cheek. "All right, fullback, I'll be there on the first train, if not sooner."

Elaine stood on the steps of the writer's building, shading her eyes from the brilliant California sun. It was warm, pleasantly warm. Across the green patch of lawn the studio streets were humming with mid-morning activity. A lot of people she had seen in the movies were strolling past the building. They looked casual, friendly, important in their sports clothes. Some were leaving the studio cafeteria in costumes and grease paint.

Suddenly she was very lonely. It was not like the shallow gloom of a dimly lighted theatre with its stage bare of props and sets, with the brick rear wall staring at you while members of the cast sat in chairs on the stage and gossiped until the director rose from his front-row and started rehearsals.

Here—at International where she was a screen writer, two weeks old—heavy trucks rumbled past with huge slaps of scenery, squealed to a stop in front of tremendous buildings looking like warehouses, unloaded their equipment on smaller trucks that trolleyed into the sound stages.

Here there were people who hurried past carrying shooting books or dresses pinned together on hangers or cans of film from the labs or cutting rooms. Quite often messenger boys and girls would bicycle down the streets, returning rapidly to the big writer's annex.

Now and then men looking important and influential, and were. would walk by.

Elaine turned and stared at the screen door of the writer's building. Inside. in the square, sound-proof offices, were men and women pounding typewriters or sitting quietly, staring off into space, or reading racing forms or looking out the windows or sleeping or playing cards or taking bromos for hangovers.

The screen door opened and she stepped aside to allow a man and woman walk out. They nodded vaguely and walked toward the cafeteria, which was like no cafeteria she had ever seen. It resembled more a huge magnificent hotel dining room.

She pulled back the screen door and walked into the building. Her office was on the second floor and she walked up the steps, not bothering with the elevator. She still couldn't get used to working in an office. Everything was convenient. She could even have a stenographer if she wanted one. She could dictate her stories or she could use a dictaphone or she could pound them out herself. She was Miss Grayson, 208, Writer's Annex.

She was not important.

That made her snicker a little as she sat down at her desk and stared moodily at the typewriter. In New York when she walked into Brann's office or one of his theatres, or when she entered Ricardo's or any of the other Broadway places, she was important.

She could even walk into a literary tea and people would stop whatever they were doing and wait for her to speak to them.

But here, in Hollywood, on the International lot, she was about the least important person she had ever known. She wasn't quite positive whether she was happy about it.

Paul had not seen her many times since she had arrived. He had been at the station, rather awkwardly embraced her and then hurried her to Sam B. Lewin's office where she was swept up in contractual conversation with a short man from the legal department. She was taken from Lewin's office into Joseph Michael's office on the next floor where she met the man who was associate producer of the picturization of her novel. He shook hands hastily, handed her a sheet of thin, yellow paper, mumbled something about summary of the book from the story department, then rushed out.

Then she was taken to her office, given a quick glance at it rushed out to Paul's car and to an apartment he had located for her. If she didn't like it, somebody at the studio .housing department would hand her a list of available apartments from the tip ofSouthern California as far north as Alaska.

Then she was more or less dumped on her own. An unimportant litle brunet who was a writer. She had an assignment to write a movie from her own book, but she had an outline from Joseph Michael, countersigned by Sam B. Lewin, which she was to follow. She recognized only the title of her book on the outline.

She had made several attempts to see Mr. Lewin and Mr. Michael about this because she didn't like it very much. But she was just a litle brunet with pretty eyes and mouth who was a writer from New York and not very important.

Elaine was musing about all that when Paul rapped on her office door and swung it open.

"Hi, ankle," he grinned. "Miss me?"

Elaine swung around in her chair, tapping a pencil lightly on the desk. "Have you been gone?"

He looked crestfallen. "No kidding haven't you missed me?"

"There have been several times, fullback, when you would have come in handy by explaining this place to me. But outside of that, a flat 'no'."

Paul sat down on the corner of the desk, looked at her for a moment through serious brown eyes, then glanced down at the summary and outline sheets. He picked them up and began reading them.

She watched him read, saw how sun glinted across his dark red hair, gave it a golden look. His lean, clear face was bronzed, fresh looking, and his deep brown eyes held a mixture of eagerness. She liked the multitude of expressions his face showed.

She looked at his hands, long, slim and powerful, and remembered how they felt when they would touch her. She liked the sound of laughter in his voice when he talked, the firmness, in him that could be soft and tender in an instant. She liked the feeling of security he generated within her.

Paul put the papers down and bit his lip. He stood up, stuffing his hands in the pockets of his gray slacks.

"All set to catch the next train back to New York, aren't you?"

"It's an idea," she answered.

"This is Hollywood. This is the movies."

"I didn't expect zombies," Elaine snapped. "But on the other hand—" She shrugged.

"But on the other hand, that's about what you find running some departments. Right?"

"You said it. I didn't. Don't quote me."

Paul grinned quickly, then his face became serious again. "I'm sorry I had to take that trip to one of our locations. This suddenly being made head of the publicity department calls for a lot of extra work."

"Nothing is your fault, Paul."

He sat down on the edge of the desk again, picked up her hand that was tapping the pencil and pressed it gently. "I know, but I should have been here to sort of cushion the shock you were bound to get. I promised Minnie and Annie I'd take care of you."

Elaine stood up suddenly. "Oh, I'm just being a baby about the whole thing. But I'm—I'm used to being important." She sat down again tearfully.

Little natives of atom-blasted Hiroshima, Japan, are pictured amid the city's ruins. They are clad in the typical long bloomers which became a war-style in Japan. Over nose and mouth they wear the masks which were brought into use again to combat the odor of death clinging to the ruins. This photograph is typical of the way life carries on in Japan today.

First Historic Flight is Over

By PAUL MILLER

Washington, Oct. 5 — (AP) — The first historic flight is over. Regular round-the-world air service becomes routine starting today.

Today and every Friday henceforth United States Army Air Transport Command planes — 40-passenger models — will leave Washington on a schedule that terminates here the following Thursday night.

Lt.-Gen. Harold George, Commanding General of the A.T.C., predicts the "Globester" will be run twice weekly, in both directions instead of east as now, as soon as mail and courier traffic justifies.

"There is nothing remarkable about the flight as I see it," the General told newspapermen, "because aviation has advanced to the point where flights can be made on schedule anywhere regardless of weather."

The seven men and one woman who made the first flight, which ended here last night, agreed that they would make the same 23,279-mile junket again, and gladly. But they would have some changes made. The A.T.C. will give attention to their recommendations in handling the regular service.

Mrs. Inez Robb of International News Service, the woman in the group, said:

Alberta Game Lures Melchoir of the Met

New York (CP) — The reputation of Western Alberta as a happy "hunting ground" where game abounds has drawn yet another enthusiastic sportsman. Lauritz Melchoir of the Metropolitan Opera Association announced that he would leave San Francisco for Calgary October 14.

The noted tenor and his party will waste no time in Calgary but will head for the migratory geese flyaway at Sullivan Lake. The Strathmore area will be next on the itinerary for a Hungarian partridge shoot; then on to Tilley where more varied game—pheasants, partridge, ducks, geese and snipe — is found. Mr. Melchoir also hopes to bag an antelope when the season opens October 22.

The singer recently returned from Denmark where he gave a command performance at the double celebration of King Christian's birthday and Danish Independence Day.

IN BEHALF OF THE

Belleville
Chamber of Commerce

FOR THE FIVE DAYS

October 9th to 13th Inclusive

THE MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE AND THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS ARE ENDEAVOURING TO SECURE

100 New Members

TO MAKE IT POSSIBLE TO DO EVEN MORE EFFECTIVE WORK IN COMMUNITY-BUILDING.

All Citizens no matter what their occupation are eligible for membership.

Some Achievements:

Initiated or Promoted, or Sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce.

Initiated the movement to purchase the Bay Bridge.

Initiated the campaign to have the Government bear the entire cost of building the new Bay Bridge, thereby saving the taxpayers of Belleville $160,000.

Initiated the proceedings to bring about the acquirement of the local Hydro-Electric system, thereby saving the people of Belleville well over a million dollars in their light, heat and power costs.

Initiated the proposal to establish an effective municipal industrial department. As a result, Belleville has secured the location here of more than 50 thriving industries. Those industries in 1944 gave employment to more than 4,000 men and women and had an output of manufactured goods which passed the enormous total of more than $12,000,000. No city in Canada, in Belleville's class in population, has made such satisfactory progress industrially. Belleville has secured 12 new industries during the past 18 months. Five of Belleville's major industries are laying plans for expansion which will increase their output by more than 100 per cent. Five of Belleville's major industries are branch establishments of the largest manufacturing corporations in their class in the world.

Initiated the movement to bring about better relations between the City and the County of Hastings. Twenty-five years ago, there was a most unsatisfactory feeling of disharmony between the two municipalities; today nothing could be happier than our rural-urban relationships.

Initiated the campaign to induce a greater portion of the tremendous tourist movement to visit the Bay of Quinte area or spend vacations in the lovely lakeland to the north. Many thousands of attractive pamphlets and personal letters have been mailed to inquirers. This business, already locally important, can be enormously expanded.

Chambers of Commerce everywhere are centres where information is sought and freely given. Inquiries pour in from all sources upon the most dissimilar subjects. The Chamber of Commerce has a library of reference books and folders where dependable answers can be secured for those seeking facts or data or general information.

The foregoing paragraphs give but the barest outline of a few of the activities and accomplishments of this great community-serving organization.

An enlarged membership roster is urgently needed to make the work of the Chamber of Commerce still more effective and valuable.

POST-WAR ARMY

No Drastic Cuts

His announcement recalled his warning several weeks ago that expectations of drastic tax cuts cannot be fulfilled.

However, the general anticipation is that there will be some relief for personal income tax payers, especially those with small incomes, and that taxes which act as a curb of business will be modified.

These include the 100 per cent excess profits tax and the corporation income tax. The excess profits tax may be abolished or substantially reduced and there may be important modifications in the corporation income tax.

Justice Minister St. Laurent obtained first reading of a National Emergency Powers Act which will replace the War Measures Act on the government. It will remain in force for one year only unless renewed by Parliament.

The Act will make it possible to continue price control and some other wartime measures during the transition period.

In the Senate, the Throne Speech debate was continued with Senator J. J. Kinley (L — Nova Scotia), and Senator R. B. Horner (PC — Saskatchewan) participating.

Major Power Heard.

Taking part in the Commons discussion were Hon. C. G. Power, former Air Minister; John Bracken, National Progressive Conservative Leader; M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. Leader; John Blackmore, Acting Social Credit House Leader; Reconstruction Minister Howe; Works Minister Fournier; John Diefenbaker (PC—Lake Centre), and Clarence Gillis (CCF—Cape Breton South).

Maj. Power, who resigned when the government decided to send home defence troops overseas last November, suggested that the government consider very carefully any plans for setting up a fleet air arm. He said he was not opposing a fleet air arm, but in creating such an organization the government would be creating a duplicate.

Mr. Bracken and Mr. Coldwell urged that the government return to the pre-war practice of limiting expenditures by having specified amounts voted for each department. These amounts could not be surpassed without passage of a Royal warrant.

Coming Down Too Slowly.

Mr. Bracken said Canada has spent as much during the war years as in all the previous years of her history and there had been little investigation into the expenditures.

The war expenditures had gone up too fast and now were coming down too slowly.

The opposition leader had an exchange with Mr. Howe when the minister said that Canada would need a cash requirement of $4,000,000,000 in 1946, but this was not a budgetary requirement. The money would be used for loans to the United Kingdom and other countries trading with Canada.

Mr. Bracken asked if Mr. Howe expected the loans would be repaid. He felt they would not be.

Howe Not Pessimistic.

Mr. Howe said he was not so pessimistic and he was certain the loans would be repaid.

Mr. Coldwell expressed belief that the House would approve of the cash requirement which would provide loans to prospective customers until the Bretton Woods agreement and the International Monetary Fund is in operation.

He urged the setting up of a committee that would investigate openly all war expenditures and disposals of war assets.

Mr. Fournier said such a committee would be set up and would work in the open. Mr. Diefenbaker said now that the war was over the need for secrecy was over.

Mr. Blackmore said the government should be complimented for its efforts to keep a large post-war defence force. No one would say that the next years would be without wars. He felt the Progressive Conservatives were putting too much stress on expenditures for defence. Money would be found somewhere.

Wants Interest Free Money.

Mr. Gillis said the high expenditures in wartime had not affected the standard in living nor had the increase in the debt. He felt that money borrowed during the war should be interest free.

Mr. Howe said there was no priority on building materials in favor of Wartime Housing Limited or anyone else. He was answering a question from John Bracken, Progressive Conservative leader, who said he had many complaints that priorities in favor of Wartime Housing were holding up private building.

Mr. Howe said there seemed to be an impression that large supplies of building materials were held in storage. This was not the case.

Censorship Rules Closely Followed

London (CP) — Out of 400,000 issues of newspapers large and small published in Britain during the war only four were subjected to prosecution for the infringement of censorship rules.

The Germans, who received British newspapers via Stockholm or Lisbon, received little or nothing from their reading as the British press had entered voluntary partnership with the censor in the interests of national security.

In all, 665,000 stories totalling 163,000,000 words, were submitted for censorship.

BRITISH HEIRESS TO WED LIBERATED P.O.W.

Pictured in London, Eng., following the announcement of their engagement are Miss Elizabeth Leveson-Gower, 24-year-old daughter of the late Captain Lord Alastair Leveson-Gower, and heiress to one of Britain's greatest fortunes, and Capt. Charles Janson, of the Welsh Guards, who recently returned to London after spending five years as a prisoner of war in Germany. They met six weeks ago.

Indian Picture Has Record Run

Bombay (CP) — What is perhaps a world record has been achieved by "Shankuntala," an Indian picture which has run for over a hundred-weeks at a movie house in Bombay.

As a Hindu mythological story religious in tone, a fifth century Hindu poet who wrote it in Sanskrit. The film has taken liberties with Kalidas' play, however, and it emerges with more sociological than religious significance, the theme being Woman's battle with Man.

Shakuntala is a rustic beauty who jeopardizes her marriage with a ruler by neglecting a hermit who, in the ruler's absence, asks her for food. The hermit levies on her the curse that her husband will forget her, and he does. The rest of the film is concerned with the couple's reconciliation.

The picture, 11,000 feet long (the average American film is 12,000 feet long), was produced in eight months. It is colored, but was not photographed that way. Instead every foot was hand-painted in four months by 12 artists working in 10-hour shifts. The production costs were about $400,000.

More than a million and a half people have seen the film, which runs three shows daily, at prices ranging from 10 to 80 cents. The revenue, approximately $750,000, is extremely good by Indian standards. Indians who have seen the picture five times are not rare.

They Kiss The Boys Good-Bye

(By Walter Davenport in Collier's Magazine)

Our secretary told us the other morning that she'd gone to the railroad station with ten other girls who were seeing their boy friends off to the army. Her own lad has been in the army so long that she thinks he must be a pretty big stockholder by now.

Well, all the girls were kissing the boys for the eighth or ninth farewell when a woebegone corporal, a stranger, sidled into the rodeo and said brokenheartedly to her, "My girl friend didn't show up."

Our secretary tried a bit of sisterly solace, saying that doubtless the girl friend was sick, or had been held up or something. He shook his head dolefully.

Then the gates opened and the rush to the train began. There was a hint of tears in the corporal's eyes as he said to our secretary: "Say, would you— would you, well, sorta mind if I kissed you? She didn't come down and I—well.." So our secretary kissed him vigorously.

The gates closed. The corporal was wandering off toward another gate and another farewelling.

"See here, you," said our secretary, with a glint of suspicion in her eye. "I thought you told me.."

He grinned, winked and said: "Ah, button, I ain't leaving for two, three weeks yet. Some fun, hey?"

Poetry Tie Links British Peoples

London (CP) — Viscount Wavell, President-General of the Poetry Society (Incorporated) said in a message to the Canadian centres of the Society: "Their heritage of great poetry is one of the abiding glories of the British race, so that love of poetry should continue to be a binding link between all peoples of the British Commonwealth. The President is glad to hear of the increased activities of the constituent groups in Nova Scotia, Vancouver, Winnipeg, and elsewhere."

450 Wounded Returning On Lady Nelson

Montreal, Oct. 6—More than 450 wounded and sick Canadian soldiers will return to Canada on October 10, M. E. Doke, General Passenger Agent, Canadian National Railways, said here today. They will arrive on the hospital ship Lady Nelson. Former flagship of the Canadian National Steamships West Indies fleet, the only ship now in this service on the Atlantic. The hospital ship Letitia is now serving in the Pacific to bring home the Japanese-held Canadian prisoners of war.

Although not able to return with their own regiments or units, special arrangements are being made across the country to welcome them home. The largest number is for Toronto, while 54 will go to Calgary, 47 to Montreal, 41 each to Winnipeg and Vancouver, 35 to Regina, 39 to London, 24 to Saint John, 21 to Ottawa, 12 to Quebec and 9 to Kingston.

Two Canadian National Railways special hospital trains will be at dockside at Halifax for the arrival of the mercy ship. They will be made up of 12 "hospital on wheels" cars similar to the one which was on exhibition across the country and viewed by 325,000 persons.

Eight sleepers, four diners and two baggage cars will complete the equipment needed to transport the military patients to their homes in all sections of the Dominion.

The entire trip from overseas to their homes will be handled by the Canadian National system.

British Groceries Lack Wartime Help

London (CP) — Grocery store queues, lengthening instead of growing shorter, may continue to grow. The latest reason for the growth is that married women, who served customers throughout the war, now are "demobbing" themselves.

There is no law to hold them, and the prospect of being directed to take factory work no longer worries them. Very little labor is coming back to the shops to replace them, leaving the grocer short-handed.

The Ministry of Labor comment was: "We have never yet stated that queues were due to shortages of labor. We have no comment to make."

PIERRE LAVAL SENTENCED TO DEATH FOR TREASON

U.S. IMPOUNDS $250,000,000 IN JAPANESE GOLD

Jap Army, Navy Did Not Account For Penny Since '37

NavyMinisterRemovedFrom Cabinet Before Sworn In

Tokyo, Oct. 9 — (AP) — United States soldiers stood guard today over uncovered Japanese gold, silver and platinum reserves of more than $250,000,000, and Allied headquarters said the Imperial Army and Navy, which has held part of the treasure, hadn't accounted for a penny since 1937.

"Responsible" Japanese officials led the way to the treasure, Gen. MacArthur's headquarters related, on this first day in office of Premier Kijiro Shidehara's already-reshuffled new government. The aged but energetic premier told correspondents he was "not prepared to discuss" whether Japan was guilty of starting the war, and issued an eight-point program pledging personal freedom and a fight against famine.

The new Navy Minister, Admiral Smyemu Toyoda, was removed even before he could be sworn in, and Admiral Mutsumasa Yonai — who once dared oppose warlord Hideki Tojo — replaced him in the new cabinet. Toyoda, said Japanese sources, might be considered a war-criminal suspect.

Will Be Held

All impounded metals and coin will be held until Allied headquarters receives instructions from Allied governments on its disposal.

The seizure, made quietly and without interference, was to make sure that the reserves did not disappear, and at the same time to obtain army and navy records which might show the disposition of loot from conquered territories, Allied headquarters reported.

Japan's new premier told a press conference he thought 'there were several regrettable points' in Japan's share of the Pacific War.

Shidehara said he believes the ends sought by Japan through war could be achieved through diplomacy.

The premier said it was "certainly within the rights of the Allied nations to arrest, try and punish those (Japanese) who were war criminals, but it's up to the Allies."

Statements Contrast

This contrasted with statements of his predecessor, Prince Higashi-Kuni, that Japan should be permitted to punish its own war criminals.

Throughout the half-hour press conference, the aged Shidehara continually explained that lack of information prevented him from answering several direct questions on domestic affairs. He said also that "I have not had time yet to read any of Gen. MacArthur's directives."

Shidehara characterized his cabinet as "composed of liberal elements, and you can be sure there are no reactionary elements." He said it was only a question of "a few months" before dissolution of the war and navy ministries.

Time is required, he explained, to change the imperial decrees which created the posts.

No Apologetic Note

Shidehara branded as "rumors" previous reports that Japan would send an apologetic envoy to China, and said he had no intention of so doing.

The newspapermen were told the new cabinet had not yet studied domestic policy, but the government might undertake reforms which it believes the occupation authorities want, in advance of any directive from Allied headquarters ordering the reforms.

Shidehara said that "as a principle, my government is fully prepared to recognize freedom of thought," which Gen. MacArthur has ordered for Japan.

Not Interfering.

The government was not interfering with the formation of the prospective new Socialist party, he said. He was "not prepared to answer" whether the new administration would permit organization of Communist parties, but he knew of no plans for organization of the latter.

Search for Child Continues Into The Sixth Day

Campbellford, Ont., Oct. 9 (CP) —Search for six year old Barbara Radford went into its sixth day today with no clues to her disappearance after she set out for home from school last Thursday.

Posses have concentrated their search along the Trent River and canal and through nearby woods despite the advice of an Oshawa, Ont., fortune teller who told the girl's father, G. W. Radford, Saturday that the child had not been near the river.

Hydro workers late Saturday night inspected sluices and gates at the nearby power plant in the chance that the girl had fallen into the river and been swept into the plant. They found nothing.

George Hardy, Campbellford police chief, said "there is only one thing to do: Keep dragging the river."

Hess Back With Nazi Associates

Frankfurt, Oct. 9 —(AP)— Rudolf Hess was among his former Nazi cohorts today for the first time in four years, but they were unaware of it.

Flown from Britain by plane to Nuernberg, he was whisked to a gloomy cell in the jail which houses Reichsmarshal Goering, former Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop and other Nazi leaders awaiting trial as war criminals.

None of the other prisoners saw the arrival of the one-time Deputy Fuehrer. They probably will not know of his arrival until some of them get a glimpse of him in the exercise yard.

Gunmen Make off With Bus Line Safe After Binding Night Foreman

Toronto, Oct. 9 — (CP) — Five masked gunmen held up the West York and District Bus Lines in the northwestern section of Toronto early today and made off with a half-ton safe containing $490 after binding and gagging a night foreman.

Police believe the same gang responsible for two other holdups in Toronto district within the last three weeks. A gang tied up employees of the Roselawn Farm Dairy early Monday and escaped after beating two men unconscious, binding and gagging two others and pouring a fusilade of shots at a fifth. Three weeks ago a milling company was robbed.

"They are a murderous gang and will pull their guns at the slightest provocation," one police officer said today. "They are the worst type of gunmen."

Howard Segee, 33, the bus company's night foreman, said the gunmen, led by a six-foot leader as in the other holdups, smashed down the front door of the premises and "they all had their guns on me."

They bound his wrists and ankles with sashcord and placed him against a wall with his feet in the air, he told police. Then they rolled the safe, which also contained a $100 victory bond and $350 worth of bus tickets, out to a stolen truck.

"It didn't take more than 20 minutes," Segee said. "I wriggied my way to the telephone, knocked it off the desk and told the operator to call the police."

A few hours later York Township police discovered the smashed safe and stolen truck in a side drive. The thousands of bus tickets were still inside the safe, as well as company records. Cheques totalling nearly $3,000 and lying on the bus line manager's desk also were left untouched.

BIG 3 UNABLE TO BREAK DEADLOCK OVER PROCEDURE

Foreign Secretary Bevin Tells British House What Agreement Was Made Before Meeting

London, Oct. 9 — (CP) — Foreign Secretary Bevin told the House of Commons today that Prime Minister Attlee, President Truman and Generalissimo Stalin have been unable to break the deadlock over procedure which collapsed the recent conference of Allied foreign ministers.

Just before Mr. Bevin began his formal report on the meeting, Mr. Attlee said the government "will of course be happy" to discuss with the United States the future of atomic power.

Mr. Bevin outlined to the crowded and anxious House details of the dispute which arose over the question of whether all five leading Allied powers would participate in peace treaties for the Balkans, Italy and Finland, or only those which were signatories to specific armistices.

"An agreement could not be reached between the three foreign ministers," Mr. Bevin said. "They referred the matter to the three heads of government and they took the same view."

Tells of Suggestion

Mr. Bevin told the House that he had suggested at the opening of the Foreign Ministers' Conference that it would be better if all five representatives could participate in all discussions, even on matters relating to the peace settlement. Power to take decisions would be confined to members whose government had signed the relevant terms of surrender.

James F. Byrnes, United States Secretary of State, had taken the same view. Foreign Commissar Molotov of Russia had agreed on the understanding that decisions should be taken only by delegations representing governments who were signatories.

"All agreed upon this interpretation of the Berlin protocol and the proposal which I made was adopted without a dissent," Mr. Bevin said.

"I am sure that when we passed this resolution at our opening meeting we believed that we had faithfully interpreted the understanding reached by the signatories to the protocol."

16 Plenary Meetings.

In accordance with this resolution the council held 16 plenary meetings during 10 days of hard work and made much progress, Mr. Bevin went on. A practical agreement was reached on the draft peace treaty in respect to Finland and considerable progress had been made on the draft treaty with Italy.

Much the same issue came up in connection with the draft treaty with Bulgaria. Since there was great divergence in view, Mr. Bevin said he proposed that an independent inquiry should be made into conditions in those two countries.

Pres. Truman Says Atom Bomb Secret Will Not be Shared

To Ask Partners in Discovery Britain, Canada to Outlaw It

Tiptonville, Tenn., Oct. 9 — (AP)—The world had notice today from the lips of President Truman himself that the secret of the atomic bomb will not be shared with other countries.

The President set the record straight at an unprecedented press conference here in which he also:

1. Made it clear that neither Russia nor any other ally had asked for the engineering know-how that led to the perfection of the bomb.

2. Designated State Secretary Byrnes to initiate discussions with Britain and Canada, partners in the fateful discovery, looking to the outlawing of its use.

3. Scoffed at reports the London meeting of the foreign ministers of United States, China, Russia, Great Britain and France was a failure.

4. Said there never has been a clash of United States and Russian interests and expressed hope there never would be.

5. Expressed concern that Russia has been badly misrepresented in the United States as Americans have been in Russia and attributed misunderstanding to differences in languages and difficulties in translation.

6. Expressed confidence that management and labor will adjust difficulties which have led to reconversion-retarding strikes—difficulties which he laid in large measure to a natural let-down similar to those that have followed every war history.

These pronouncements came unexpectedly from a wholly unexpected news conference last night at a private lodge here where reporters had been invited by the vacationing President for what was supposed to have been an off-the-record gabfest.

Britain and Canada, he said, share the knowledge of the atomic bomb secret and while he has not discussed his decision with them with reference to the secret, he felt sure they would agree with it.

All countries, the President said, have access to the scientific knowledge that led to the development of the atomic bomb, but only the United States, with its resources in money, men and plant capacity, was in a position to develop it.

The meeting of the council of foreign ministers, the President said, was no failure. Instead, it had laid the groundwork for progress.

He knew of no move for another "Big Three" meeting, although he said he would not stand in the way of one since he thought the Berlin conference was a successful affair.

BUDGET TO TOP HEAVY WEEK OF WORK IN HOUSE

Defence Minister Abbott is Expected to Give Details for Peacetime Army

Ottawa, Oct. 9 — (CP)—Parliament, lagging behind its usual pace in handling the country's business, reopened today after the Thanksgiving holiday facing a heavy week's work which will probably see it get the full picture of Canada's peacetime forces and one that will be topped off by presentation of the budget next Friday.

Its immediate task will be continued consideration of the government's war expenditure and war demobilization bill calling for $1,365,000,000 for seven months expenditures. Last week this brought opposition criticism that the nation's war costs had gone up too fast and were coming down too slow. It's anticipated more will be said this week.

Defence Minister Abbott is expected to take the floor of the Commons today or tonight to give details of the government's peacetime plans for a navy and army and thus complete the post-war defence picture.

Parliament already has been told by Air Minister Gibson that tentative post-war plans call for an air force of between 15,000 and 20,000 men. He added such a plan was only tentative since no concrete scheme could be laid until the government knew the final international agreements of the post-war world.

No Indication of Size

At the time there was criticisn from the opposition that the air force picture was being presented without that of the army and navy. In answer to this the Air Minister told the House Friday night that Defence Minister Abbott would be prepared to give the rest of the picture at the next sitting.

There has been speculation that Canada's post-war navy will be about 10,000 men and 20 ships, but there has been no indication as to the size of any Dominion peacetime army.

KRAMER TELLS OF HIS 'HUMANITY' TO PRISONERS

Thought it Good for Their Health to Keep Them Out in Cold Weather

Lueneburg, Oct. 9 (AP)—Josef Krämer, fighting desperately to save his neck, told a military court today that when the advancing British army was less than 30 miles from the Belsen concentration camp his superiors still were shipping thousands of prisoners into the camp he wanted to evacuate.

Testifying in his own defence, the former commandant of the Oswiecim and Belsen horror camps said he sent message after message to Berlin asking for evacuation orders. After the fourth appeal, he said, a reply came saying headquarters was unable to understand his desire to evacuate the camp because Himmler had just ordered 30,000 more prisoners sent there.

Kramer, who was represented by defence counsel as a scapegoat for Himmler and other Nazi leaders, said that from April 4 to 13 about 28,000 prisoners arrived at Belsen by truck, train and on foot. He said he assigned prisoners to huts in numbers far exceeding the capacity of the buildings because "I thought it was better to have a roof over their heads than for them to camp in the woods."

Kramer—first of the 4 defendants to testify—spoke in a calm, deliberate voice, contrasting markedly with his eager, exciting testimony when he first took the witness stand yesterday.

Scores Telling Point

His counsel, Maj. Thomas Claude Winwood, scored a telling point when he succeeded in introducing into testimony a letter which Kramer said he wrote his superiors in Berlin March 1, 1945 describing conditions at Belsen as completely out of hand and asking for assistance in setting them right.

Kramer defended as a health measure the roll calls during which, prosecution witnesses said, the internees — weakened by disease and starvation — were forced to stand for long hours in freezing weather.

PITCHED BATTLE BETWEEN POLICE, DELINQUENT GIRLS

Eleven of the Worst Offenders Taken To Fullum Street Jail In Montreal

Montreal, Oct. 9 —(CP)— A pitched battle broke out between police and a group of about 20 teen-aged girls at Lorette House, a detention home for young delinquents at Laval Des Rapides, Que., 10 miles north of Montreal, Sunday night, and ended with 11 of the worst offenders being brought to Fullum Street jail here.

The riot started after three of the girls had been released from solitary confinement, and about 9:30 p.m. they barricaded the door of the dormitory and started to hurl missiles about the room. The Nuns in charge of the detention home attempted to still the uproar, but could make no headway with the rioting girls, and police aid was summoned.

Lorettee House is operated by the Order of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd and has about 200 inmates, mostly girls who have been sent there at the request of their parents. The rioting occurred in one dormitory containing about 20 of the oldest girls.

Police said the girls had complained they were given bad food, were ill-treated and were forced to undergo solitary confinement and sometimes punishment by straitjackets, for offences against regulations.

The disturbance was not reported by Provincial Police on duty Sunday night on orders of Deputy Director Hilaire Beauregard. But yesterday Mr. Beauregard made a statement concerning the demonstration "which covers the bare facts as we see it now."

The young rioters fought police and nuns tooth-and-nail and for almost two hours smashed windows, furniture and tore up bed clothing.

Atomic Bomb Project Equivalent To Building Three Panama Canals

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
(AP Science Editor)

Oak Ridge, Tenn., Oct. 9 — (AP)—The atomic bomb project here, in plant construction alone, was equivalent to building one Panama Canal each year for three years.

The project was in three parts, science, industrial fabrication and the United States army. The army's job was to make the project go, to keep on schedule, finish in time to win, with a working force that finally numbered about 500,000, bigger than any great company's payroll, and all secret.

Head man of the "go" phase was Maj.-Gen. Leslie R. Groves. Chief deputy was Col. Kenneth D. Nichols. Two women probably knew the inside. One was Miss Virginia Olsson, of Calais, Maine, secretary of Brig.-Gen. Marshall who first headed the project, and afterward, throughout, for Col. Nicholas. The other was Mrs. Jean O'Leary, Gen. Groves' secretary.

Code names were used for some of the chief personages. Gen. Groves probably felt like one of them, the Lone Rahger, when it fell to him to decide that plutonium, the new explosive metal, should be made out of common uranium 238.

Plutonium was number four among the ways to get the material for a bomb. There was at first some doubt whether to proceed down that fourth road. But the decision was to take no chances, to do the maximum, and it paid handsomely.

Actually, all four methods ultimately succeeded.

The pressure was tremendous. The "go" men of the army felt they were dealing with either the biggest success of all time, or something the public would believe was the greatest hoax if it failed.

All of which boiled down, for the army to the need to succeed in time.

Only Col. Nichols and Gen. Groves had full entree into various phases of the project and Col. Nichols says there were a few closed even to him.

Probably nobody ever before had to hire 500,000 men without telling them what the job was for. Plain patriotism finally was the winning card. There were the local manpower boards all over the country. They at first turned a glassy eye on folks who couldn't tell why they needed men. But they gave, because the atomic project had the top of all priorities.

Stays in Dungeon Below Courtroom As Trial Proceeds

Witness Refuses to Testify In Absence of Defendant

Paris, Oct. 9 — (Reuters) — Pierre Laval today was convicted of treason and sentenced to death.

The case against the 62-year-old former Vichy premier went to the jury late in the day while he remained in a dungeon beneath the courtroom of the Palace of Justice which resounded to a two-house attack on his relations with the Germans.

Specific charges against Laval were of having intelligence with the enemy and attacking the security of France.

Andre Mornet, grey-bearded prosecutor of former Marshal Petain and the First Great War spy Mata Hari, had asked the death sentence. Earlier, he had declared frankly that the strange hearing was a political trial.

"The evidence of witnesses in a trial is not indispensable when the criminal's own declarations, his decrees and his actions condemn him," Mr. Mornet said. He recalled Laval's broadcast statement that "I desire a German victory." He said Laval's name had become synonymous with collaboration.

Laval Boycotts Trial

Laval himself had boycotted the trial.

The French Council of Ministers discussed the case at a lengthy, secret session with Gen. de Gaulle, but there was no indication that the government would interfere. Information Minister Jacques Soustelle said the ministers had found that the case was proceeding according to law.

Take Little Time.

A jury of 12 members of parliament and 12 from the Resistance Movement took little time to sea Laval's doom.

Laval was stripped of all citienship rights and his property confiscated.

It took the jury only 62 minutes to decide the trial which the white-tied defendant had called a "judicial crime."

As M. Mrnet completed summing up the case, presiding Judge Paaul Mongibeaux read a letter from the def dnetnats ETAOIN from the defendant stating that he could have refuted the prosecution charges had he "been able to be present."

Laval left the court room in a rage Saturday, declaring he was not being given a chance to be heard, and ordered his counsel to remain away also.

The ministers were reported in afternoon newspapers to be uneasy over reaction to the trial in France and abroad. Justice Minister Henri Teitgen was reported to have delivered a lengthy report.

The first witness summoned today, Leon Noel, former secretary-general of the French Foreign Ministry, startled the court by declaring: "I refuse to make any statement in the absence of Pierre Laval."

Noel said he had made serious charges against Laval during the trial of Marshal Petain, but "I shall not forget what I owe Laval during part of my career and his intervention in 1942 for one of my relatives." Noel did not explain either of the allusions.

Convinced of Conviction.

The former Vichy chief of government "is convinced he will be condemned to death tonight," said Albert Naud, defence counsel, but Laval is equally convinced a new trial will be held for "history"—possible even after the sentence of this one has been carried out.

Already condemned to death in his absence by a Marseille court last year, Laval appeared resigned to another conviction. In a note from his dungeon cell be asked that the defence rebuttal be skipped, and the defence, upheld by the bar association, announced this would be done.

Cannot be Stopped.

Such specifically constituted high court proceedings could not be stopped, lawyers said, without removal of the trial judge, Pierre Mongibeaux. In that event the new National Assembly to be elected October 21 might set up a new court.

M. Naud said Justice Minister Teitgen told him the defence's refusal to take part in the trial "is putting French justice in a bad light aboard," and promised that if Laval and his lawyers returned to the courtroom and jury would "conduct themselves properly." M. Naud said he replied that it was "too late."

Laval himself, asked yesterday if he would re-enter court, shouted:

"I'll go into the courtroom only in handcuffs and by force, and I'll turn my back to the court."

30 Fatalities During Weekend

ORANGES SUBSTITUTED FOR APPLES ON BOY SCOUTS' TAG DAY

Failure of the apple crop in the Bay of Quinte district this season has resulted in a changing of the usual procedure during the annual Boy Scout apple tag day which is scheduled for this Saturday with oranges to be substituted for the apples.

Drawing attention to the forthcoming Apple Day is an attractive window display at the local Public Utilities office on Front Street. The splendid work accomplished among today's youth by the Boy Scout movement is brought to the attention of the passerby in the attractive window display. Traditional uniforms worn by Boy Scouts and Wolf Cubs are shown while further attention is drawn to the fact that oranges will this year be substituted for apples in the Boy Scout and Wolf Cub tag day.

So, buy an orange on Saturday and help the local Scout movement.

PARTITION BLAZE QUICKLY CONTROLLED

A partition fire behind the fireplace at the Capt. Caldwell residence 192 Burnham Street resulted in slight damage early Sunday with the local fire department having to be called to extinguish the flames. Firemen reported little damage outside of fire damage to the partition.

VISITOR DEPARTS WITH CASH, CLOTHES

The old saying that there are many kinds of gratitude was again truthfully demonstrated in the city over the weekend when a Charlotte Street resident reported to the local police a man had stayed at his home during his absence and departed with $75 in cash and $150 worth of clothes. Apparently the man had been given permission to stay at the home of the owner during his absence. The owner discovered his mistake when he returned to find his visitor gone, together with his cash and clothes.

MISCHIEVOUS LADS TURN WICKS UP

Rapid burning of wicks in lanterns guarding pavement excavations in the Bleecker-Queen Street area has been a mystery to the works foreman of the local public works department until it was discovered mischievous lads were turning the wicks up and permitting them to burn. Police investigated the incident and upon discovery of the names of the boys responsible warned them to stay away from public utility property in the future.

COUNTY, CITY OFFICIALS TO VISIT WATERSHED OF THE MOIRA RIVER

County officials, reeves of the various townships, the Mayor and city council of Belleville, together with officials of the local Chamber of Commerce and others will conduct a "motorcade" of the Moira river watershed sometime during the middle of October, it has been announced.

A survey of the above watershed has just been completed by two engineers representing the Department of Lands and Forests with over 9,000 pictures having been taken from a plane.

The county is anxious that the project entailing flood control, water preservation and reforestation should be completed and with this view an effort is being made to line up municipal and other officials in the county. The exact date of the motorcade has not yet been announced.

Golden Wedding Anniversary Observed by Mr. and Mrs. Donoghue

In the quiet comfort of their modern home at 161 William Street, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Donoghue are today celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding.

A half century of happy married life has wrought some physical changes in this fine elderly couple, but the years have but tended to weld even stronger the ties that bound them in 1895.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Donoghue are in good health and their appearance belies their respective ages of 76 and 74 years.

They chatted amiably today with a newspaperman, in fact Mrs. Donoghue adopted a motherly attitude when the scribe's spectacles became steamed over, and kindly offered to clean them.

Both in Good Health.

"It has been wonderful," Mrs. Donoghue said, "and we have no regrets. We have a fine family and have had very little illness. I was sick but once but I got over that and today am feeling fine."

Mr. Donoghue said that he, too, was "in the pink" despite the fact that he had undergone three operations during his lifetime.

The couple was married in Stirling on Oct. 9, 1895, with Father Connolly officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Donoghue came to Belleville immediately following the wedding and have resided here since. She was the former Elizabeth Doran of Huntingdon township. Mr. Donoghue was born in the city.

Served With C.N.R.

For some years following his marriage the groom drove a "hack," as he terms it, a horse-drawn vehicle that was the forerunner of the present day motor car taxi. Some years later he turned from the Dobbin and buggy and became associated with the "iron horses" of the Canadian National Railways with which he worked for 20 years as a trans-shipment clerk. He retired some years ago.

Five children were born to the couple, four of whom are living. A daughter, Agnes, registered nurse, died eight years ago. Other members of the family include the Misses Teresa and Margaret, at home, Dan, of the C.N.R. at Cobourg and Godfrey of Belleville.

This afternoon the occasion was celebrated by members of the family and a few intimate friends at a tea held in the home. Mr. and Mrs. Donoghue received many cordial felicitations and best wishes from a large number of friends of the city and district.

CRO Bob Coulter Has Seen Much Of World in Travels

Practically a world traveller at a youthful age, Chief Radio Officer Bob Coulter, son of Mrs. H. F. Alford, 179 William Street, Canadian Merchant Marine, has arrived home for a week's holiday before rejoining his ship the S. S. "Lakeside Park" at St. John, N.B.

The young radio chief has seen plenty of the world since he left Belleville in 1942 after taking a special course at the Radio College, Toronto. Previously he was a student at the Belleville Collegiate Institute.

Graduating from his course with the now Chief Radio Officer, Jim Graham, also of the Merchant Marine, who is expected home during the coming weekend, Bob was posted aboard a merchant mariner vessel as radio officer. Five months later he was promoted to chief and has held that position since.

He has seen service on several large merchant marine vessels which have carried him to Australia three times, Africa, New Zealand, Cuba and the West Indies. He has been sailing mainly from Vancouver and strangely enough has yet to visit Britain.

Bob expects to remain with the service for some time yet.

Baby Born in Ambulance On Way to Hospital

Despite rapidly turning wheels of the speeding vehicle as it raced across the lower bridge and down Front Street toward the hospital, Old Man Stork won hands down in a race with a local ambulance early Monday morning when an expectant mother was being rushed to the hospital.

Early on Thanksgiving Day, Bush's ambulance was summoned to 19 Bridge Street West to take Mrs. Michael Solottollo to the hospital, but for some reason or other the call for the car was not made until the time was dangerously near.

With the ambulance attendant in the rear with the patient an extra passenger in the form of a bonny Thanksgiving Day son was added just as the car passed the city hall en route to the hospital. Reports indicate both mother and son are doing fine.

London, Oct. 6 (CP)—The London Daily Sketch announced today that a plane carrying Bryan Reynolds, 37, the paper's Pacific war correspondent, was two days overdue on a flight from Singapore to Colombo, Ceylon.

Weekly Assembly.

After some slight confusion Mr. Reid was brought to the stage to read the Bible lesson and with much prompting from Mr. Maybee, we finally managed to get through a Thanksgiving hymn and the National Anthem.

Mr. Hill opened business with the report on stamp sales for the first school-month. They are deplorably low. This fact reaches home even more forcefully when compared with what the school has done to help in previous years. Possibilities of picking up will be realized if each student will pledge himself or herself to buy or sell two stamps each month.

The president of our Students' Council seemed slightly perturbed over the expected reactions we might show concerning the announcement that the Tea Dance would be delayed until next week. We really don't mind Scot, we're all so pleased to have the "Hasty Pees" back.

Announcements for the week were made by Mr. Currie followed by the highlights of the assembly period. The band played in their old rousing style while the ever active stage-crew cleared the platform for a colorful moving picture entitled "Down Where the North Begins."

Girls Sports.

The arrival of the "Regiment" didn't do much to slow up plans for the coming volleyball season. As scheduled by Miss Morton, the tests for would-be referees and time-keepers were given Friday after four.

Teams, having been well chosen and seriously coached by their captains, deserve interested spectators, so your attendance at these games will be appreciated, if you are not preoccupied with rugby activities.

Conveners for the volleyball tournament, Fay Campbell and Ruth Payne, are working on the schedules so the tournament will start next Friday.

R. W.

Boy's Sports.

Inter-form rugby is well under way and last week 10-CD and XI-C came out victors while the game between 9-A and 9-B ended in a tie. The following is next week's schedule: Tuesday, 12-B vs. 12-DG; Wednesday, 9-D vs. 9-G; Thursday, II-A vs. II-B and Friday, 9-A and 9-B will meet again to decide last week's tie game. Next Monday 9-C will play 9-H.

Junior rugby will soon start and as yet only two teams are participating. These are B.C.I. & V.S. and Albert College.

No doubt it has been noticed that "horse-shoes" have been added to the athletic conveniences of the school. This may turn out to be very successful but it is advisable for students to keep their bicycles a safe distance from the pits. Bicycles left near are apt to be damaged and they also interfere with the game.

Coming Events.

Every week since this started we've told you about the coming Tea Dance. We have reached the point where we are afraid to mention it for fear of sticking our necks out again. In part, even now we are beginning to resemble a giraffe, (no cracks please.) No fooling, is it really going to be this week, Mr. Denton? Remember that the money raised by this dance will be used to start the "Elevator" so, as we have said once before (or was it twice) whether you like to either dance or read, come to the dance on Wednesday (? ? ?) and have a good time.

If you eat your dinner in the school cafeteria stick around and see some swell rugby. You lucky stiffs who eat at home can come back a little earlier and cheer your favorite team to victory.

Cuff Notes—

With the coming of the cool — (you said it) Autumn days, the wish to hunt something other than the ordinary run of whistle-bait becomes rampant in the youthful male, so to satisfy this urge, the bloodthirsty hunters hie themselves off to the woodland and marsh to make life miserable for the inoffensive partridge, ducks and rabbits. Several expeditions from this school started over the holiday with varying results. The tally for the Boyle-Toms-Cameron expedition appears to have been three "coke" bottles (completely demolished) and two tin cans (canned soup) and no ducks. Ah well gentlemen, such is life; better luck next time.

The School Play is in full production and among the cast of familiar names are Jim "Galahad" Watson, Wally "Moose" Muir. Also playing prominent parts are Ruth Blatherwick, Mary Lo Wishart, George Manjuris, Percy Marcus, Ruth Palmer, Stew Woods, and Don Beavis. Newcomers to the cast are Lois Flindall, Edna Moore, and Jean White. The curtain goes up the middle of November. A definite date has not been set yet however.

What with unexpected holidays and the old watch back it is increasingly difficult to remember what day it is. Several students through no fault of their own, have been showing up at school on Sunday evidently firmly convinced that it was Monday. I have been authorized to say that the rumors about Sunday classes at B.C.I. have absolutely no basis in fact and the eager-beavers who instigated these erroneous reports have been reprimanded.

Well as the poets have it "Enoff of dis American loff-making" or when translated freely "That's enough corn husked for this week". Well we can't all be geniuses can we? Hmmmmm.

WARRIORS' RETURN

For years on end, while the world doth bend
Under the heavy yoke, it will smoulder.
And the skies will gray, from day to day
With the gathering dust of the soldier.

From the far dark age, the world has waged
The blazen fury of battle;
And death was close, for he can boast
He has gathered in his cattle.

But the day will come, beneath the sun,
When peace alone will reign.
Then throughout the land, will every hand
Be raised to God again.

And then one day, from far away,
Our warriors will come home.
Home to stay, till another day
When the God of War will roam.
But always at last, the shadows will cast,
A picture of peace tranquil;
And man at his best, will go to rest
Where his heart with peace will fill.

Reporter Liberates The Sultan of Johore

(By Noel Monks, who went into Singapore with the vanguard of British troops, in the London Daily Mail.)

Sir Ibrahim, fabulously rich Sultan of Johore, drove with me from his Malayan jungle palace into Singapore—and talked of his meeting with Tojo, Premier of Japan, who told him Tokyo's plans to conquer the whole world.

Ex-Premier Tojo, said Sir Ibrahim, tried to impress him with his plans for a Greater Asia, and wanted the Sultan to throw his influence on the side of the Axis.

Sir Ibrahim said: "Tojo produced maps and showed me exactly how the Jaapnese were going to drive through Burma, thru' India, and to link up with the Germans at Baghdad.

"He said he had an agreement with Hitler that the Germans and Japanese would share Egypt, and North Africa and Morocco.

"From Morocco Tojo said the Japanese would eventually set sail across the Atlantic to America simultaneously with an armada from the Pacific.

"Really, it was all I could do to stop laughing at the old goat."

• •

On every Japanese ceremonial occasion the Sultan was hauled into Singapore under guard for the affair.

He refused to attend the annual ceremonies at Bukitimah Road, the spot where Britain's General Percival signed the surrender in 1942 and where the Japanese erected an obelisk.

They dynamited this the day before the reoccupation.

"The only time any Japanese ate in my palace," the Sultan said, "was when Field Marshal Count Terauchi, commander-in-chief, Japanese Southern Armies, sent his chief-of-staff to say he would be coming to lunch.

"They arrived about drink time, but my wife kept them sitting in the reception room and offered them nothing.

"Terauchi brought his bread with him and offered me a loaf. He scowled when I put it to my nose, smelt it, and handed it to my servant to throw away. We have not had bread for years.

"The Japanese would drop in at the palace at odd hours of the day and night without warning. They used to park their infernal cars right on my lawn. I had my gardeners transplant some big bougainvillaea bushes on it. That stopped them."

The Japanese fixed the Sultan's four big radios so that they could tune in only to Tokyo.

"But," his consort told me, "we did not tell them about the radios which we hid under our beds. They saved us from going crazy, as we got all the BBC broadcasts. We must be the world's keenest radio fans."

• •

I liberated Sir Ibrahim from the confine of his jungle palace, and drove him and his beautiful Romanian-born, English-educated consort into freed Singapore.

It was like taking a couple of children from a dark room to see their first Punch and Judy show.

They wept with joy as I entered the palace, but the tears dried on their cheeks as they drove past cheering crowds of the Sultan's subjects, and past the shrill Chinese across the Johore Causeway, where sweating columns of Japanese soldiers were straggling into captivity.

The Sultan, 72 on September 17, kept thumping my back and saying: "They know me; they know me."

There were tears again as we pulled up at a jungle camp of British and Australian prisoners of war.

• •

To call on the Sultan a colleague and I had to drive into the Japanese lines across the Johore Causeway connecting Singapore with Malaya and it was an amazing experience.

We were the first Britons to cross the mainland since the occupation, and we drove through the middle of a Japanese encampment where 85,000 sullen soldiers of the "Son of Heaven" will spend the next months, maybe years, before seeing any cherry blossoms again.

We called first at the Sultan's old palace and found the Japanese in possession.

You could smell them driving up the long driveway. None spoke English, so we got nowhere with them, but one of the Sultan's head servants came to our rescue.

He took us into a little cubbyhole at the side of the large reception room and pointed to a telephone. "Japanese take Sultan to other palace in the jungle," he said. "You speak with him here. He'll be pleased."

So we called up the Sultan. He must have been waiting, for he answered immediately.

"Is that Your Highness? We are two British war correspondents. Can we come up and see you?"

I heard a shout, then the Sultan's voice boomed into the telephone.

"Good heavens, man, is this really true? Come quickly."

We drove past thousands more Japanese and into the jungle for about ten miles.

The Sultan's guard was waiting in the roadway and waved us through the massive iron gates.

The Sultan and his consort all but kissed us as they led us into a reception room.

The Sultan, white-haired, once among the handsomest men in Europe's playgrounds, is still an imposing figure of a man, but he has shrunk considerably.

His consort, beautiful but thin and delicate-looking, said: "I've just let all my chickens out of their coops. Even they are free now. We had to guard them from the Japanese."

I noticed that signed pictures of the Royal Family on tables, included one of the late Duke of Kent, on which he had written: "Good luck for 1940."

• •

The place where the Sultan had been virtually a prisoner for three and a half years is called a palace, but it is a modern bungalow version.

The Sultan swept his bare, tattooed arm in a circle. "This is where they've kept us. They took over my big palace. Can you believe it, 300 of the vermin camped on my ballroom floor?

"They smashed up the palace furniture to cook with. I'll have to have the place disinfected and refurnished. This has been comfortable, but it's been our prison."

In the next two hours we got the Sultan's story.

Two days before our visit, old "dragon's breath," General Itagaki, Japanese commander in chief, Singapore, and his staff clanked into the Sultan's hallway to say goodbye.

They were a very glum lot, but very correct. Itagaki had been severely rapped over the knuckles by a member of the Japanese Imperial household for his "we fight on" talk.

Itagaki told the Sultan that the atomic bomb had lost Japan the war.

"He handled his sword," the Sultan's consort added, "as though he were going right out to commit hara-kiri."

The Sultan told me here that Tojo, on his return to Tokyo from Singapore, sent him a large ceremonial sword.

"My servant received it, and placed it out of my sight," he said. "I've not taken it from its scabbard. I want to offer it to King George as a souvenir."

During our talk the Sultan's servants brought us drinks. The Sultan proposed a toast: "To liberation." His consort told us that she made a vow on the day that Singapore fell that she would not drink again until it was liberated.

"This is my first drink since that day," she said proudly.

Soviet Aims in Europe Baffling

Do the Russians really know what they want in Europe? William H. Stoneham writes from London to The Vancouver Province.

Are they impelled by a willy-nilly lust for political and geographical expansion, for expansion's sake, or do they have a plan?

To what extent does Generalissimo Stalin approve of Russian irredentism as reflected in Russia's policy in eastern Europe?

Territorial Dream.

Is he dominated by a desire to go down into history as the man who made all of Russia's territorial dreams come true?

Or, is he the man people would like to think he is, a sensible statesman of world vision, who knows that civilization can survive only if Russia and the western world can live as friendly neighbors?

These questions dominate the minds of British and American representatives as they begin another round of political discussions with the Russians at the council of foreign ministers in London.

Unfortunately we do not know the answers. The plain truth is that Russian policy is so contradictory and in many ways so senseless, from our point of view, that it defies analysis.

Yet, until we do know where Russia is steering and why, our own policy toward it will be largely a blind one.

Unpleasantness Seen.

This "blindness" inevitably will lead us to stall for time or to block Russia when its motives are not clear. This, inevitably, will lead to unpleasantness, or even to more serious trouble short of war.

Even the Russians must be aware that American and British foreign policies are now in the hands of two men who are not accustomed to agree to things for the sake of agreeing.

Secretary of State James F. Byrnes is a rugged Irishman whose native astuteness is matched by a strong strain of stubbornness. Though he may stem from South Carolina, he is strictly from Missouri.

Ernest Bevin, the British foreign minister, is an even harder bargainer. Where Winston Churchill and Anthony Eden used to be easy-going on details, Bevin counts the farthings.

Asking is Not Enough.

If the Russians make reasonable claims and back them with sound arguments, and if they are willing to listen to other people's claims, they will not find it hard to do business. If they simply ask for things, they may just go on asking.

The following facts regarding Russian policy do appear clear to us:

1. Stalin has shown himself to be reasonable in his conferences with British and American leaders. At times his desires to be deferential to American or British wishes has led him to countermand decisions of Foreign Commissar Vyacheslev Molotov who still seems to think the world is bounded by Russia's frontiers. On several occasions, Stalin has humiliated Molotov in the presence of Allied representatives by ordering him to do things which he had previously refused to do. One instance was when he told Molotov to go to San Francisco.

Molotov is, undoubtedly, a good executive, but he has not gotten into the spirit of world co-operation. Despite Stalin's powerful position, he is to a certain extent the victim of his machine; he is not entirely his own boss and he has to listen to his colleagues.

Russian Isolation.

2. The Pan-Slav, big Russian isolationist element in the Soviet government has already led it to take steps which seem dangerously stupid from our viewpoint.

Russia, obviously, has all the territory it needs. What it needs now is a well-ordered internal economy to exploit its vast resources, plus whatever assistance it can get from the United States and other highly industrialized nations.

To save our necks we can not see what Russia has to gain by interference in Poland, Romania, Hungary and Bulgaria. We know that it has lost considerably by playing the heavy hand there. The presence of Russian troops and Russian support of minority Communist parties in those countries has hurt its prestige. Obviously, these tactics have made it difficult for the American and British governments to give Russia the economic co-operation which it needs and which we would like to give it.

Our experts cannot believe that Stalin is blind to the results of this policy. What is important from our viewpoint is to know when something will be done about it.

Freedom From Want Ultimate Goal of Food Organization

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(C. P. Staff Writer)

Washington, Oct. 6 (CP) — Attainment of the first of the four freedoms —"freedom from want" —will be the ultimate goal of the first session of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization which opens at Quebec on October 16th.

Between 300 and 400 delegates, many of them ministers of agriculture in their respective countries, are expected to attend the opening session.

L. B. Pearson, Canadian ambassador to the United States and chairman of the Interim Commission who is bringing the organization into being, told a press conference here Thursday that the importance of organization's long-term objectives could not be exaggerated.

"The importance of the F.A.O.," he said, "may prove greater than some of the more spectacular United Nations organizations now in the making."

The interim commission was formed at the Food and Agriculture Conference of 44 United Nations at Hot Springs, Va., in the Spring of 1943.

Accepted by 30 Countries.

It was assigned the task of drawing up a constitution for a world-wide organization and completed it a year ago. That constitution now has been accepted by 30 countries and it is expected that by the time the conference opens, at least 10 more

The organization will have power only to recommend to governments the kind of policies they should adopt in relation to agriculture production and methods, forestry and fisheries, and in the distribution of their products.

Soviet Russia is one of the most important countries whose acceptance of the constitution is not yet assured, but Mr. Pearson said he was confident the Soviet government would send a delegation.

Canada has not yet formally approved the constitution but approval is expected and a delegation has been named to Quebec.

BALLOONS IN PEACE

London —(CP)— Many hundreds of barrage balloons, used in the defence of London and other cities in Britain, have been placed by the British government at the disposal of industry. Raincoats, rubber aprons and various household goods are now being manufactured from the "demobilized elephants."

BOWLER ON WAY OUT

London —(CP) — Demobilized servicemen are no longer "reaching for their bowler hats" for the bowler is going out of fashion and the Anthony Eden black felt is unchallenged as headwear for the city worker. The bowler retains its popularity only in Manchester and Birmingham.

AFRICANS LIKE MOVIES

Nairobi, Kenya —(CP)— Audiences totalling well over 600,000 Africans in all parts of Kenya attended movie shows given by the government mobile cinema unit during 1944. This type of entertainment is a potentially powerful educative force among Africans.

What is LANTIGEN?

Lantigen is a specially prepared dissolved vaccine and has been used successfully in the treatment of various diseases. Lantigen is not a patent medicine. Lantigen is a bacterial vaccine in a dissolved state, is devoid of drugs and safe to take. Lantigen is a natural aid. It is produced from the bacteria which are peculiar to the particular disease requiring treatment. In the preparation of Lantigen the organisms are destroyed by a process of dissolution thus releasing the active principles from the bacterial bodies. Being in a completely dissolved state the vaccine is operative locally by obsorption into the tissues of the tongue, tonsils, throat, and the intestinal tract and is further operative by means of its distribution throughout the system. More than 150,000 people in Australia have enjoyed relief from the distressing affects of catarrh and allied conditions.

Big Field for Modernization in Canadian Homes

Many urban dwellers well supplied with running water, bathrooms, sewage disposal facilities and other conveniences probably have little conception of how few homes throughout the country are supplied with these devices. In a statement last week, Mr. C. A. Massey, President of Lever Brothers Limited, revealed how living conditions in moderate and low-cost homes compare with each other in different parts of Canada with the country as a whole.

Women researchers found that Ontario homes were amongst the poorest planned in Canada from the standpoint of getting sunshine indoors. Over a quarter of the homes in the cities and towns of Ontario need artificial light in some room of the house during daytime. On farms one would expect spacious surroundings to allow sunlight but the facts are 11 per cent of Ontario farmhouses need lights during the day. Clustered outbuildings added to the main building are reported as the reason.

The hot water necessary for so many tasks is not always conveniently obtainable from taps. More people have it in winter when furnaces are in operation. In summer time, just over a third of Ontario city residents have a plentiful supply at all times. Another 42 per cent have it by lighting gas, electricity or coal heaters, and 19 per cent must heat it in kettles or other containers on top of the stove. This inconvenient method is also used by 69 per cent of small town people and by 80 per cent of farmers' wives.

In the matter of bathroom equipment this province is a little better than average. Regular bathtubs are lacked by 13 per cent of city people, by 60 per cent of small town folk, and by 66 per cent of farmers. The survey shows the comparable national average is 18, 54 and 75 per cent. Wash basins, the other most common bathroom piece, are to be found in four out of five city homes, almost half the small town homes and almost a third of farm homes.

The prevalence of unhealthy and outmoded outside toilets in rural areas is well known. In cities, where crowded living conditions would tend to multiply their effect, a national average of 4 per cent of moderate and low-cost homes are still dependent on these antiquated and unsanitary devices. The survey shows that Quebec alone has succeeded in banishing them from her cities. Worst of all are the Prairie cities with 15 per cent.

Overcrowding, which is one of Canada's worst housing headaches, has not missed Ontario. Aggravating it are boarders, lodgers and hired help, who live in one out of five city homes, every eighth village home and more than a quarter farm houses. To add to the crush, near relatives are living with 9 per cent of city families, 7 per cent of village families and 18 per cent of farm families. This overcrowding is not all due to wartime shifts in population, as investigators found no surplus of living accommodation anywhere in Canada.

A result of this congestion is to be found in the number of Ontario people who report they have no bedrooms to sleep in. In the cities 11 per cent, in villages 12 per cent and on farms 2 per cent have to bed down in living rooms, dining rooms, kitchens, or anywhere a cot or a couch can be made up.

For a great many foods cooling is just as important as heating is in others. Ontario leads all other regions in ownership of refrigeration facilities. Grouping mechanical and ice refrigerators together the survey shows that 93 per cent of urban dwellers, three-quarters of non-farm rural people, and almost half the farmers questioned have such equipment.

Washing machines were more plentiful in Canada than in any other country and are in better supply in Ontario than most other provinces. Laundry tubs are missing from three-quarters of city homes, nine-tenths of village homes, and farm homes just don't have any. Most of these women use the less convenient moveable metal kind that have to be lugged around, filled by hand and tipped or baled out after each rinsing.

In a general observation of the state of Ontario home interiors it was noted that more than half are cracked, discolored and in need of paint, paper and general refinishing. More than one in every eight homes in cities and villages are so run down that only major repairs or replacements will restore the original appearance of walls, floors and ceilings. In equally unsatisfactory condition are almost a quarter of Ontario farm homes.

It would appear from the results of the survey that there is a big market to be developed in Canada for household equipment plus supplies needed for renovation of homes. This along with the work needed to provide the equipment should occupy a large amount of skilled labor for a good many years.

Bird Talk

Dorothy Kilgallen, who writes a chatty column on the doings of Broadway's Gay White Way, recently devoted a column to cats. Immediately came the deluge, says The Winnipeg Free Press. Irate readers complained bitterly of her fondness for cats and asked in much huffiness about her attitude toward birds.

The columnist was in turn outraged and felt herself deeply wronged, claiming that the very language of Broadway was rife with bird talk. For instance, an act that doesn't go over gets "the bird," a flop show is a "turkey," an inept gin rummy player is a "pigeon" and a person who carries tales to the authorities is a "stool pigeon." A wise lass is a "hep chick." An odd character is a "queer duck." A female who has been around too long is an "old hen."

And as Dorothy goes on to say, the history of Broadway is cluttered with feathered fellows. Many comedians seem to have a special affinity for birds. The late Joe Penner, Miss Kilgallen reminds us, made a fortune from his "Wanna buy a duck?" routine. Gracie Allen and George Burns made capital of an imaginary duck named Herman.

Perfume

Heaven help us, what do we have here—a special publicity release from a Fifth avenue perfume manufacturer offering, as his V-J gesture, a bottled aroma named Timeless Surrender, The Minneapolis Tribune exclaims. Timeless Surrender, he tells us in his mimeographed message, is Timely Today. Then he goes on; "Here is the perfume of conquest — witty to wear for your victory celebrations — significant to greet the returning hero. Surrender . . . he will if you wear it, she will if you give it!" Perfume ads like that always make us feel we're missing out on something. For one thing, it never occurred to us that a perfume could be witty, and secondly, we're surprised that wit is anything but out of place at celebrations, which are generally noisy with everybody blowing horns. It's the last sentence that really troubles us. Conquest by perfume. Kissing a beautiful girl because you brought her the right brand . Life has passed us by. Such things never happen on the editorial page.

Dover Cliffs Once Ocean Ooze

At one time in the geologic past, the famous White Cliffs of Dover were merely an ocean ooze which was made up, for the most part, of microscopic animals with intricate, limy shells. Examples of these shells, now fossilized, may be seen among the collections of the Royal Ontario Museum.

With a change in level of the ocean floor, over fifty million years ago, these oozes were raised above the sea. The masses of tiny shells then became cemented together to make the celebrated chalk formation, seen on either side of the English Channel.

As in so many instances, the lowly organisms of other ages have greatly contributed towards building the foundations of our modern world. In this particular case they have helped to form the very bulwarks of the nation.

JUST FOLKS

TROUBLE-MAKER

When a little fellow pleads
For a joy he says he needs
And quite adamant seems Ma,
And her will is law with Pa,
And the two of them agree
Such a pleasure cannot be,
Should his grandpa, with a grin,
Do what's known as "butting in?"

Should his grandpa say: "A boy
Is entitled to such joy?"
Should he dare to interfere,
Saying: "Now you folks look here!
Stop this talk of too much care
And a nuisance hard to bear.
Why such selfish reasons choose
So much gladness to refuse?"

When the mother and the dad
Stand against the pleading lad,
Should his grandpa lack the heart
To step up and take his part?
Not this grandpa! Here I go
Off to let his parents know
At his heels with him to jog,
Every boy should have a dog.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What is meant by "an Enoch Arden law"?

A law providing for a divorce, an annulment or exemption from liability on the ground of an unexplained absence of a husband or a wife for a certain number of years is called an "Enoch Arden law."

For instance, the present New York Enoch Arden law provides that a marriage may be annulled if either party has been absent for five successive years and is not known to be alive.

The more usual period of absence in Enoch Arden laws is seven years.

The long absence of many men in enemy war prison camps, without an opportunity to communicate with their people, has resulted in a great many "Enoch Arden cases."

The name was suggested by "Enoch Arden," the title and the name of the hero of a long narrative poem written in 1862 and published in 1864 by Alfred Lord Tennyson (1809-1892).

In the story a sailor named Enoch Arden, after being shipwrecked on a desert island for several years, returns home to find his wife, who supposed him dead, happily married to his friend.

After hovering in the neighborhood of his old home for a time the self-sacrificing hero decides not to make himself known, but rather than wreck the marriage of his wife and friend, he goes away and dies of a broken heart.

This poem by the poet laureate of England was immensely popular in the Victorian age and it is still regarded as a sort of "school classic."

The number of "Enoch Arden cases" has increased in recent years because of the great number of men who have been held in enemy prison camps without the means of communicating with their families.

IT ISN'T THE TAN BUT THE V-I-T-E

Just why do we regard a coat of tan as a part of the picture of health, vigor and vitality?

Offhand one might say it is because so many people return from vacations with a coat of tan and obviously improved health and fitness. We come to think of tan as synonymous with health, by association of ideas. Freckles, too, in a way. I say "we," meaning people in general. Not we doctors. Darn it, a doctor looks at things through glass of a different tint. I can't get my mind off from vitamin D when I see a coat of tan, even the best fitting coat on the figure. . . . And I can't admire good posture without thinking of scoliosis, lordosis, visceroptosis and other morbid things. Some readers may suspect I'm just a loafer, but the truth, I swear, is that I frequent the bowling green because there, for two or three hours, as any devotee of bowls will testify, one forgets every blessed (or damned) thing in the world but the business of insinuating one's bowl between one's opponent's bowl and the jack.

There's nothing particularly healthy about brown. Nothing particularly sanitary or "antiseptic" about white. Some people are too easily misled by the association of ideas. The most frightful breaches of aseptic technique may occur in a hospital elaborately equipped with white enamel accessories, men in white and nurses gowned and masked as for a sequence on stage 7.

We should learn to associate tan with the manufacture of vitamin D. I do not mean to imply that this is all there is in sunshine and open air life. But we know, at any rate, that sunlight, direct or reflected or diffuse daylight in a shaded place or even light screened through cloud, mist, fog, and the smoke or dust of city air, activates ergosterol in the skin and converts it into viosterol, vitamin D. So we should regard tanning as an index or measure of the state of the individual's calcium-phosporus metabolism, for vitamin D controls calcium - phosphorus metabolism. If the supply of vitamin D is insufficient the assimilation, utilization and retention of calcium and phosphorus in the body cannot be normal.

Normal calcium metabolism (never mind the phosphorus, it will be all right if the calcium metabolism is right) spells V-I-T-E. Can't stop to define vite now — consult the booklet "The 7 Keys to Vite," mailed on request if you inclose twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope. If you are concerned about growing children, send ten cents and stamped self addressed envelope for booklet "V-I-T-E Spells Youth." But hold on here, I'm meeting myself coming — or so it may seem to the uninitiated. Don't toss the paper aside. I'm not giving you the run-around. I honestly believe good calcium metabolism an adequate daily intake of calcium and vitamin D, is a prime factor of health, vite, youth, whether you are seventy days, seventy months or seventy years old.

Nine Reasons for Buying the forthcoming Ninth Victory Loan Bonds

Our First Victory Loan slogan was "Help Finish the Job". For eight successive Victory Loans Canadians have saved and bought Victory Bonds for that purpose . . . but the job is not yet finished. To finish it Canada must—

1 Maintain and pay our Army of Occupation in Germany.

2 Bring our boys home.

3 Provide the best of medical and hospital care for the sick and wounded until they are restored to health and employment.

4 Pay Service Gratuities.

5 Pension dependents of those who died On Active Service.

6 Rehabilitate and help returned men to re-establish themselves in civil life.

7 Help to provide essential food and medical supplies and other goods and services necessary to prevent famine and pestilence in liberated countries, and the dangers that would follow the world-wide spread of post-war diseases.

8 Co-operate with our allies in bringing essential help to liberated countries. Production for this purpose together with production on the back log of home requirements will help ensure a high level of employment.

9 Prevent inflation by continuous saving and restricting unnecessary spending.

The Ninth Victory Loan will be the real test of Canadians' determination to finish the job. The tendency to relax after Victory is natural enough; but there are many tasks still to be completed . . . . and obligations to be fulfilled, otherwise the sacrifice of our men and the thrift, industry and resolution which inspired us to save and lend during the past six years will have been in vain.

This will be the only Victory Loan for a year. Therefore continue to save at the same rate per week or month as you have been doing and buy twice as many Victory Bonds as you bought in any previous six months' Victory Loan saving period. You have a year to save for them and a year to pay for them. Buy on the Payroll Savings Plan or buy them through your bank, loan or trust company.

There is no better security than Victory Bonds. You can always borrow on them—or they are readily saleable.

All we wanted was the smartest, gayest, most cheerful living room in the world!

What we had was one of the dullest, most uninspired and drab rooms on Elmhurst Drive!

But the budget! . . .

"At least, we can do something about those draperies," I told Jim. And I ran up some gay, modern-looking material I'd picked up at a bargain. While I was about it, I did a job on new slip-covers, too.

In the meantime, Jim fixed up some smart, oversized frames for our prints, and did a re-painting job on the walls. Then a Venetian blind to cover both windows. "Hey! It begins to look like something around here!" he said, one day.

"There's just one thing wrong," I said, ". . . the floor. And I know how I can fix that up. Without a lot of expense, either!" Next day we looked at Gold Seal Congoleum Rugs —and bought a beautiful one in colors that go wonderfully with the rest of our room. And it will wear as well as it looks! For Gold Seal Congoleum has an exclusive wearing layer of heat-toughened paint and baked enamel—equal in thickness to 8 coats of best floor paint applied by hand. Tidal Bore At Moncton Performs Twice Daily

One sure way to bore a citizen of Moncton, N. B., is to ask him about the famous bore.

The bore, as everyone not a resident of Moncton, has heard or read, is the tidal wave that twice daily moves up the Petitcodiac River from the Bay of Fundy. It comes in according to schedule and goes out the same way. Only, when it makes its exit it does so with a minimum of disturbance and does not cause the flurry that accompanies its entrance, says a Windsor Star writer.

We had been in Moncton many times but had never seen the bore. It had either just arrived before our own arrival, or it was not due for more hours than we cared to wait. So, we had never seen it. There were times when we discussed stopping over in the New Brunswick railway capital just to see the phenomenon, but we had never quite become that anxious to see Fundy do its stuff.

Other Lure

That is the difference between the bore and that other tourist bait of Moncton, the magnetic hill.

Where the magnetic hill performs all day and all night, every day and every night, the bore only performs twice daily, although it is daily for 365 days in the year and 366 in leap years.

Of course, as everyone realizes, the magnetic hill is an optical illusion and Moncton has not even bothered to get a paved road out to it. Even the signs pointing the way are weatherbeaten, or were when we made the trip.

But the bore is different. There is supposed to be only one other bore in the world and it is away over somewhere in China, which is a long way to go.

As Darkness Falls

However, we arrived one evening in Moncton and, as we always had done on arrival, we inquired about the bore and when it was due. We were told it would arrive at 8:15 p.m., and although darkness was gathering at that hour, there would be some opportunity to see it.

It had been pouring rain all day and the skies were cloudy and forbidding. But, nothing daunted by a bit of weather we set out to arrange to see the bore.

When we went to a taxi office near the depot, the taxi people were surprised that anyone should be curious enough about the bore to want to hire a taxi to go and see it. They explained that it was not a very pleasant evening and the chances of a good view of the incoming bore would be grim, indeed.

Nevertheless, the taxi people said they would have a cab ready and we could drive down to Bore Park and take a look-see. Bore Park is toward one end of the Moncton main thoroughfare and it is a beautiful spot, even on a rainy night.

Ahead of Time

As the bore was due at 8:15 we arrived about 8:10, thinking Fundy might do some tricks on us and we did not want to miss.

The taxi driver explained that the bore came up some 40 miles or so from the Bay of Fundy. The tides of Fundy are among the highest in the world, and as the tide waters rushed up the Petitcodiac River, they formed a wall of water that surged forward.

As 8:15 arrived and no bore, the driver said that it was dark and perhaps if it were daylight we could see the bore in the distance. We were worried in case the bore might be taking an evening off.

Rushing of Water

However, at 8:17 we could distinguish a rushing sound and we strained our eyes to peer into the darkness to catch sight of the water.

Sure enough we could see it about 100 yards away and coming toward us about as fast as a small boy can run. The bore was not in particularly good form that evening, but the wall of water was about two feet high and extended from bank to bank of the river, a distance of some 50 yards or so. It came along quite rapidly and making a rushing sound as it approached. Sometimes the wall of water is over three feet high.

Before we realized it almost, the wall of water had passed and we followed it along until it was swallowed up in the darkness beyond.

Splendid Park

The view from Bore Park is fine as there is a concrete walk right along the waterfront and a person can stand and lean against the railing and watch the wall of water approach, then pass almost beneath the feet and move along up the stream.

After the first rush of water, the tide keeps coming in for about six hours and it gradually fills up the river to a depth of from 15 to 20 feet.

Anyone can get a miniature picture of the bore by putting the stopper in the bathtub and turning on the water. If enough force is turned on, the water plunges into the tub and rushes in a little wall to the end of the bottom of the tub. Then, the tub gradually fills, just as the river fills with the tide.

Not Very Interested

We were telling one Moncton man about it. He told us he had lived there for 27 years and he had not seen the bore until a few months ago. He had just never got around to it.

Another man looked at us queerly when we mentioned the bore, and then he asked us if we meant that little stream of water when the tide came in.

The bore is famous outside Moncton. But in Moncton, well, it is like the prophet who was not without honor, save in his own country.

BROAD PLAN SEEKS MORE VITAMIN C

Scientists Attempt to Find Best, Cheapest Source of Scarce Vitamin in Widespread Ontario Tests

Toronto (CP) — Looking toward the day when fruits and vegetables will be developed not for their flavor, size or color but for scientifically determined vitamin C content, a broad program is being carried on in Ontario to find the best and cheapest sources of the scarce vitamin, valuable in combatting and preventing certain diseases.

The project, initiated four years at the Ontario College of Agriculture, Guelph, now engages the co-operation of the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, the Nutrition Foundation in New York and the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Hundreds of varieties of edible plants and of wild plants not ordinarily eaten but likely to be rich in vitamin C, including milkweed, rose hips, walnuts, chicory, common mustard and a number of varieties of herbs have been tested during the research work.

After four years of painstaking work, Dr. J. H. L. Truscott of the Agriculture Department and associates at the hospital and Horticultural Experiment Station at Vineland have compiled a voluminous report which contains a mass of information of tremendous value, not only to medical and nutritional science but also to fruit and vegetable growers.

Sun Big Factor.

It was found, for instance that red cabbage has double the vitamin C content of green cabbage and that five days of continuous shade causes a marked reduction in vitamin C content of certain vegetables. Experiments with tomatoes proved that those harvested under glass in January contained about only half the vitamin C found in the same variety harvested in July or August either under glass or outside.

There was evidence that tomatoes grown in the Barrie district tended to be high in vitamin C and that those grown at Vineland had more vitamin C than those grown at Guelph. But it has not been definitely determined that the environment factor is directly associated with vitamin production.

These discoveries led to a second phase of the project in which an attempt was made to breed tomatoes with as high a vitamin C content as grapefruit, which now has double that of tomatoes.

Breeding was started in 1944, and this year the first and second generation progeny look promising in the fields at the O.A.C. Plant breeding for the same purpose has also been started with carrots, squash and radishes.

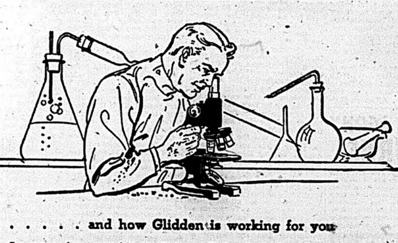
The amazing story of THE SCIENTIST AND THE SOY BEAN



..... and how Glidden is working for you

For years we have operated large mills for extracting linseed oil from flax seed. These mills were busy only when the flax crop came in. To keep them busy throughout the year we brought in copra or dried cocoanut meat, and produced cocoanut oil.

Then we began using these mills to extract oil from soya beans. Research on soya beans led to one development after another. Today from the soya bean oil we make vegetable oils and shortenings. From soya beans too we have developed the finest binder yet produced for water paint—Alpha Protein.*

We also make Soybean Flour, Soybean Meal, and refined proteins used as coating for paper and sizing for textiles.

Our research chemists, in their study of soya beans, have made many discoveries in the field of hormones, and have produced progesterone, now used by the medical profession throughout the world.

Because of intensive research with oils, metals, pigments and other raw materials, Glidden laboratories continue to be leaders in the development of fine paints, varnishes, lacquers, stains and enamels. To be sure of quality in the surface finishes you use, look for the name "Glidden".

World Series Tied at 3 Games Each as Chicago Cubs Defeat Tigers in 12 Frames Monday

Seventh Game Will be Played Wednesday in Chicago

By SID FEDER

Chicago, Oct. 9 — (AP) — It was a photo finish as to whether the ball players or the fans were dizzier from the antics that threw this weird World Series between Detroit Tigers and Chicago Cubs into the full seven-game route.

They're going to need the finale of this richest series at 1:30 p.m. E.S.T. tomorrow all because of yesterday's "rhubard" that the Tigers finally lost to the Cubs 8-7 in 12 innings of something that resembled baseball.

In yesterday's game there were such doings as 38 players parading about the premises; a base-runner falling flat on his face with home plate in sight; dinky fly balls falling for hits while fly chaser bowed politely; enough throws to wrong bases to bring a suggestion for a radar set in the infield, and an assortment of pitching by nine elbowers.

On the other side there was Hank Greenberg's homer in the eighth that topped off a four-run Detroit rally and tied the game. And Stan Hack's four hits, the last of which, with two away and a mate on first in the 12th broke up the ball game.

It was on the original ruling on Hack's hit in the 12th that the official scorers reversed themselves. Dizzy Trout, five-hit winner of Saturday's game, was in there for Detroit by that time — the fifth Bengal pitcher during the afternoon.

Frank Secory had touched him for a single and Billy Schuster was sent in to run. Hack, who'd knocked in two tallies during a 4-run Cub rally in the fifth, hit the 2-1 pitch through short and on into left field.

Hank Greenberg came in to field it and Schuster slowed up coming into third. Then the ball took a crazy jump over Greenberg's shoulder and kept right on its merry way out to the left field wall. By the time Hank caught up with it, Schuster was home, Hack was on second and the series was tied at three games each.

The scorers ruled it a single for Hack and an error for Hank. This started a sizzling stew among baseball writers and baseball men. Five hours later the scorers announced they'd recounted the votes and ruled it a two-bagger for Stan, and no bobble for Greenberg.

As a result of his game-wrecker, the victors went to the second hero Hank of this series — Borowy — who won the opener last Wednesday and was clubbed out in six rounds Sunday. Hank came on in the ninth, after Claude Passeau and a couple of other collapsing walk, and pitched four scoreless innings fir his second victory of the set.

Tigers in Better Spot

The Tigers are in a lot better spot for the odd game tomorrow than the National Leaguers. Detroit has Lefty Hal Newhouser, who's won one and dropped one so far in the series, ready to go, with Lefty Stubby Overmire set to play fireman.

The Cubs had to uhe all four of their regular starters — Hank Wyse and Ray Prim in addition to Passeau and Borowy — to win yesterday's game. Although Borowy has asked for permission to go to the post, the chances are manager Charlie Grimm hight use someone like Paul Derringer or Paul Erickson or Hy Vandenberg to start the game. As a result, the lobby bookies are quoting 3-2, Detroit for the big pot.

Hack's four belts yesterday gave him a total of 11 for the series, within one of the all-time record. His was one of the very few sane marks approached, equalled or surpassed during the fantastic contest. Another was the all-time financial high of $1,388,277 set for a series' gross receipts.

Long Time to Finish

Other highlights of the game included the three hours and 28 minutes it took to finish it, which is 34 minutes longer than any other series scramble; 38 players —19 for each team; nine pitchers who walked in and out; 94 at bats for the two clubs and the 48 for the Tigers, 24 left on bases.

On Sunday the Tigers took the lead in the series for the first time when they slugged five Chicago Cub pitchers for 11 hits and won handily 8-4 behind Hal Newhouser's lefthanded flinging. Borowy was driven from the mound in the sixth inning by four solid Detroit hits after he had matched Newhouser pitch for pitch through the first five frames.

Greenberg was the big gun of the Tiger attack, smashing out 3 doubles, scoring three times and driving in a run.

In Saturday's game Tigers tied the series up 2-2 when they walloped Chicago 4-1 behind the five-hit pitching of Paul (Dizzy) Trout. The Bengals scored all their runs in one big inning — the fourth — when they drove southpaw Ray Prim from the mound and counted on four hits and a pair of walks.

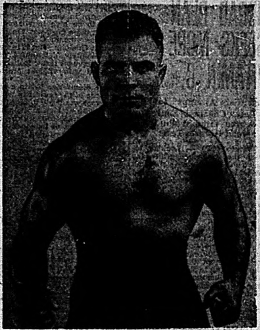
KATAN-WAGNER HOT BOUT FOR WEDNESDAY

Uproarious mat action is scheduled for the Hume Arena wrestling ring Wednesday night when "Blackjack" John Katan locks horns with Bob "Strangler" Wagner in the main bout. Wagner has always been a stormy battler on the mat and can be counted on to tear into Katan with his usual dynamic vim and vigour. The "Portland Cement Mixer" has just returned from a visit to the Pacific coast. In his two months of back-breaking and neck twisting, Wagner laid low many of the main, prominent mat men in California, Washington and Oregon. Back in the east now, Ruby Robert is champing at the bit and demanding top flight matches from every promoter in the territory. Having assailed Promoter Frank Tunney with his usual blustering bids Wagner was treated to the extemporaneously cool Tunney stand-off of "Beat big John Katan first and then I'll listen to your claims." Frank Tunney has found the wrestling hep city of Belleville to be an excellent spot for cooling out some of the louder, boasting claimants of the mat world and so the fans here get many a chance to see bouts that a town of this size ordinarily would not justify. In any case Wagner and Katan go at each other on Wednesday night and the winner is assured of continuing main bout prominence here and elsewhere. Regardless of which of the big roustabouts is demolished, the fans are all set for a solid evening of enjoyment.

In the semi-final Pat Flanagan will meet a clever new comer to Belleville, Joe Jackson. Opening the proceedings, Jumping Joe Maich has been matched with Martin Hutzler.



"Wow, and what a tasty dish to set before the faithful of Belleville's wrestling fandom" gurgled Phil Watson, wrestling impresario from a sick bed on Saturday when he heard that Marse Tunney, was sending down John Katan and Strangler Bob Wagner to put on the piece de resistance of pachydermy at the Hume Arena here on Wednesday night.

And that is just what it will be for these two gentle little playmates who think nothing of gouging eyeballs, tearing tonsils, ripping off arms and legs and in general raising hob with torsos, are slated to tell bedtime wrestling stories to one another on Wednesday.

The "Strangler" who has ways and means of his own to make his opposition yell "uncle" or whatever they say in wrestling circles when they are turned inside out, is out for the Katan scalp. But Krafty John who is no teacher's pet, or a yes-man when it comes to the bad villainous stuff is all prepared for the Strangler and his ideas of pinning a guy to the mat.

So it looks like blood and thunder in the air on Wednesday night and just as a keen appetizer to the main entree, Pat Flanagan will meet a clever new boy, Joe Jackson and in the curtain raiser Jumpin Joe Maich is back again to cross wrestling swords with Martin Hutzler. Advance tickets are on sale at Cook's Tobacco Shop. Doors open at 8.15 and the first bout starts at 8.30.

BURRARDS WIN SECOND GAME FROM ATHLETICS

Vancouver Outplayed and Outgamed Losers From Goal Out to Win 18-7

By LORNE BRUCE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New Westminister, B. C., Oct. 9—(CP)—Before the Canadian lacrosse finals began, sponsor Ed Irvine of Vancouver Burrards told everyone who would listen that his team would beat the Dominion champion St. Catharines Atlhetics three straight.

Some 4,000 fans who saw Burrards trounce St. Catharines 18-7 here last night for their second straight victory will be more than slightly surprised if Irvine's prediction misses.

The fleet Western champions were even more convincing than in the first game which they won easily 12-6. Vaucouver outplayed and outgamed the defending champions from the goal out.

Most lacrosse fans figure Bill Whittaker of Athletics is the best in the business but his stellar play last night was overshadowed by Walt Lee, Burrard's veteran netminder. Lee shut out Athletics in the fourth quarter of the first game and did it again in the first and third quarters of the second possibly a record for Canadian finals.

Over the full-game route Lee made 24 stops compared with 26 by Whittaker but the Vancouver goaler was more sensational as he gathered in many shots that looked like sure goals

No Spell of Jitters

Unlike the first game, Burrards started off without a spell of jitters, ran up a 5-0 lead in the first quarter and retained their margin for an 8-3 lead at half time. In the third Vancouver fired another five while holding Athletics scoreless for a 13-3 lead.

In the final 15 minutes Burrard's weathered St. Catharines' rally and bounded back with one of their own to outscore the Eastern team 5-4.

Bill Harris, Vancouver winger who pivots around the opposing goal like a ballet dancer, rapped four goals behind Whittaker and Roy (Fritz) Cavallin, veteran Burrard rover, also rifled in four.

Other Vancouver scorers were John McDonald, Harry Buchanan, Fred Whittaker and Pat Theale with two each and Ernie Smith and Frank Lee with one apiece. Don Matheson, Burrards' ace playmaker, had four assists.

Centre Bill Nelson led the St. Catharines' scorers with two goals. Pat Smith, Bill Mackie, Jim McMahon, Doug Cove and Tom Madsen tallied one apiece.

A HOLIDAY?

It was a hectic weekend for local baseball and softball fans with championships coming and going and a sideline of World Series that had the fans almost dizzy with things happening. In the first place another of those outstanding hurling duels took place at Batawa between Lefty Jack Garton, and Frank "Smoky" Smith of the Thornbury squad, Georgian Bay champions. The game and series was decided by a simple error on the part of the Batawa catcher in the first inning, which resulted in the only run of the pastime and which eventually proved to be a million dollar-marker. Thornbury won by a score of one-nothing in a game that was almost exclusively a duo affair between fine intermediate baseball southpaws. In fact the entire three-game series was all pitcher, and both Garton and Smith gave performances that were not only reminiscent of the good old days of Tommy Pointer and Chief Williams, but also racked up a record in intermediate baseball circles of the province.

In the three games that went 34 innings all told, Smith and Garton totalled 104 strikeouts between them. "Smoky" got himself sixty, or an average of 20 per game while Garton whiffed 44. Only two walks were issued during the series, both of these by Garton.

In fact in the payoff tussle, the players outside the batteries and the first basemen were more or less spectators. The Thornbury catcher got credit for 21 putouts (all whiffs) and the first baseman handled six throws for outs. Aquino, Batawa catcher handled nine whiffs and Wagar, first baseman, got credit for 15 putouts.

The scorers and the outfielders had a field day, in a series that was definitely a two-man affair, something for that little thing called the book.

The second of the holiday titular scuffles took place at Hamilton on Saturday when the more experienced Dresden, Ont., junior baseballers won the youngster OBA title from our juniors. It was the third game of the series and the local kids after creeping up within striking distance blew higher than the Empire State Building in the 7th and the Dresdonians trotted over eight runners to pack the title in ice and carry it back to the Western Ontario hamlet. The 14-5 score does not indicate the play for the St. Louis gang, for as was mentioned they were in there at the seventh and it was anybody's ball game. But the Dresdon bats came to sudden life and bingo—that was that. The Belleville kids however have nothing to be ashamed of. It is their first season as a team in OBA circles and their experience will do them a world of good. They have a long way to go as juniors yet, and by the time the most of them reach the "over" age other junior squads of the province will have heard from them. As it is, they deserve a lot of credit for reaching the Ontario finals in their first year in strange company and like the proverbial turkey they will improve with age. They made a lot of mistakes but they played a good brand of ball and were a distinct credit to a city that at times, it seemed, didn't know they existed.

HAIL to the Champs

The sweetest cup of all in the set-up of week end sports was the winning of the Ontario Amateur Softball Association junior championship by the Columbian Squires, conquerors of Oshawa, Toronto and other points. They hoisted the mythical pennant here on Saturday afternoon, after Old Jupe Pluvius had done his best to thwart any softball activities. The game, originally scheduled for the Fair Grounds, was diverted at the last moment to the Alemite Field where a large quantity of wood shavings and manual labor was necessary before the master-minds decided to start the doings.

The Hamilton Charles, who bowed to the Squires in two straight games, were claimed by Hamilton sports writers to have been "cold" because of diamond inactivity for the past three weeks, prior to the 5-0 defeat the Squires tacked on them in the Ambitious City a few days ago. In truth, it must be said that the Charles are a smart young junior team, and had the management thrown in the thrick hurler, Pidsadny in the first innings, the going might have been tougher for the locals. As it was Beatty, started, and the Squires bunts and bats blasted him out of the ball park in two innings. The nine-run lead was too much for even the cunning Pidsadny to overcome although they threatened once in the 6th when they scord three. But to young Don Boyle goes the season's accolade. The youngster came through in fine style and bore the brunt of the hurling. On Saturday he was never better. He allowed only three hits and these scattered. In the seventh he told the manager his arm was numb, but his heart was alright. So the kid went back in there and backed up by a fighting Squires team, went on to win the game and the title. Nice going laddie. You came through with flying colors.

SOMETHING NEW

This boy Pidsadny (you guess his nationality) relief hurler for the Hamilton Charles is nobody's fool with a mushball. He sprung a short forearm windup that whipped the ball across the plate before the batter took his eyes off the plate. The Squires management got up in arms but His Nibs the Umps claimed the delivery was fair. It seems it is a steal from Uncle Sam's mushball hurlers. In any event the kid, while the arguing was going on, put on a display that wasn't bad to look at. He whipped the ball over the platter, first with his right arm, then his left. He threw his forearm pinwheel, then with a sudden motion whipped his right arm behind his back and the ball sped for the plate from under his left arm. Another novelty was a back-hand flip with his right that sent the ball to the plate after coming over his right shoulder. What a bar tender that guy would make.

SPLINTERS

What a luscious tidbit Marse Tunney has for the rasslin fraternity here Wed. gloaming at the Hume Arena. Strangler Bob Wagner and John Katan. A couple of tom cats, tails tied, hung over a fence (we got that one from a small boy acquaintance of ours) will be like a pink tea in comparison when these two graduates from the Pachydermic Pool of Mayhem glare at each other...... There'll be no quarter given nor taken.... So don't miss the show if you like your wrestling steak done on the rare side.... Incidentally Phil Watson writes us that the Old Pump is kicking up again and he is down for the count.... Note to Wrestling Bobby Soxers.. Whipper Billy Watson was the victim of a nasty injury on Thursday night in his bout with Frank Sexton. He had his chest bone accidentally splintered during a terrific melee with Sexton and at present is in St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto...... He fought Sexton off for three minutes to the bell and nearly went out for the count from Kid Pain......

Vern Goyer is back from Shawinigan Falls where he failed to make the grade with the Providence Reds.... Likewise brother Leo.... Walt Gerow Jr. is still going strong however and will likely get a contract.... Goyer tells us the opposition was plenty strong with about fifty former semi-pros and others with plenty of big loop experience trying out for the team.... Well, there are other years, son, and there's plenty of time.... Rumor still insists that there are ideas in certain circles re the formation of a city hockey league.... Why wait until December to start the puck and organization rolling? Wanna bet on Chicago?

LESSON NO. 801
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Some players park their judgment when they have a rule to follow. Such partners fool me now and then. It seems too good to swallow.

Get a load of this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH	NORTH
♠6	♠Q J 10
♥A K 10 6 5	♥8 7 3
♦A Q 10 4 2	♦7 5
♣K J	♣Q 6 5 4 3

The correct bidding of these hands is like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
1♥	2♣
3♦	3 NT
4♦	4♥

Some players would open the south hand with a two bid. But it has not enough tricks for that. Some would open it with a diamond. But with same length suits, first bid the higher rank.

Some would consider the north hand too weak for a two club reply. But it has three tricks with two high cards among them and a biddable suit. So, why not tell the truth?

By some players, the second round bid by south would be only two diamonds. But south can now see tricks enough for a game. That can be shown only by the one-jump game-force.

Instead of three no-trump on the second round, some norths would bid three hearts to show a preference. But preference is not asked when each suit is bid only once. And support has not been seen.

But when south rebids one of his suits, it is a demand for a choice. It says: "Partner, whether or not you have support for either of my suits, tell me which you like best."

A partner should not ignore such an urgent plea. But I have known partners to pass such a request. Asked why, they give this excuse: "I already had it at a game contract. If you didn't want it in four diamonds, you could have left it at three no-trump."

That's why some bridge players leave home.

General Denial Given Story About Chandler

By The Canadian Press

General denial was given yesterday at Chicago that all was not happy in the relationship of major baseball club owners and Commissioner "Happy" Chandler in connection with a reported disagreement over his proposal to hike the salary of the World Series umpires from $2,500 to $4,000. The clubs issued a statement which asserted there was no basis of fact to the story, although president Will Harridge of the American League said there had been a difference of opinion regarding the salary subject.

There had been talk the leagues had considered buying up the Commissioner's $50,000-a-year contract but Chandler asserted:—"Maybe I won't sell."

Cpl. Leo Matricianna, heavyweight champion of the U. S. Air Force, said at Weisbaden, Germany, where he is stationed, that his bout next month with Bruce Woodcock, British Empire titleholder, had been indefinitely postponed.

Shortstop Lou Roumaldi lashed a home run to deep right yesterday at Sudbury to cap a three-run rally which enabled Timmins Combines to defeat Copper Cliff Redmen 3-2 in the third and deciding game of the Northern Ontario Senior Baseball championship series.

Don Oberholtzer's six-hit pitching carried Waterloo to a 1-0 victory over Welland Saturday in the first game of the Ontario Baseball Association bantam finals.

General manager Jack Zeller of Detroit Tigers revealed at Chicago last night he had tendered his resignation to club president Walter O. Briggs, saying he wanted to spend at least two years in Texas for his health. Stanley (Bucky) Harris of the Buffalo Bisons was mentioned as his successor.

In preparation for an exhibition football tilt with McMaster of Hamilton next Saturday, Coach Warren Stevens of Toronto Varsity yesterday has reduced his senior squad to 50 aspirants who still include 18 backs and 12 ends. The college schedule opens Oct. 20.

Stratford Nationals evened their playoff series with Niagara Houcks in the senior "B" finals of the Ontario Baseball Association by turning back the visitors 12-3 in the second game at Stratford Saturday.

By defeating Hamilton two straight, the Columbia Squires captured the Ontario junior softball title, taking the return match 11-3 at Belleville yesterday after a 5-0 victory Saturday last week.

The Indians of Tecumseh proved to be two-time winners over Hayes Steel to acquire the O.B.A. intermediate "A" championship, thanks to the heavy hitting of Hal Jackson and "Mud" Bruneteau, both members of the Detroit N.H.L. Red Wings. Indians took the second game 12-2 at Merritton Saturday, following a 9-3 decision in their first clash of the final round.

Junior Hardball Team Beaten 14-5 by Dresden in Third And Deciding Game at Hamilton

Eight Runs in Seventh Puts Game in the Bag for the Winners

An eight-run explosion in the 7th innings after Speedy St. Louis Belleville juniors had crept to a 6-5 score, put the game on ice for the Dresden juniors and they went on to win the third and deciding game of the series by a 14-5 count and the Ontario Junior O. B. A. title.

The game was played in Hamilton on Saturday afternoon and was closer than the score would indicate. Dresden scored four markers in the second innings and one each in the 3rd and 5th. The Belleville youngsters however came back with three in the second and two more in 5th to bring them within striking distance. Then came the fateful eighth and the balloon went for a count of eight runs and the ball game was sewn up for the Dresdenites.

Bunton, starting Belleville hurler lasted until the seventh and up to that time was touched for seven hits and six runs. After the Dresden bats went to work in that inning, Bunton was replaced by Kelleher after giving up four hits and a walk for six runs. The left hander walked the first man up and the next batter singled, but after that he settled down and did a good job for a lost cause.

Two hits and a brace of walks sent the Dresden team off on the right foot for four markers in the second but Belleville came back strongly in their half of the chukker when Goyer and Reeves got on by virtue of errors and hits by Bunton, Semark and Bush sent three counters across the plate.

Dresden scored one in the third and another in the fifth to go three up but the St. Louis gang felt hope arise when they scored two in the 5th to bring the count to 6-5.

Fateful 7th.

Then came the fateful seventh and the deluge and the Belleville team's hopes of a championship went aglimmering.

The Dresden team did not use their ace pitcher, Cooke, negro star, but threw back Holmes, who appeared to have the Indian sign on the locals in the second game at Dresden. The right hander struck out eight and walked two while some sloppy fielding by his team mates did not help his cause to any great extent.

Bunton struck out four and walked the same number while Kelleher issued two free tickets. One of the fielding highlights was a snappy double killing by Bush to Fitzpatrick to Kelleher.

Big Vern Goyer led the Belleville attack with a pair of clouts with Bunton kicking in with a neat triple. Strachan smashed out a scorching double but went out trying to stretch it to third. Bush, Reeves, Kelleher and Semark got the remaining hits for the local kids.

Cooke, who played 3rd base for Dresden clouted out three base smacks one a two-bagger. Johnson, however led the parade with a triple and three singles while Smith added three hits to the count.

The game was played before a handful of spectators, the greater majority of whom were Dresden residents.

Lacrosse Association Granted Affiliation

Vancouver, Oct. 9—(CP)—The Pacific Coast Lacrosse Association yesterday was granted affiliation with the Canadian Lacrosse Association, it was announced last night by E. E. Oarnes of Vancouver, C.L.A. president.

Affiliation had been requested by Frank Sweeney, Los Angeles businessman and president of the newly-formed P.C.L.A., at the opening session of the annual meeting of the C.L.A. here Friday.

Mr. Sweeney, who was born at Victoria and captained the Victoria Foundation team, winners of the Mann Cup at Winnipeg in 1919, said his association wanted to form a four-team league in Los Angeles to operate between January and the end of March.

Teams would be made up of players imported from Eastern and Western Canada.

Mr. Sweeney said it was the P.G.L.A.'s wish to further the game in California by encouraging high school students to take up the game and "some day bring a California-born team north in quest of the Mann Cup."

THORNBURY WINS DECIDING GAME FROM BATAWA, 1-0

Error by Catcher in First Innings Paves Way for Only Run

A catcher's error in throwing a dropped third strike to right field in the first inning actually decided the Ontario Intermediate "B" baseball championship for 1945.

The bobble occurred in the third and deciding game of the final series at Batawa on Saturday afternoon between the home team and the Thornbury nine with the visitors emerging on top by a 1-0 score to annex the tussle and the title.

Thornbury won the first tilt by 3-2 after twelve innings of hectic baseball while Batawa on the Thornbury diamond defeated the Georgian Bay champs 5-0 in the 13th innings of a torrid game.

The final game on Saturday like the first two was another great pitching duel between those two sterling southpaws Frank "Smoky" Smith of Thornbury and Jack "Lefty" Garton, of Batawa. The two pitchers easily stole the series limelight with outstanding exhibitions and established something of a provincial record with their performances.

Won in 1st.

The game, as it was eventually proved, was won in the first inning. Thornbury lost the toss and Cesar, the first man up struck out. Aquino, Batawa catcher, let the third strike roll away from him and in his hurry to nail the runner at first promptly heaved the ball to right field and Cesar was parked on 2nd with none out.

Garton forced Haines and Mae to ground out to the infield with Cesar reaching third on the plays. Then came what was the million dollar hit. Goldsmith smacked out a single through second and Cesar scored. Fawcett, the next man up grounded weakly to the second baseman.

From that point on it was all Smith and Garton. Both allowed four scattered hits, two of them doubles, with Smith whiffing 21 Shoemakers and Garton turning back nine of the opposition via the strike-out route.

One of those incidents for the "book" occurred in the 6th when Thornbury asked for a runner for Goldsmith who had singled after one was out. Lougheed, visiting shortstop took over the running duties for his mate.

Lougheed went to 3rd on a passed ball and Muffitt's error, while Fawcett parked on second. Smith walked and the sacks were loaded.

Rare Incident.

Then came the rare incident. Lougheed who was on third as a pinch runner, was the next official batter at the plate. Parked on third base he was unable to take his place at bat and after considerable bickering he was declared automatically out and the side retired.

Batawa had a chance to even matters in the first innings after Solmes had doubled with one out. Big Smoky forced the next two to ground out and that was that. On four other occasions they got men on base but failure to hit in the clutches got them exactly nothing. Garton was equally good in the pinches despite the fact that he erred himself twice and his infield tossed the ball around on a couple of occasions. Thornbury's biggest chance came in the sixth when the management bungled matters by sending in Lougheed as a pinch runner. A hit at that moment might have meant three runs.

Lougheed hit a double for the winners, with Goldsmith getting two single, and Fawcett the remaining hit. For Batawa, Solmes smoked out a two baser with Aquino getting the cleanest hit of the game and Stojan and Muffitt coming through with singles.

Columbian Squires Defeat Hamilton Charles 11-3 to Win Ont. Softball Championship

Don Boyle Hurls Three-Hitter and Team Scores Nine Runs in First Two Frames

Belleville won its first Ontario Junior softball championship in years at the Alemite Field on Monday afternoon when the Columbian Squires defeated the Hamilton Charles 11-3 in the second straight game of the titular series. The Squires took a 5-0 decision from the Charles in Hamilton a week ago Saturday.

Rain had reduced the Fair Grounds diamond to a quagmire and with the visitors here and the weather clearing, officials obtained permission to use the Alemite Field, thanks to Mr. Arthur Young and the Stewart Warner Alemite Corporation, and by dint of wood shavings and a lot of manual labor on the part of Harry Rollins and company the diamond was declared fit to play on a few minutes after three o'clock.

But to get back to the game.

Again it was the Squires hurling ace, Don Boyle that came through with a sparkling three-hit effort. Behind him the Squires settled down both afield and with the bludgeon, and despite a couple of errors came through in grand style to annex the provincial title.

Win Game in 1st.

The first two innings told the story. The Hamilton manager decided to start a right-hander by the name of Beatty and he lasted just a little over one innings. The local kids by virtue of some timely bunting and a little solid clouting pushed over five runs in the first chukker while a large crowd of fans gave them all the vocal support they needed.

In the second they took up where they left off in the first and by the time the smoke had cleared and a starteld Hamilton management had realized what was happening, four more Squires had crossed the platter and the game was in the well-known container. From then on it was all Boyle, with the exception of the sixth when a walk, two errors and one lone hit sent three Ambitious City kids scampering across the plate. But there it ended. The dark hurler settled down and blanked the opposition hitless for the next three chukkers.

Boyle allowed but three hits, struck out three and walked the same number.

Squires got 15 hits off a brace of Hamilton chukkers, eight of them coming in the first two innings. Beatty decided he had had enough after four hits for four runs had been yielded by him in the second with none out. The Hamilton management then sent in Pidsadny, a trick hurler, who can throw them across the plate with either hand, around his back or between his legs. He had a trick semi forearm wind-up that caused a lot of argument, but it didn't prove dangerous since Squires got to him for seven hits and two runs during the remainder of the pastime.

Strategy Worked.

The bunt strategy decided upon by the Squires management in the first inning worked to perfection. Three in a row by Culkin, Bunton and Fitzpatrick filled the bases, then Vern Goyer scorched out a single that almost cleared the sacks. The next batter got on through an error. Donovan struck out and Rollins cocked out a single that resulted in the fifth run.

In the second Culkin again the first man up got aboard through a Hamilton bobble. Bunton bunted successfully for the second time and the reliable Fitzpatrick promptly scorched out a double. Goyer singled and that was the end of Mr. Beatty. Pidsadny came in and the next batter hit safely. By this time four runners had galloped home. Came two strikeouts and a walk then another whiff and the side was retired.

Pidsadny blanked the locals with his queer delivery for the next three frames. In the 6th Fitzpatrick smacked out a clean single, stole second and third while two were whiffing and came home when Donovan beat out a bunt. In the 7th Rollins beat out a hit. Wardaugh and Culkin whiffed and the reliable Bunton drove out his third hit of the day to score Rollins. And that was that for the Squires.

Fitzpatrick with a double and two singles led the Squires attack. Bunton was good for three, while Vern Goyer, Donovan and Rollins had two clouts to their credit. For the visitors, Crooker, Lapp and Hickey were responsible for their three hits.

ARGONAUTS STILL 'QUALITY FOLKS' IN EAST FOOTBALL

Toronto Big Four Team Shares Lead With Ottawa Rough Riders

By ALAN HARVEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

It's been off the market three years now, but the trade name Toronto Argonauts still stands for "quality" football.

That brief commercial on the peacetime Argo product emerges as the principal post-mortem of a crowded holiday weekend program which toppled the last of eastern Canada's nine major league teams from the undefeated category and left all but two in easy range of play-off territory.

Seven games were played starting Friday and then the final whistle sounded late Thanksgiving Day Argos shared the Big Four lead with Ottawa Rough Riders, each with two victories against one defeat. The trailing Hamilton Tigers and Montreal Hornets were just two points behind.

Toronto Indians, 16-11 conquerors of Ottawa Trojans in the floodlight Friday battle at Maple Leaf stadium, clung to a two-point lead in the Ontario Union after Toronto Balmy Beach dropped their first game of the season 5-0 to Hamilton Wildcats at Varsity stadium Monday.

Joe Soyka's third-quarter touchdown, set up by Mel Lawson's pitching arm and George Wright's 19-yard plunge, produced the mild upset and shunted Wildcats level with Beaches in the O.R.F.U.'s second slot. Pass master Bob Porter heaved five successful forwards on a closing Beach flurry, but the 75-yard march stalled at the Hamilton 25.

Escape From Maiden Ranks.

Trojans escaped from the maiden ranks at Ottawa Monday but remained four points behind Wildcats and Beaches following their 9-1 victory over Windsor Rockets, still without a victory in four starts despite one of the league's toughest winglines and a bullet passer in Deedie Dawson.

Wildcats, now two points ahead of Rockets, have played more games than any eastern team except Indians, but their "points-against" total of 19 is the lowest in either circuit.

Rockets lost 20-6 to Beaches at home Saturday but the game was less one-sided than the Big Four contest at Varsity the same day between Argos and Hornets. Along the ground and in the air, Argos were irresistible. With Royal Copeland, Doug Smylie, Byron Karrys and Andy Tommy providing most of the fireworks, the Double Blue swept for 20 first downs and rolled up a 21-3 score despite 180 yards in penalties.

Copeland scored two touchdowns, Tommy and Karrys had one apiece in the conclusive conquest. Coach Ted Morris withdrew his first-string backfield in the fourth quarter and Hornets held the home team scoreless.

Hornets Score Upset.

Hornets came back Monday in Hamilton to produce the season's upset with a 10-3 verdict over Tigers, achieved largely on long kicking by Doug Harvey and Al Garbarino. It was the second defeat of the weekend for the touted Tigers, who lost 19-10 to Riders in Ottawa Saturday. Veteran Geo. Fraser and outside Bert Haigh collected 13 of the 19 points between them.

CHAPTER 10.

Paul didn't laugh as she had expected him to. He merely leaned over and kissed her very gently and said: "When they turn the kleig lights on you at the premier of your picture in a few months, ankle, I'll wonder if I'm important enough to claim that rain check I gave you."

Elaine breathed deeply, swallowing the lumpy feeling in her throat. "You make it sound so wonderful. But I guess it really isn't very important about being 'big', is it?"

Paul shook his head. "A lot of nice people in the world aren't."

"Thanks, fullback, thanks for helping me grow up a little." She felt tearful again, but for a different reason. She tried to let her smile tell Paul everything that was within her for him "Don't worry about the rain check."

She was reading the newspaper clipping about Lee's failure when Paul buzzed at her apartment door. The late afternoon rays of the sun were sweeping dusky shadows across the living room floor, curling up the corners and shooting long fingers up the walls.

Lee's new play had flopped miserably and Warren had closed the show after two nights. The critics panned Lee with gusto. Near the end of the story, which she had clipped from a New York paper, Karen was quoted as saying she and Warren were searching for a new play for immediate production.

Elaine dropped the clipping in the pocket of her bright, flared skirt and admitted Paul.

He tossed his hat on a chair and quickly folded his big frame in a nearby chair. He sighed heavily. "I'm tired. I've been taking a group of southern exhibitors on a tour of dear old International."

Elaine smiled down at him. "Where are all the assistants you're supposed to have?"

Paul shook his head and reached for a cigaret from an ivory box. "They all had a heavy schedule at Santa Anita. But I make them cut me in on any winnings."

"Thief." Elaine started for the kitchen. "Hungry?"

Paul looked up. "We eating here?" He sniffed the air.

"Sure. Think I can't cook?"

"Well, you never know about these modern girls." Paul lazily exhaled cigaret smoke, watching the sun's shadows turn darker. He leaned over and snapped on a lamp.

Elaine had the little dinet table set and was opening the oven door to test the roast when she felt Paul's presence in the doorway to the kitchen. She grinned at him.

"You look rather cute," he said. "Sure you didn't have some restaurant prepare the roast and then send it up here?"

She waved the long fork at him and he ducked back, laughing. Then he stepped into the kitchen and handed her a plate, watched her work on a salad.

"You're pretty good at this sort of thing," he said seriously. "You'd make me a good wife, at that."

"You have a one track mind." Elaine muttered, slicing some fruit into the salad bowl.

"It's a pretty good subject to think about," Paul mused. "But don't let me rush you. I can wait another five minutes for an answer."

Elaine wiped her hands on her apron and handed Paul the bowl of salad. "Put this on the table and hurry back and fill the water glasses."

Paul busied himself with his errands and for a brief moment Elaine watched him, thinking of the meals she used to prepare in the little apartment in New York when she and Karen and Lee ate together. That all seemed dismal and dark in her memory now. There was nothing cheerful to think about. There was not the bright laughter, the sunlight, the carefree moods that etched the scene in her apartment now.

She was staring at the table, not seeing it, when Paul snapped his fingers before her eyes.

She smiled and shrugged. "Just thinking."

"Anything special?"

"Meaning you? No." Then her smile faded and she looked at Paul, saw the wrinkles from the sun at the corners of his eyes, saw how his lips would turn up at one corner and his eyes would shine in a quiet smile that he might share with you.

She made no effort to push away when he closed his arms around her. She liked the feeling of security that always surrounded her when she was in his arms. His kiss was soft, slow, and when he started to pull away she found her own arms were drawing back to her, closer still.

He finally moved away, looking at the roast. "The meat's getting cold," he said quietly and walked into the living room. Elaine silently turned to the roast, her heart pounding against her chest, her hands trembling. . . .

Paul helped her with the dishes, laughing as he told her little incidents at the studio. She had found it impossible to write at the studio office, had moved her equipment to her apartment bedroom and began writing what she hoped was a good movie script.

Paul had read parts of it, made suggestions, and with his eyes told her it was good, very good. Vocally he only said: "Not bad" or "you're showing improvement." Elaine was grateful for his help.

When the last dish was dried, she moved restlessly into the living room. Dance music was coming from the radio. She leaned against the radio, watched Paul pick up a match and light two cigarets.

"Like to do something?" he asked, handing her a cigaret.

"Yes. Something. But I don't know what?"

"California is full of many things—animals, minerals and violin strings."

"Doesn't sound interesting."

Paul looked at the floor. "How about a night baseball game?"

Elaine shook her head.

"Night club?"

"No. I don't feel like dressing."

"I know a place that we can take in and not dress for. No movie people. Just a litle stuffy place with a good piano player and a lot of smoke."

Elaine stared thoughtfully at the same spot on the floor Paul had been looking at. Finally she shook her head. "No. I'm sorry, Paul, I'm just in a mood, I guess."

"Well, let's ride anyway. No place in particular. Just burn up some gas. Okay?"

She nodded and after a few moments they were in Paul's long, shiny convertible coupe. The top was down and the stars were beginning to punch through the darkening sky. She could see them breaking their silver shafts against the far distant fading tinge of sunlight.

They might have driven for hours through the bright streets of Los Angeles, along the clean, open, highways along the ocean, through the winding roads of the canyons. They listened to music from the car radio, they smoked and accasionally they would talk. But mostly they sat comfortably in the car and watched the night, the neon lights of little trading districts, the traffic, heard the swell of the ocean, the chirp of crickets in the canyon.

Suddenly Paul swung the car off the highway and up a little canyon road. At its crest he turned the car in a circle and stopped. She could look over the summit and down at the finger shafts of car lights traveling the highway, or she could look to her left and see the umbrella of lights that was Los Angeles and its environs.

It was cooler and she pulled her coat across her shoulders a little more. Paul helped her, his arm over her shoulders. When he looked down at her, his brown eyes studying her closely, she slipped against him, closing her eyes to the lights, to the many thoughts that weaved through her mind, to the newspaper clipping that lay crumpled in the pocket of her skirt.

She wished that his kiss wasn't quite so much like Lee's.

It was raining in California that day she splashed her way along the studio streets to the exploitation building. She had just finished a conference with Sam B. Lewin, who was a tall, heavy man with a face that was florid but not flabby.

He liked loud neckties and quiet business suits. He liked to watch it rain, he told Elaine. He liked the chocolate pie they served at the studio cafeteria and asked her if she had tried it. He told her he liked Paul Mason and hoped to keep him with International. He said Paul could, in a few years, name his job at any studio. He said he liked Minnie Brann's cakes, too, and wished sometimes he could talk Annie into taking a producer's job with him. He said he was tired, that he had a lot of responsibitities, but that he liked his work. Only he was lonely and he asked Elaine if she knew what he meant. She said she did and he nodded.

And then he offered her the long-term contract that would make her fabously rich, he said if she saved her money. And when she refused it, he understood why. He understood that there was a mood, an inner feeling attached to the stage that might never grow with a person in the motion picture industry.

He thanked her for her work on the picture, said he had just come from the projection room and was pleased, and then he handed her a bonus check and promised that she would hear from him again.

And that was Sam B. Lewin. A tall, heavy man who was head of International pictures and just a litle lonely because he wanted people to like him for himself and not because of his position. A shrewed business man and producer who talked slowly and gently and was very kind.

POLICE COURT

"Apparently a rather successful Thanksgiving", commented Magistrate T. Y. Wills at the conclusion of Tuesday morning's city police court which took exactly eleven minutes to dispose of the cases listed on the docket. Eleven charges ranging from over time parking to intoxication were settled out of court while three were heard in court and two others remanded for one week.

Seven Days Given

A Point Anne resident will spend seven days in jail as result of being found guilty of having care and control of a motor vehicle while under the influence of liquor. His license will be suspended for the usual three-month period.

A second Point Anne resident was remanded for a week on a charge of having possession of liquor.

The customary seven days in jail was the penalty meted out by the magistrate to a city resident on a drunk driving charge, while another resident was given the opportunity of securing $13 forthwith or spending the next ten days in jail. He pleaded guilty to a charge of intoxication.

Two Fine 'Lunge Hooked In Muscote Bay

Muscote Bay yielded two fine specimen of 'lunge on Sunday last to anglers Hazen Stairs of the Central Barber Shop, and John Black of the Black Meat Market, in this city. The 'lunge caught by Mr. Stairs measured 51 inches and tipped the beam at 32 pounds. This fish will be entered in the Belleville and District Anglers' Association contest. The fish that Mr. Black hooked weighed 25 pounds and measured about 3 feet.

Mr. Stairs was trolling alone and having about one hundred feet of line out decided to have a sandwich. He had partaken of the sandwich and was enjoying a cup of hot coffee, when the big fellow took hold. Everything was forgotten for about thirty minutes as Mr. Stairs and the 'lunge tussled all over Muscote Bay. He was finally brought to the boat and successfully gaffed. This was the first lunge that Mr. Stairs had ever caught and no doubt he will be after the big fellows from now till the end of the season, which incidentally is next Monday.

Jack Black was down the bay with a party of friends and was doing a spot of trolling before journeying to a bar for bass fishing. After trolling along the weed bed near the island, Mr. Lunge took a flier at the bait and the battle was on. Mr. Black's boat is a large one some difficulty was experienced in landing him.

Both of the fish are exhibited in Mr. Black's window and many looked with envious eyes on the fine specimens.

Horse, Cattle Sheds at Fair Grounds Burn

Loss is $2,000 and Origin of Fire Has Not Been Determined

Damage estimated at approximately two thousand dollars resulted in the Belleville Agricultural Society exhibition grounds early Sunday afternoon when fire of unknown origin swept through about one quarter mile of closed-in horse and cattle sheds.

The fire started midway between the Sidney Street entrance and the northeast corner of the horse barns and had gained considerable headway before it was noticed and the alarm turned in.

Fifty closed in stalls used for trotting and exhibition horses were destroyed in the flames which were checked by the Belleville Fire Department before open stalls used for sheep swine and horses were ignited.

James Scott, fair grounds caretaker, stated there had been no sign of fire at one o'clock Sunday noon but an hour later the stables were a blazing inferno, the fire spreading rapidly in the straw floor covering, an aftermath of the exhibition. A small quantity of baled straw was also consumed in the blaze.

Although the origin was undetermined, it is thought boys may have been responsible. Several boys had been seen in the neighborhood during the morning and it is thought they may have been smoking.

Parks Board officials stated the barns would be rebuilt although a meeting of the board had not yet been held. The loss was covered by insurance, it was stated.

Borowy, Newhouser Starting Pitchers In Deciding Game

Chicago, Oct. 9 (AP) — It'll be Hank Borowy pitching for Chicago Cubs and Hal Newhouser for Detroit Tigers in tomorrow's seventh and decisive World Series game in Wrigley Field.

Manager Charlie Grimm announced selection of Borowy this morning. Manager Steve O'Neil of the Tigers tabbed Newhouser for the important assignment soon after yesterday's rousing 12-inning 8-7 victory by the Cubs which enabled them to square the series at three games each.

Borowy already has appeared in three series games and came out of them with a record of two victories and one defeat. He made his last appearance yesterday, going to the mound in the 9th. inning. He was the fourth Cub twirler in the free-hitting contest.

Newhouser was Borowy's mound opponent in the first and fifth games. Thus he has a 2-1 record in the current series, and with enter the game with almost three days of rest, whereas in the same span of time Borowy has pitched approximately 10 innings.

United Efforts of Community Make Possible Opening Of Lake St. Peter Church Sunday

Church is Practically Free of Debt and All Labor and Materials Donated

Bancroft, October 9 — (Special) —A community that has never had a Church, having used a school house for services, had its long-dreamed project come true on Sunday morning last, when at Lake St. Peter in the northwestern corner of Hastings County, its little church, nestling in a plain amidst the great Laurentian rocks was opened for Divine Worship. Miss Agatha Coultes, Reg. N., Missionary in charge, conducted the service and Rev. Robert McLauchlin, B.A., supervising pastor, preached on "Speak to the Children of Israel that they go forward". The building was not large enough for the numbers who came. It was truly a real Thanksgiving Day for a whole community, whose united efforts had made the event possible.

A New Experiment

The area in Hastings around Bancroft has become nationally known in church circles because within a radius of about 40 miles an experiment is being conducted under the Home Mission Board of the United Church of Canada in what is called 'The Larger Parish' in which one Ordained minister, in this case Rev. R. McLauchlin of Bancroft, is in charge, with areas around Boulter being served by Mr. Boyd Beckel, son of the Rev. J. E. Beckel, and around Maynooth by Miss Coultes and Miss M. Willows, workers of the Women's Missionary Society, who live together. These latter preach every Sunday in turn at Zion, Lake St. Peter, McGarry, Pleasant Valley, Maynooth and Musclow, and the Sacraments are administered quarterly by the supervising minister from Bancroft.

Several Ministers Present

The opening service began at 11 o'clock with a processional hymn: "All people that on earth do dwell, sing to the Lord with Cheerful Voice" led by the Choir with Mrs. Fred Bailey at the organ. In a dedicatory prayer, Mr. McLauchlin petitioned "that this Church, built with prayer, interest and sacrifice, now opened to Thy Praise, may ever be filled with Thy Presence"; and the choir number appropriately enough was "The Little Brown Church in the Vale."

Present at the service were several Ministers: Rev. C. J. Crabbo of Eldorado, a former pastor, who preached at the evening service later in the day; and Revs. J. W. Down and Andrew McLauchlin of Belleville, grandfather and father respectively of the preacher of the day. Mr. Down is one of the veterans of home missions, having been Missionary at Haliburton in 1888 and builder of the Wilberforce Methodist Church in 1889. He is 86 years of age and spent 45 years in the active ministry in the Bay of Quinte Conference.

Telegrams Received

Telegrams of congratulation were read from the President of the Bay of Quinte Conference of the United Church, Rev. H. B. Neal of Renfrew, who will himself officially visit the Church to dedicate it on November fourth; from Rev. J. I. Mackay of Montreal, Superintendent of Home Missions for the Bay of Quinte and Montreal and Ottawa Conferences. A letter from Rev. J. R. Trumpour of Cannifton conveying the congratulations and interest of the Belleville Presbytery to Miss Coultes and the Congregation was read; and Miss Coultes conveyed a similar message from Mrs. C. M. Loveys of Toronto, Executive Secretary of the W. M. S. of the United Church. The Church has been receding for some years in its marginal areas in the north, but with this new Church and new ones at Paudash and at Baptiste in the last three years, and Haliburton and Bancroft Missions having recently assumed self support, the tide has definitely turned.

Soon Free of Debt.

The story of the building of this community church has probably no counterpart in Canada. Not only did the local community provide the material and work which enabled the church to be opened with but $100 debt on it which will probably be wiped out at the Thursday supper, planned jointly by the Woman's Associations of Emmanuel, Musclow and Lake St. Peter, but about sixteen members of an inter-church group of young people of several denominations who had been at a "work camp" at Lake St. Peter, prolonged their stay at their own expense for two weeks in late July to do free work on the church building which was adopted as their "project." Rev. Beverly Oaten of Brantford also stayed as one of their leaders.

Community Project.

From the first the church has been a community project, with members of other communions and campers helping freely. Members of the building committee were Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Card; Messrs. Herb. Jordison and Ed. Foster and Miss Doris Peters. The Card family donated the lumber and planed it free and Mr. Donovan Card the cement for the basement which is the full size of the church. Old time "bees" were held for taking out the lumber and Mrs. Harold Bailey, president of the Ladies' Aid, confessed that her organization had spent the last three weeks finishing the building ready for the opening. Messrs Ed. Foster and Robert Barr were the carpenters. Church services will be held on two afternoons and two evenings in the month, with a Sunday School each Sunday. The church is about 30 by 40 feet and seats 60 and has a chancel. It is sheeted with ten-test inside and with brick sheeting outside. Floors and seats are of natural finish wood with the pulpit, donated by the Smith family of Trenton, to match. It is lit by Coleman lamps and has a pipeless furnace. Very soon it will have a bell, which, with the collection plates, are the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Alan McCormick of Toronto, who were present, in memory of their son, Donald, a lieutenant in the G.G.H.G., who was killed in Italy. The pulpit hymnary was a gift from a member of the Bancroft congregation.

Fitness of Occasion.

In his sermon at the opening, Rev. Robert McLauchlin referred to the fitness of the occasion coming on the first Thanksgiving Day of peace. "This church," he said, "now becomes the centre from which the religious inspiration of the community will come and from which the lives of your children will get their direction, and to which you will come with your problems. All the better life of the community will be centred here." In conclusion he pointed out that the Church as a Communion had done its part, had provided leadership — and that now it was for the congregation to take on their shoulders the responsibility of seeing that the church of Lake St. Peter fulfilled its mission.

Special Services at Bancroft.

Thanksgiving and Harvest Home services were combined Sunday night at the communion service held at St. Paul's United Church on World Communion Sunday, in which the congregation participated. The church altar was richly laden with appropriate harvest products and decorated with the rich colors of autumn leaves. Rev. R. McLauchlin officiated. Miss M. Willows of Maynooth preached at Paudash in the morning; Rev. A. J. Terrill of Brighton at Baptiste in the afternoon, and at Egan Creek United Church at Detlor Mr. N. Flower, former lay pastor, now of Renfrew, preached at the 51st anniversary service in the afternoon with the pastor, Rev. R. McLauchlin, in charge of the service, who had preached at the Lake St. Peter Church opening service in the morning.

Toronto, Oct. 9 — (CP) — Four masked hold-up men, masked and armed, early yesterday held up the Roselawn Farms, Ltd., dairy in North Toronto, beat up two employees, forced two others at gunpoint to lie on the floor while they tried to break open a safe and a vault, and finally fled with $140, firing shots in the air to ward off another employee who drove into the yard as they made their escape.

World Series Notes

By JERRY LISKA

Chicago, Oct. 9 — (AP) — The fans think this is a great World Series, no matter how much the boys up in the press box needle it as a classic example of how not to play major league baseball.

Only 37,184 patrons have to push through the Wrigley Field turnstiles for tomorrow's deciding seventh game to tie the 1926 attendance record of 328,051 for a limit series. Yesterday's chilled throng of 41,708 was the smallest at the three games already played here. A total of 290,867 fans have attended the six games to date.

While managers Charley Grimm of the Cubs and Steve O'Neill of the Tigers pull their hair and veteran scribes shake their heads in sad dismay over the antics of the contenders, the series already has pumped a record $1,388,277 into baseball's coffers.

It seemed impossible that as zany a series as this one could finish without a well-horned goat and it won't. The nomination of the moment goes to pinch-hitter Charley Hostetler of the Tigers, who took a Mack Sennett spill en route home in the seventh inning with what would have been the winning run.

The nicest thing that could happen in the series was the three official scorers' reversal of their decision of Stan Hack's game-winning hit yesterday. That took the finger off Hank Greenberg, who has hit the Cubs with everything but the water-bucket to keep the Tigers in the series this long.

Toronto, Oct. 9 — (CP) — News that King's Park in Montreal will be converted into apartment units means more to some veteran sports observers in the metropolis than just another horse park joining the ghosts of old Delorimier, Dorval, King Edward Island and Kempton Tracks. To Elmer (Montreal Herald) Ferguson, it recalls a vivid episode in King's Park history around the time of the pre-depression racing boom.

It was the era of gangsters, gang murders, bootleg whisky and speakeasies. The late Tom Duggan, described by Ferguson as one of the most brilliant promoters in Montreal history, obtained a real estate site in Montreal's east end for a New York underworld group who wanted to establish a brewery.

Duggan received a $10,000 fee which he refused to return when the gang, after quarrelling among themselves, decided they wanted the money back.

So one day as Duggan drove from the track, another automobile pulled alongside and cut diagonally across the road, blocking Duggan's machine. A grim-looking stranger, hands buried in pockets, strolled over from the second car, and said: —

"I got a gun in each pocket, pointing right at you, and got a fast finger . . . drive back to the track, get that $10,000, and kick in . . . if you start anything, you will be turned into a sieve."

Duggan went to the track's money room, followed by the gunman, told his partners he needed money in a hurry and wanted to borrow $10,000 against his track interest.

"They (the partners) expressed surprise, but . . . with the silent gunman looking on, the deal was signed, the money given Duggan, who walked out . . . and handed it over," relates Ferguson. "He died before he could redeem the interest he had sold at gun's point."

President Mervyn (Red) Dutton's latest on the National Hockey League:—

"I don't believe there will be any outstandingly strong team ... or outstandingly weak team. The champion Leafs are going to have a very powerful crew, but then look at Detroit, and Boston, and Canadiens and Hawks. I think the Chicago club is one to watch . . . Rangers will be much stronger ... it will be a tough race and mighty close."

Army Cadets Rate As the Best Team

New York, Oct. 9 — (AP) — Army's two impressive triumphs this season have convinced most of the 111 sport experts who took part in the Associated Press' first weekly poll of 1945 that the Cadets still rate as the No. 1 team of United States collegiate football.

The West Pointers were acclaimed as national champions last year after they had won all of their nine games and rolled up 504 points to their opponents' 35.

With a good many of the same gridders, including All-American Glenn Davis and Doc Blanchard, back in action, the Cadets bowled over the Personnel Distribution Command Comets 32-0 and the Wake Forest Deacons 54-0 in their first two tilts.

Eighty-six of the 111 writers cast their first place ballots for Earl Blaik's powerhouse.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON Jr.

New York, Oct 9—(AP)—On top of news from Chicago that for a while, Major league club owners seemed none too happy about Happy Chandler's administration of baseball, comes word from our old friend Mr. Reliable Source, that the minors have the same idea for slightly different reasons. . . So don't be surprised if someone gets up at the December Minor league convention and proposed limiting the commissioner's jurisdiction even though nothing can be done at that time. . . The Minor leaguers are peeved at Chandler's declaration that the bonus rule is both unfair and illegal. They figure small independent clubs can't afford to pay bonuses and they'll be forced to do it if the "chain" clubs are given that privilege. . . Add to that a rhubarb between Chandler and the baseball writers over world series scoring and some hot words between Larry Macphail, supposedly Happy's principal backer, and Minor league boss W. G. Bramham, and you can see that Chandler won't have to go south for a warm winter.

Fritzie Zivic has received an offer for himself and his protege, Juste Fontaine, to fight in Britain, but Fritzie will have trouble getting a furlough long enough for that trip.

Sault Ste. Marie Wins Two Games To Take Title

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Oct. 9— (CP)— Sault Ste. Marie St. Veronicas took a doubleheader from Stratford Kroehlers yesterday to win the Ontario Intermediate A softball association championship.

Veronicas erased a 5-0 deficit to win the first game 7-5 and recorded a 3-1 triumph in the afterpiece of the best-of-three series. Pitching was strictly a family affair, with Tony Bergamin winning the opener with a seven-hit job and brother Art restricting Stratford to five hits in the second game.

Nick Libett hurled both games for Kroehlers and scored Stratford's only run in the second game with a triple. The longest hit of the series was Mike Visinski's towering home run for Sault Ste. Marie in the second game.

ARMY RULES ARGENTINA AFTER PERON OUSTED

Navy Wants Entire Govt. to Quit And Turned to Court

President Still in Office But Takes Orders From Army

By LAURANCE F. STUNTZ

Buenos Aires, Oct. 10 — (AP)— The Army ruled Argentina today after forcing the resignation of the strong-man Vice President, Col. Juan Domingo Peron, but the Navy was reported demanding that the entire government quit and turn the country over to the Supreme Court.

The situation in stormy Argentina was confused, but this much was clear: Gen. Edelmiro Farrell, head of the military regime, still is president, but he takes his orders from Gen. Eduardo Avalos, commander of the Big Campo De Mayo garrison in suburban Buenos Aires, whose personal quarrel with Peron brought about the military's demand for the resignation of the vice president.

A high navy officer told the Associated Press Peron's resignation alone was insufficient, since it left unsettled the essential problem — the existence of the military government. But there was reason to believe the army and navy could come to terms.

Juan Cooke, Gen. Farrell's foreign minister, announced the cabinet would meet today.

Chief Support

The Campo garrison, from whence in June, 1943, Gen. Arturo Rawson overthrew the government of Ramon Castillo and became president for two days, had been Peron's chief support. It turned against him yesterday amid a storm of opposition to his military rule which had been gathering fury for weeks.

Some observers believed the turnover might be the beginning of a return to constitutional government, holding that the Supreme Court must take the reins. Others held that so long as the army retained an iron grip, nothing was changed essentially.

Demonstrations were touched off in many places as news of the resignation of Peron spread swiftly, and there were some clashes between celebrating crowds and police.

Avalos, whom Peron himself had elevated from Colonel to Brigadier General, actually took Peron's place, turning the tables on his erstwhile crony in a behind the scenes struggle for power.

Hold Elections in April

Foreign Minister Cooke contended the resignation was in compliance with Peron's promise not to run for the presidency while holding office. It was his candidacy which had been a major cause of the growing opposition to him.

Gen. Farrell's ministers, meeting yesterday, decided the national elections would be held April 1, 1946, for the election of a president.

Peron's post of war minister might possibly go to Rear Admiral Alberto Teissaire, Minister of Marine, or to Gen. Juan D. Pistrarini, Minister of Public Works and one of the three who carried the ultimatum from the garrison, Foreign Minister Cooke said. In either case it would be temporary. He hinted a new government would continue the military regime's policies in some matters.

British War Brides Stage Demonstration

London, Oct. 10 — (CP) — British brides of Canadian and American soldiers rallied from all over Britain today for a mass meeting and demonstration planned for London tomorrow as part of a campaign to obtain speedy transportation across the Atlantic so they may join their husbands.

American soldiers with wives in the United States meanwhile entered the debate, 16 affixing their signatures to a letter to the London edition of Stars and Stripes, the United States Army newspaper, protesting that the use of ships to send British brides to America would be a blow to their own hopes of a speedy return home.

Laval's Counsel Seeks New Trial

Paris, Oct. 10 — (AP)—Pierre Laval's counsel set machinery in motion today to seek a new trial for the former Vichy chief of government, who was sentenced to death yesterday after he was convicted of intelligence with the enemy and attacking the security of the state.

Albert Naud, chief defence counsel, announced last night he had requested an interview with Gen. deGaulle and would seek to have the verdict set aside because of "the attitude of the judge and jury."

Although the hectic court proceedings were the target of considerable press criticism, the French cabinet decided against intervening.

Police said Laval would be transferred to his former cell in Fresnes prison, where he will await a final decision. If Gen. deGaulle refuses him a new trial he probably will be informed only a short time before the hour fixed for his execution.

PUPILS MARCH OUT

Simcoe, Ont., Oct. 10 (CP) — Fire broke out at the Port Dover public and high school yesterday, originating in the basement. The entire staff and pupils, totalling more than 400, were marched from the building in an orderly manner in one and a half minutes. Port Dover firemen made quick response. Damage is estimated at around $2,000.

WINDSOR STRIKE COMES TO FORE IN PARLIAMENT

Demands Come From All Sides for Action And Leadership to Bring Parties Together

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 10 —(CP)— Certain discussions are taking place looking to a termination of the three-week-old strike at the Ford automobile plant at Windsor, State Secretary Martin told the House of Commons last night as demands came from all sides for action and leadership in bringing the company and its employees together.

Mr. Martin gave no details but said Labor Minister Mitchell who spoke earlier in a debate which set off a stormy scene in the Commons, was unable to make a full disclosure of all that was going on for fear of prejudicing a settlement. The Labor Minister had said he was ready to go to Windsor or anywhere else for a settlement meeting if the parties would come together.

The State Secretary added that he himself, who represents Essex East constituency, had been a party to some discussions over the week-end.

Issue Raised by C.C.F.

The strike issue was raised by Clarence Gillis (CCF-Cape Breton South) who, supported by other C.C.F. members, asked that the government put a controller in charge of the Ford plant, get the men back to work and then negotiate a settlement.

Among those supporting Mr. Gillis' suggestion were Alistair Stewart (CCF-Winnipeg North), Maj. J. O. Probe (CCF-Regina) and Rev. William Irvine (CCF-Cariboo.) John Blackmore (SC-Lethbridge), believed the government's monetary policy was at fault.

Almost the entire day was spent on the Windsor situation and just before adjournment, Finance Minister Ilsley obtained passage of another month's interim supply pending approval of the main estimates while Defence Minister Abbott completed a statement previously begun on his naval department estimates.

NOT ASSASSINATED

Chungking, Oct. 10 — (AP) — Li Shao Shih, Communist Party Secretary-General here, was not assassinated but was slain accidentally by a Chinese corporal, Lt.-Gen. Chang Chen, commander of the Chungking Gendarmerie, reported today after an investigation.

Gen. Chang's statement to the official Chinese Central News agency quickly shattered a theory that Li, an ardent Communist once jailed for his political activities, had been assassinated.

Magic of Sight Makes World a Vivid, Gay Place For Once-Blind Girl

By JOHN D. HAMILTON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 10 — (CP) — They say there's a broken heart for every light on Broadway but to Bernice Biggs, the Gay White Way means new life and happiness.

Bernice was blind — for nearly 18 years. It was only the other day that she was able to wander down Manhattan's garish streets and enjoy the riot of color that is the city's symbol after dark.

Bernice comes from Armstrong, B.C., in the Okanagan Valley. Growing up in such surroundings of natural beauty, it seemed all the more tragic to her that she should lose her sight while still in high school.

When she was 12, the doctors told her that her eyes weren't good. She kept on at school and took her matriculation. Then the doctors told her she could never see again because she had keratacomus, a disease that made the corneas of her eyes become conical. Gradually she lost her vision until, 10 years ago, she could barely distinguish light from dark.

Bernice refused to quit. She learned Braille and finally became a teacher in the Canadian Institute for the Blind School in Victoria.

Last spring she came to New York. The doctors had finally decided to try something rare and dangerous — the transplanting of two healthy corneas to her eyes. The operation took months. It wasn't until the middle of August that they took the bandages off. Even then it took a while for her eyes to come back to normal.

Besides that, Bernice had a hard job adjusting herself. She could not get rid of her timidity — her fear of being caught all alone. Then she realized she could take care of herself.

"But the biggest thrill was seeing people's expressions again. I always wondered how people's voices stacked up with their looks.

"Well, they do add up. That is, when I heard a kind voice, there's usually something kind in the face to go with it."

Gen. Marshall Says Atomic Secret Cannot Remain in U.S. Hands Exclusively, Indefinitely

Washington, Oct. 10 (AP)— Gen. George C. Marshall says the secret of atomic explosive will not belong to the United States "exclusively indefinitely."

Gen. Marshall, United States Chief of Staff, commented in his biennial report that "the tremendous military advantage of this terrifying weapon fell to us through a combination of good luck, good management and prodigious effort."

In the years between the two world wars, Gen. Marshall said, the United States permitted Germany to "far outpace" her in development of instruments with military use. German development of long-range rockets and pilotless aircraft stemmed from his peacetime research.

"The fact that we overtook Germany's head start on the atomic explosive is comforting, but certainly should not lull us again into a state of complacent inertia," Gen. Marshall continued.

German jet fighters went into combat first, but they were limited to a maximum endurance of a little over an hour. United States fighters, he said "already had the endurance to fly non-stop from San Francisco to New York."

Outmatched For Two Years.

"From the summer of 1943 to the spring of 1945 the German Tiger and Panther tanks outmatched our Sherman tanks in direct combat," the general said.

The M-26 Pershing tank, "equal in direct combat to any the Germans had," began to reach the battle lines of Europe last winter. At the same time, work was started on two heavier models, the 64-ton T-29 and T-30.

In two other basic items, Germany held an advance almost to the end of the war, Gen. Marshall said. One was the 88-MM. rifle, first encountered in the North African campaign.

Used Flashless Powder.

The other was in powder. German ammunition was charged with smokeless, flashless powder which in both day and night fighting helped the enemy tremendously by concealing his gun positions. United States gunners of all types "had to expose their positions with telltale muzzle flashes or puffs of powder smoke."

". . . these facts should be considered along with the policy regarding the manufacture of explosives after the last war and the scientific development that should or would have followed in the plants of the great commercial manufacturers had they not been subjected to bitter attack as 'merchants of death'," Gen. Marshall said.

Out of the peacetime resources of the United States came two "good advantages" over the Germans, the general concluded. One was the Garand semi-automatic rifle "which the Germans were never able to duplicate." The other was multiple-drive ground transport, chiefly the jeep and the 2 1-2-ton truck.

Tomorrow's Weapons.

What will be tomorrow's weapons?

Gen. Marshall and the chief of the United States air forces, Gen. H. H. Arnold, mention these:

Rocket-propelled weapons with atomic explosive.

Rockets streaking unerringly to targets, guided by the autopilots made sensitive by electronic devices and other new instruments to the heat of factory furnaces, light and magnetism. They are so responsive that in a large room they aim themselves toward a man who enters, in reaction to the heat of his body.

Jet-propelled bombers flying in the stratosphere faster than the speed of sound and carrying bomb loads of more than 100,000 pounds. They will have sufficient range to attack any spot on earth. Already under construction are 45,000 pound bombs—and bombers to carry them.

Jet fighters which within the next five years will reach the speed of sound, operating at 50,000 feet and capable of reaching targets 2,000 miles away.

CHIEF OF VICHY MILITIA SHOT BY FIRING SQUAD

Joseph Darnand Convicted of Treason on October 3rd

Paris, Oct. 10 — (AP) — A firing squad of 12 French soldiers executed Joseph Darnand, former Chief of the Vichy Militia, at Fort de Chatillon today.

Darnand was convicted of treason on October 3 by the same court which yesterday pronounced sentence of death upon his superior, Pierre Laval.

A Dominican priest, Darnand's lawyer, a doctor and two magistrates were in the small group which witnessed the execution. Just before the shots were fired, Darnand cried out:

"Vive La France! Farewell, my militiamen."

The short, gray-haired leader of the French Gestapo had been convicted of numerous crimes, including intelligence with the enemy, recruiting enemy forces and collusion with the Germans inside French territory.

He was described by the judge who presided at his trial, Paul Mongibeaux, as one of the military heroes of France who, "like many Frenchmen, was misled by Petain."

WIFE TELLS COURT HUSBANDREALIZED GASSING 'WRONG'

Defence Attempt to Inject Discussion of Atomic Bomb Into Trial Fails

By CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN

Lueneburg, Germany, Oct. 10— (AP) — Frau Josef Kramer testified under cross-examination today that her husband realized that the gassing of concentration camp internees was "very wrong."

Kramer and 44 guards and attendants are on trial before a British military court for mass killings at Belsen. A defence attempt to inject discussion of the atomic bomb into the hearing was balked by the court, which ruled it had nothing to do with the questions at issue.

A small woman, the mother of three, Frau Kramer wore a velvet hat jauntily. She took an oath on the Bible. She smiled at Kramer, told of their marriage Oct. 16, 1937, and said she had been with him at all times at the camps in which he was an officer.

She said her husband told her at Oswiecim that "of those responsible for destroying so many persons in the gas chamber, I don't think they can be sleeping easily."

"Did you ever hear of your husband beating anyone?" asked defence counsel Thomas Winwood.

"No," Frau Kramer replied softly. "He told me many times his duty was to care for internees at Belsen day and night. He worried because so many had to sleep on bare floors in huts."

Prosecutor Takes Over

Prosecutor T. M. Backhouse then took over.

"You say your husband told you those responsible for deaths in the gas chamber could not have an easy conscience?" he asked.

"Yes."

12,000 WORKERS MAY JOIN STRIKE MEMBERS OF FORD

Union Policy Committee Holding a Meeting To Decide on What Action to Take

Windsor, Ont., Oct. 10—(CP)— A union policy committee meeting here tonight may decide whether 12,000 workers in district automotive plants will join some 10,000 striking members of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd.

Tonight's meeting will be followed by a mass meeting tomorrow night of general membership of unions in this area. Should strike action be decided upon it is unlikely the workers will be called out before next Monday.

The striking Ford workers are members of Local 200 of the United Automobile Workers of America (C.I.O.) who have been out since Sept. 12. Together with the approximately 12,000 members of Local 195 they represent 33 plant units scattered throughout this district. Local 195 members work in Chrysler Corporation of Canada, Ltd., Canadian Industries, Ltd., General Motors Corporation of Canada, Ltd., and smaller plants.

Favor Strike Action.

Votes favoring strike action already have been recorded in several Local 195 units but as yet have not been approved by the international board.

As pickets paraded outside the Ford plant for the 29th day, other developments emphasized one of Canada's major post-war labor headaches.

Repercussions of the walkout which started Sept. 12 following a 17-month stand off between company and workers were felt yesterday in Windsor, Toronto and Ottawa, even as a threat arose the strike might spread to 33 additional Windsor area automotive plants employing about 12,000 workers.

Ottawa, Oct. 10 — (CP) — The Prices Board announced today increases in the coupon values of a number of cooked and uncooked meats and the doubling of the ration value for meat pies to 16 ounces for one token against eight ounces previously.

Adjustments also have been made in the coupon values of canned meats.

All changes are effective tomorrow, the day upon which this week's meat ration coupons become valid.

Here are the changes:—

Cooked Meats:

Moved from group "C" (two pounds per coupon or four ounces per token) to group "E" (three pounds per coupon or six ounces per token) — meat loaves, jellied meats, bologna and weiners.

Moved from group "D" (2 1/2 pounds per coupon or five ounces per token) to group "E" (three pounds per coupon or six ounces per token) — headcheese, liver sausage and cretons francais.

Uncooked Meats

Moved from group "C" (two pounds per coupon or four ounces per token) to group "D" (2 1/2 pounds per coupon or five ounces per token) — beef flank trimmed, bone in.

Moved from group "D" (2 1/2 pounds per coupon or five ounces per token) to group "E" (three pounds per coupon or six ounces per token) — beef shank knuckle end; veal shank hind, veal shank front and veal flank together with lamb flank, breast and neck, all bone-in cuts.

As the system was revised, butchers' strikes which occurred across the country late last month, have disappeared. Some 9,000 Alberta and British Columbia coal miners, who went on a "holiday" for two weeks protesting the meat ration was not enough for them, were ordered back to work by union officials last night.

Protests that the rationing system was cumbersome and wasteful came from meat retailers across Canada at its inception Sept. 10.

These protests culminated in a representative coast-to-coast committee of the Canadian Retail Merchants Association meeting with Finance Minister Ilsley, Agriculture Minister Gardiner and Prices Board officials here.

The committee urged abolition of rationing and its replacement by a system of government requisitioning of meat for overseas shipment. The government representatives maintained, however, that rationing was the only fair way to assure equitable distribution of meat, but announced "fancy meats" such as liver, heart, kidney, tongue, sweetbreads and blood sausage, were temporarily lifted from the ration.

Will Not be Lifted

Donald Gordon, Prices Board chairman, stated flatly, meanwhile, that meat rationing would not be lifted, that "there is no possibility of cancellation of orders imposed."

His statement was made in Vancouver after butchers in some sections of the country had closed their shops for short periods in protest against the ration system and after violence had developed in Montreal.

Laval Manuscript Gives Grim History of Pre-War Diplomacy

(Editor's Note: Associated Press Correspondent Mel Mcst and a New York Post Correspondent,, Peggy Poor, with authorization from defence representatives of Pierre Laval, have obtained first public access to a manuscript embodying the defence of the former chief of the Vichy government. The document, written by Laval in a race against time, evidently was intended for use in any future trial—even in the event of his execution.)

By MEL MOST

Paris, Oct. 10 (AP)—Pierre Laval's written account of the defence he intended to make to the court which condemned him to death yesterday was made public today by his counsel, who permitted access to a manuscript which painstakingly documents his replies to all the original counts in the treason indictment against him.

The document was written by Laval with his papers spread before him on the floor of his dungeon cell.

The manuscript unfolded a grim history of pre-war diplomacy and wartime German terror. Evidently it was prepared for use in any future trial. Laval has been confident such a trial will be held, even, perhaps, after he has been executed.

The former Vichy chief of government, who 14 times was a minister and thrice a premier of France, took up the charges against him one by one, and these were some of his replies:

To the charge he sought to negotiate a peace during the "phoney war" before the German 1940 blitz on France, Laval replied:

That Mussolini furnished the initiative in this through an emissary. Laval said he offered to undertake a mission which Premier Daladier could later disavow if it failed, but M. Daladier rejected the idea. A second secret emissary arrived from Mussolini the day before Italy attacked France, but never reached the government, Laval wrote.

To charges (withdrawn in court) that he participated in deciding upon the armistice with Germany and the government's failure to move to North Africa:

Laval said he was not in the government at the time. He said he believed moving to Africa merely would invite the German blitzkrieg there, causing Britain to lose Suez and the United States to lose a landing platform for a later invasion. On the other hand, he wrote, "events have proved de Gaulle was right" in moving to London.

Concerning the charge that he organized the Montoire meeting between Hitler and Petain and arranged subsequent collaboration, Laval replied the armistice itself rather than anything he did brought about collaboration.

He said he never ordered the scuttling of the fleet at Toulon, and that its disposition was not in his province, but that when he was told it was going to take place, the German official who brought word stood guard outside his door until after the seizure.

To the charge he urged resistance to the British-American landings in North Africa he replied with the texts of several telegrams he said he received from the Germans, asking France to declare war on the United States. He said Hitler was in a rage when he told him France would not do so.

Shriners Request Registrations For Chest Clinic Oct 16

Registrations for the free tuberculosis clinic being held at Kiwanis Centre from Oct. 16 to Oct. 19 inclusive are not coming in as rapidly as was at first anticipated. The free X-ray examination is being sponsored by the Belleville and District Shrine Club through monies derived from their annual sales of Christmas seals.

Shrine officials today voiced the opinion that perhaps the general public has misunderstood instructions and is of the opinion that registrations are not acceptable until Oct. 16, the first day of the clinic. Such is not the case, they emphasize, and registrations may be submitted any time by merely telephoning 2890 or 2891 at the Centre.

Shriners feel that they are contributing an important step to the general health of the committee by the free clinic service and urge everyone to take advantage of it. There are no financial strings attached and personal reports will be given in the fullest confidence.

Officials announced today that X-ray examinations will be made of all students and pupils of the Belleville Collegiate Institute and the public schools of the city while the clinic is here.

Persons registering for an examination will be sent an appointment card instructing them when to report for the X-ray. This is being done to equalize the number of applicants and thus avoid congestion at the Kiwanis Centre.

The examinations have the full accord of medical men of the city and they, too, urge all residents who possibly can do so, to avail themselves of the generous offer of the Shrine Club. But registrations should be made immediately in order to facilitate clerical work on the part of the staff now on duty at the Kiwanis Centre.

Mayor Follwell Again in Field

Mayor Frank Follwell announced today that he will present himself for his second term as chief magistrate of the city in the forthcoming civic elections.

In an official statement to the press, His Worship stated that he will be definitely in the running for the mayoralty and is confident that he will be returned to the office he now holds.

Thus far no other residents of the city have announced intention to contest the seat.

Mayor Follwell feels that the current year, one that saw victory come to the Allied Nations, has seen the city progress along all phases of activity with civic action being taken in many branches of the city government.

One of the youngest chief magistrates in the city's history, Mayor Follwell was elected by a large majority in the 1944 civic elections.

Police Blotter

Reports of thefts ranging from an automobile bumper and fog lights to a lady's purse and of shoplifting in a local departmental store comprised a large percentage of entries in the local police blotter this morning.

Bumper, Fog Lights Taken.

Mrs. M. Dafoe, 11 Grove Street, reported to police that the bumper of her 1940 Dodge together with two fog lights, had been stolen some time after midnight on Monday. A second instance of theft was reported by a Moira Street girl who stated her shoulder bag containing money, registration card, pictures and other articles had been stolen from a friend's car while she was visiting a local dancing pavilion.

Shoplifters Apprehended.

Youthful shoplifters were apprehended at a Front Street department store and were given a lecturing by police officers. The two young boys had taken a couple of toy guns and a book when they were noticed by the management and turned over to police officers.

Rain and Frost Damage Crops

Toronto, Oct. 10—(CP)—Heavy rain and severe frost have caused considerable damage to corn, wheat and tomato crops, and in some sections of the province fall harvesting is at a standstill, the Ontario Department of Agriculture said today in its weekly crop report.

Western Ontario reported the corn crop badly frozen, and heavy rain has severely damaged the bean crop. Fall wheat has made rapid growth, but some fields have been flooded.

The report said farming in some Southern Ontario counties came to a standstill because of the rain and the bean crop threatens to be a failure unless there is an immediate change of weather. Sodden fields have held up corn harvesting and plowing was reported practically impossible.

Farmers of Central Ontario struggled between showers to harvest their corn and potato crops but continued rains made it impossible to operate corn binders in some fields. A very severe frost last week brought the canning season to a close in Prince Edward County where thousands of bushels of tomatoes were reported still unpicked.

Heavy rain also retarded harvesting in Eastern Ontario where fields became so soft corn harvesting machines could not be operated. Some farmers have discontinued farm work entirely.

Fall plowing in most parts of Northern Ontario is at a standstill but during the last few days farmers were able to dig potatoes.

Prof. S. M. Anglin Dies in Kingston

Samuel M. Anglin, professor of Music at Albert College, and residence 237 Ann Street, died in the General Hospital in Kingston on Saturday, Oct. 6th. He was in failing health for some time.

The late Mr. Anglin was born seventy-two years ago at Battersea, Ontario, and was a son of the late W. J. Anglin and his wife, Sarah P. Thorne of Nova Scotia. He was educated at the Kingston Collegiate Institute and Albert College, later graduating in arts at Queen's University, Kingston. On completing studies in music in Boston, Mass, Mr. Anglin went to Brandon, Manitoba, and taught music there for ten years. He also filled the position of choir master in the Methodist Church in that city. About twenty-five years ago he came to this city to accept the position of Professor in Vocal Music at Albert College. Since that time and up to the time of his illness he filled the position in a highly capable and efficient manner. At one time he acted as choir master at Bridge Street Church and also at Holloway Street Church. Mr. Anglin was prominent in the musical life of the city and gave of his services freely in creating musical entertainment for the citizens of Belleville. He was held in high regard by many friends and to them his death has brought much regret. He never married.

Surviving him are two sisters, Miss Nellie D. Anglin, and Miss Elizabeth T. Anglin, both of Belleville; two brothers, Mr. William W. Anglin and Mr. Charles Anglin, both of Manitoulin Island.

The funeral took place from the W. Vernon Lindsay Funeral Home, Kingston, on Monday afternoon. The service in the chapel was conducted by the Rev. D. C. Amos, minister of Bridge Street United Church, and the Rev. Dr. Bert Howard, Principal of Albert College.

Friends from Albert College and Bridge Street Church were present at the funeral.

Interment took place in Cataraqui Cemetery. The bearers were all cousins of the deceased.

Sgmn. N. Hardwick Had Enjoyable Trip Home Aboard Minesweeper

Some returning veterans of the Canadian Army come home in luxurious troopships like the "Queen Mary" the "Ile de France" and the "Louis Pasteur". Some come direct to New York or Halifax and others to St. John.

But Signalman Norman Hardwick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hardwick, Burton Street climaxed his four years overseas with a thrilling sea trip aboard a minesweeper, those cocky little vessels that did such yeoman service with the navy during the war.

Norm got the surprise of his life when he was awakened at midnight somewhere in England and ordered to get ready to "proceed" home.

"We rushed to get our kits and hurried down to the dock where a number of small vessels that did not look any bigger than fishing smacks lay at anchor. These, we thought, were the boats which were to take us to some big liner. But we were fooled. Those little "tubs" took us all the way cross the Atlantic."

Bought Fruit at Azores.

The minesweeper stopped at the Azores after weathering a heavy storm in the English Channel, "in which even the sailors were seasick." Here Hardwick and his eighteen army companions got a taste of the semi-tropics while the ship was fueling and ate their first bananas in three years. "The pineapples were luscious," Norm said, "and we took forty-five of them aboard with us. We ate the darn things till we looked like them."

The sweeper stopped at Newfoundland to take on fuel and later landed her soldier cargo at Sydney, Noxa Scotia.

Hardwick joined the Royal Canadian Corps of Signals back in 1942 and after brief training in Canada was sent overseas. An electrician by trade he was given important posts in his unit and later was attached to the radio division with which he stayed during his entire term of service overseas.

Went to France After D-Day.

He went to France with his regiment twelve days after D-Day and became what might be termed a member of a flying squadron of signals. He was attached to Army Corps troops and travelled with all branches of the forces. One week he would be with the Americans and the next with the British or Canadian armies. His unit spent some time with the American 7th Army.

His duties took him through France, Belgium, Holland and Germany. A notable fact is that the two original officers of the unit stayed with their boys all through the war.

Norm arrived home last Saturday and at present is spending a well-earned thirty-day furlough with his wife and children here. He is a brother of Messrs. Reg., Cecil and Bert Hardwick, who with their father form part of the composing room staff of this newspaper.

Overseas Relief Clothing Campaign Will Have Only One Pick-Up So Have Your Donations Ready Next Wed.

Residents of Belleville will be given the opportunity next Wednesday to contribute toward the overseas clothing relief campaign which is currently underway across Canada. It has been announced by the local campaign committee head, Mr. Jack White.

Next Wednesday afternoon Oct. 17th starting at 1:30 trucks will make pick-ups of clothing contributions from all Belleville streets, the clothing to be taken to the local armouries for sorting and packing in readiness for shipment to Ottawa and overseas.

Local service clubs have entered enthusiastically into the relief clothing campaign with sub-committee heads in each organization being appointed to supervise pick-ups from the various streets. Volunteer workers, as well as trucks will be needed to assure that the entire city is canvassed during the one afternoon, however, and committee heads have issued an appeal for assistance. Those willing to assist in collection should contact Don Williams, Morley Duff, Don McNevin or "Twigg" Woodley. These men are representatives of the four local service clubs.

Cartons Needed.

Members of the Kiwanis Ladies' Auxiliary will assist in sorting and packing at the armouries, but here too assistance will be needed, while paper cartons of good size for packing clothing are also badly needed.

Chairman of the relief clothing committee states that all kinds of clothing, for men, women and children are needed. Boots and shoes are high on the list. The clothing preferably should be clean, but not pressed, although slightly soiled clothing will be accepted.

European refugees in practically all devastated countries are desperately in need of clothing to face a difficult winter ahead. To survive, these unfortunates must have clothing, clothing which most Canadian homes and families can well afford to spare.

Clothing being donated should be made up into parcels and placed on verandas in readiness for the pick-up next Wednesday afternoon.

Community Chest Drive Extended One Week, Only Half of Quota Raised

With only approximately one half of the required $15,000 objective in the local Community Chest campaign now achieved and the originally schedule time limit for the drive now elapsed, the campaign to raise funds for the four home front service organizations will be extended another week, it was announced by campaign officials today.

The campaign was intended to run until October 10th, but with the $15,000 goal far from being reached the date for closing the drive has been extended to October 17th. Home front service organization included in the campaign are the Salvation Army, the Victoria Order of Nurses, the Children's Aid and the Y. M. C. A.

In announcing that the campaign objective was still only one half achieved, Mr. Clare Morgan, chairman of the Community Chest, stressed the vital importance of the $15,000 goal being reached if the work of the four service organizations was to be efficiently carried out.

With members of the armed forces being rehabilitated back into civilian life, the need for the work done by the Children's Aid, the V. O. N., the Y. M. C. A. and the Salvation Army will be vitally needed. To do this vital work requires money, money which must be contributed by civilians on the home front.

So, when the community chest canvasser calls, welcome him and contribute generously to the cause which he represents. The cause is a worthy one, the benefits of which will be seen in local community life.

Red Cross Given Temporary Use Of Kiwanis Centre

Their headquarters on Campbell Street having been leased as a solicitor's office, the Belleville branch of the Canadian Red Cross society in the near future will move into the Kiwanis Centre, it was announced yesterday following a directors' meeting of the local service club when permission was granted for the temporary use of their building on Dundas Street.

President Lorne McDougall of the Kiwanis club made the announcement that their service club building had been placed at the disposal of the Red Cross to use as their headquarters until other accommodation could be obtained.

Faced with a heavy program of work caused as result of the war, the local branch of the Red Cross moved into the Campbell Street building shortly after the start of the war, the premises proving an ideal accommodation for the various lines of endeavor carried on by the society. Recently the building was leased as a lawyer's office necessitating finding of other quarters by the Red Cross. In making the announcement that the Red Cross would use the Kiwanis Centre as their headquarters. President McDougall stated this would be until 1946 when other quarters would be found.

Mrs. Cora Casselman, Delegate To San Francisco Conference, Explains Aims of Charter

Addresses Women's Canadian Club at First Meeting of the Fall Term

The opening meeting of the Women's Canadian Club was held Tuesday evening in the Sunday School room of Bridge Street United Church. The president, Mrs. H. Trusdale, opened the meeting and introduced the guest speaker, Mrs. Cora Casselman. Mrs. Casselman was the only Canadian woman delegate at the San Francisco conference. She first became interested in international affairs during the First Great War. She became the first woman Liberal member in the Federal House and the first woman to occupy the Speaker's chair in the House of Commons.

Mrs. Casselman opened her address by briefly outlining the aims of the San Francisco conference; first to set up the machinery whereby peace might be maintained, and second, to do away with fear of aggression and want throughout the world. She stated that, even as there were difficulties at the recent London conference, there were difficulties at the San Francisco conference. It was an alliance wherein the big powers invited all peace-loving nations to join with them in planning the system for the maintenance of peace. Mrs. Casselman is confident in the eventual success of future conferences.

Committees Did Real Work

The speaker stated that the real work of the conference took place in the meetings of the twelve committees, each committee dealing with a separate phase of the Dumbarton Oaks agreement. Each delegate expressed the opinion, not of himself, but of the country he represented. The countries held their own meetings to discuss the subject that would be coming up each day. Mrs. Casselman emphasized the democratic tone of the conference, where a small power held as much right to speak out as a larger one. "For example," she said, "in the matter of amendments, seven hundred pages of amendments were brought in by the different delegates. Every method of maintaining the peace was thoroughly discussed."

Mrs. Casselman spoke briefly in answer to the often-voiced criticism of the lack of religious observance. At a conference where every religion in the world was represented, it would be impossible to have any public observances, but she said that there was a definite recognition of the Supreme Being throughout the various committee meetings.

Given Fine Reception

The speaker told of the way in which the city of San Francisco received the many delegates. Twelve military bands were present to greet each delegation as it arrived, with its national anthem. A special staff of telephone operators were trained to ask the familiar "Number Please" in every language except German and Japanese. Efficient translators quickly translated the addresses into many languages. Secret service men were plentiful to guard the delegates. One girl, a driver of one of the buses provided for the delegates, clearly stated the warm feelings of San Francisco, Mrs. Casselman stated. On stopping the bus before the Opera House where the conference was held, she said, "All out here, Canadians, Frenchmen, Russians, Chinese. God bless you all".

Explained Veto Problem

Mrs. Casselman explained the veto problem, over which so much criticism was aroused. In the Security Council, she stated, a dispute must receive a majority vote of seven out of the eleven members before it will be admitted for discussion. However, before any action can be taken, there must be a unanimous vote from the Big Five. That is, any member of the Big Five can stop any action against a nation. Mrs. Casselman stated that without this power of veto the Big Five would not have joined the conference. However, the veto power could be amended in the future. "The only thing that can bind a great power," said Mrs. Casselman, "is its own sense of responsibility and force (i. e. war).

The Security Council has at its disposal military force to settle disputes, if the need arise. The theory "No taxation without representation" is written into the Charter in this connection. Any nation whose military support is asked by the Security Council has the right to sit in on discussions regarding the matter in question

"The Economic and Social Council," stated the speaker, deals with matters pertaining to transportation, health, trade, etc., and has the right to make recommendations only.

Describes Final Session

Mrs. Casselman described the final plenary session of the Conference. It was at this meeting that President Truman, then recently made president of the United States, spoke. Lord Halifax asked for the vote on the Charter. He requested the fifty chairmen representing the nations present to indicate their approval of the Charter by rising. Mrs. Casselman said there were tears in many eyes as every man rose to his feet, indicating the wholehearted acceptance of the Charter on the part of the United Nations.

The official signing of the Charter took place the following day. The document was placed in a seventy-five pound safe attached to a parachute and a tag on which was written, "If lost and found, please send unopened to the State Department, Washington, D.C."

Urges Support of Charter

The preamble of the Charter was very difficult, stated Mrs. Casselman. The first drafts were too idealistic. Lawyers were called in, and as a result, the next draft was too technical. The 3rd draft, written by a poet, was too beautiful. At last a suitable preamble was drawn up, and in closing, Mrs. Casselman quoted from it: "Our duty" she stated, "is to practise tolerance and live together in peace as good neighbors. Peace will be made in the hearts and souls of the people, and not in legal phrases of the Charter". Finally, the speaker urged everyone to support the Charter and its aims to ensure a world of peace and happiness.

Campbellford, Oct. 10 (CP)—His pockets bulging with nine wrist watches, a varied assortment of rings and a penknife, a thief Monday night walked out of a local jewelry store and into the arms of the law.

The burglar, who gave his name as Howard Collins, effected entry by bending the iron bars on a rear window and then forcing the window. When he attempted to leave as quietly as he arrived, he walked into the open arms of Chief Constable George Hardy and Provincial Constable James McKenzie.

BELLEVILLE'S REMARKABLE INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

54 Thriving Industries Here Now or Soon to Come

5 WORLD LEADERS

INVESTED CAPITAL .... $15,851,650 FACTORY OUTPUT, 1944 .... $12,344,964

WAGES AND SALARIES $4,181,311

5 PLANNING EXTENSION

Population of City Has Almost Doubled

The transformation of Belleville from what was, only twenty-five years ago, an exceedingly quiet residential town, to what is today a throbbing centre of industrial activity, is easily one of the most interesting chapters in the story of Canada's economic progress.

Let the figures speak for themselves. From a few factories of unimpressive dimensions in 1920, the city now has 54 industries with invested capital of $15,851,650. Last year those industries gave employment to well over 3000 men and women, boys and girls, to whom $4,181,311 was paid in wages and salaries. The manufactured goods those men and women, boys and girls turned out amounted in value to the astonishing total of $12,344,964.

Think, Citizens of Belleville of THAT FOUR-MILLION-DOLLAR PAYROLL. Where would your city be without it? That four million dollars came to us, nearly all of it, from outside the city. A large fraction of it found its way here from British Columbia to pay for locks and other products of Belleville factories. And then it found its way into the pockets of Belleville workers. But did it stay there? Not for long.

That Four-Million-Dollar Payroll was soon transferred, in large proportion, to the merchants, the professional men, the service stations and the other forms of business around the city. A good-sized section of it was reserved to help pay for those beautiful homes which are springing up on every street and making of Belleville a smarter and far more modern appearing city than it had ever been before. And some of the payroll was devoted to the maintenance of our really excellent system of schools, our genuinely efficient fire department and our city police, who through six most difficult and trying years, have maintained Belleville as one of the most orderly cities in Canada today. Some do a good deal of grumbling but we sometimes wonder if it ever occurred to any of us to try to be fair and decent and reasonable in our criticisms of our public servants.

Five of Belleville industries are branches of the largest industrial corporations on earth.

Swift and Company of Chicago, are here. Many of our citizens scarcely know of the presence of this soundly established business, so little is said about it. But this little branch at Belleville had a turnover in 1944 of well over one million dollars. It has been here only a comparatively short time but it has already assumed the proportions of big business. And, furthermore, the company has purchased a large acreage in another part of the city where an entirely new business activity for this area will be entered upon. The contract has been let for the erection of seven buildings. As soon as the controller releases materials, active operoperations will begin.

And then we have another "world's largest" representative here that is known locally as Corbin's. But in reality this is a branch of the great American Hardware Corporation whose head office is located at New Britain, Conn., largest manufacturers of locks and builders' hardware.

The Consolidated Optical Company is also a branch of another corporation that is unquestionably the most extensive in its class on earth. Their head office is at Southbridge, Mass., where its largest factories are located, but other manufacturing establishments are to be found in Buffalo and elsewhere. They give employment to tens of thousands of highly skilled workmen.

The Stewart-Warner-Alemite Corporation is another world leader in several lines. With head office in Chicago and branches in Bridgeport, Conn., and in other American cities, it gave a great account of itself in war and will maintain its ascendancy in time of peace. Its Belleville plant is a model of efficiency and progressive business methods.

J. & J. Cash Incorporated is a British organization with head office at Coventry, England. The corporation ranks easily as the world's largest manufacturers of woven labels. Their great factories at Coventry, England, were levelled to the ground by the German air assault, but they are arising again larger and more impressive than ever. Belleville is proud to have this distinctive and steady-going representative of Great Britain's and the world's most important manufacturer of woven labels.

Five of Belleville's largest industries have well advanced plans formulated for factory expansion which will mean practically one hundred per cent. extension of the floor area of their factories and one hundred per cent increase in the number of their employees. One of the companies, now giving employment to 250 hands, expects to have 500 on its working staff when its new extensions are completed. Mention is made above of the proposed extension of the plant of Swift & Company at Belleville. Two of the others have blueprints out for the enlarged factory extension. Two others are earnestly studying the expansion problem which is already long overdue.

The plain fact is that this slow-going, residential-type City of Belleville has, all things considered, in the past twenty-five years, made more notable progress in the acquisition of new, varied, and altogether desirable industries than has any other town or city, in our class or population, anywhere across Canada..

Of what value is any industry, or any group of industries, to a city? The answer is so obvious that it seems foolish even to ask such a question. The coming of industries means growth, expansion, increased property values, enlarged support for hospitals, educational institutions and public services. The absence of industries means stagnation, decay, death.

Of what value are Belleville's industries to Belleville? That is a fair question. Competent economic authorities estimate that as a civic asset an industry is worth the amount of its annual payroll. The industries of Belleville have an annual payroll of more than four million dollars for wages and salaries.

In other words, if Belleville had paid four million dollars out of the public treasury to acquire these industries, it would have been good business.

But the City of Belleville did nothing of the kind. Not one dollar was paid by way of bonus or other inducement of that nature. The industries came without money and without price. The only outlay was for the comparatively insignificant amount paid to maintain the office of industrial commissioner.

Belleville's population is increasing notably. In 1911 the Dominion census gave the city a meagre 9876 inhabitants. Vernon's City Directory, published in January, 1944, after a careful census had been taken, stated that the city's population was then 17,977, an increase from 1911 of nearly 100 per cent.

Away back in 1920, the Belleville Chamber of Commerce initiated the movement which has resulted in the establishment of this grand group of industries in Belleville. Those industries are worth millions to our city. They have brought about an increase of property values that amounts to millions of dollars. Every citizen has benefited.

The Chamber of Commerce deserves your support. A membership campaign, the first in ten years, begins today. 100 new members are urgently needed to make this organization strong and efficient. You may be called upon by one of the membership committee to seek your application. If not, call the Chamber of Commerce office, and your application will be received. Belleville Team Champions

The winning of the Ontario Junior Softball Championship on Monday by the Columbian Squires of the city was an achievement to be proud of. The training and effort to keep in the forefront for the whole season speaks well of the stamina and sportsmanship of the players. The nervous tension during the final games of any contest is terrific for every individual is striving to do his utmost for he knows a single mistake might cost his team the championship. However, the Columbian Squires have covered themselves with glory, and Belleville is glad to pay homage to a team of such splendid ability.

In fact the city has been well favored by teams of ball players this year for a baseball team, the Belleville Juniors, went to the final round losing out to Dresden in the third game. This crew of youngsters deserves much credit as well for they have had many hard games of late and to lose out in the championship play was a tough break. There are plenty of fans who enjoy baseball and our Juniors gave them lots of action during the season. This is the first time the Juniors have played as a team in Ontario Baseball Association group and what they have learned this season will serve them well next year. Good going, boys!

The Batawa baseball team, though not of the city, has drawn considerable attention to itself and its community through its achievements on the diamond. It went the whole way to the Ontario Intermediate "B" finals only to lose out to Thornbury in the third and deciding game. We are told the pitching duels that featured all three games were reminiscent of the hurling of Jack "Chief" Williams, former hurling star of the C.N.R. team here when the Central Ontario Baseball League was in its prime.

Belleville has had some excellent advertising through the efforts of its ball teams and it is to be expected that some suitable acknowledgment of our gratitude will be expressed in a tangible way in the near future.

Convicted of Treason

The end of the road has come for Pierre Laval. It was a road devious and dark with treachery and greed, and he can expect no leniency as was granted Petain. His attitude was outlandish during his trial, and if he expected to impress the jury and judge with his rantings then he failed miserably for the death verdict was reached in just slightly over an hour.

Laval took the dishonorable course of collaborating with the enemy to the fullest extent. He even went so far as to broadcast, "I desire a German victory." As the prosecutor, Andre Mornet, said, "His decrees and his actions condemn him." Any man who has the effrontery to say he desired the enemy to win deserves the doom that was pronounced on him yesterday.

The thinning out of circulation of the top war criminals of France must be received with considerable satisfaction in Britain for they helped to bring France to her knees much sooner than necessary, and at a time when her fall endangered the very existence of her partner across the Channel. We think they counted on Britain giving up immediately after, and had that happened these trials probably would not be taking place at the present time. But they did not count on the bulldog stubbornness of the British people and Churchill who continued the fight when the future looked very grim.

We wonder if these men were impressed with Churchill's defiant speech in which he promised battle on the shores, in the villages and cities, along the lanes and highways and so on. Probably not. They thought England was finished and so they took the dishonorable course, they did everything they could to help the enemy. And now justice is catching up with them, one by one, but none was worse than Laval, and so he has been convicted of treason and convicted to death.

O. W. Duff Retires

The announcement last week of the retirement of Mr. O. W. Duff, divisional superintendent of the C.N.R. here, brought forth a general expression of regret by his associates at losing a grand "Boss" and the hope that he may be spared many years to enjoy his well-earned leisure.

"Ollie" as he generally is known was not a boss in the harsh sense of the word but rather one of the "Boys." He obtained the co-operation and affection of the divisional personnel by his friendly manner and fair dealing in all his associations with the men here and elsewhere. Forty years with one concern is a long time but we know they have not been long years to "Ollie" because he loved his work and was successful in it.

During his comparatively short residence in the city Mr. Duff had made a host of friends and has interested himself in the affairs of the community. It is to be hoped he will continue to live here, and if a married daughter and a handsome grandson living in Belleville are any inducement then we believe Mr. and Mrs. Duff will decide to make this their permanent home. We join their many friends in wishing for them the very best that life has to offer during their years of rest and recreation.

Nice Voices

New York City has achieved fame in so many fields that it seems quite unnecessary to bestow additional glory upon it. Yet that is what has been done by Prof. Arleigh B. Williamson, chairman of the department of speech at New York University, according to The Buffalo Courier-Express. He said that New Yorkers have the most pleasant voices in the nation. They are of good quality, he said; they have good tone and resonance. He described the New York vocal output as "an electric voice-mixture of Boston's broad A and the flatter tones of the Midwest."

The most unpleasant voices in the country, Prof. Williamson said, emerge from some Southern natives, among them residents of Alabama and Georgia and the rural areas of Missouri. He was a safe distance north of the Mason and Dixon Line when he said it. He did not give Boston much of a rating, either, although he gave it credit for its use of the broad A.

Probably most Americans desirous of improving their speech failed to realize the great opportunity they enjoyed during the dozen years in which President Roosevelt occupied the White House. His voice, in Prof. Williamson's view, was a modified, Eastern type, a mixture of New York, Groton and Harvard, described as "very pleasant." If Prof. Williamson is right in his contention that some voices can be corrected by imitating famous orators like President Roosevelt, Americans living outside of New York City lost many a free course in speech culture by failing to take full advantage of the fireside chats. Of course, recordings of them should be available for the interested.

Oil From Shale

A new method for extracting petroleum from oil shale has been developed by the Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., and placed at the disposal of the United States Bureau of Mines. It is estimated that mining and crushing the shale probably will cost $2.20 per ton — too expensive for present commercial use, but nevertheless a safeguard in case of a shortage of natural crude should send the crude price up to $3.75 or $4 a barrel.

In their experimental studies Socony-Vacuum scientists recovered between 17 and 40 gallons of oil from each ton of shale, depending on operating conditions. The highest yield represented 15 per cent by weight of raw shale.

The principle of the Socony-Vacuum retorting operation consists of passing the crushed raw shale down through a tower countercurrent to a stream of heating gases. The temperature of the shale is thus raised to about 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. After the shale is fed to the top of the retort through a suitable feed leg it flows by gravity. The heating gases are introduced at the bottom of the retorting zone.

The oil vapors and escaping gases are taken off at the top of the retort and the oil is recovered in a series of condensers. The spent shale is then withdrawn from the bottom. Low-pressure steam is introduced just above the spent shale draw-off to cool it and to recover the heat for retorting.

GOAL FOR TOMORROW

Hold onto the dream although
It may not be yours to know.
Under failure's burning sting,
To the hope of triumph cling.
Keep beyond what's now acquired
Something more to be desired.

Never to your final sun
Think your utmost best is done.
Always seek some Holy Grail
Further down life's dusky trail.
Higher or at greater length
Strive for goals beyond your strength.

Never ask to know complete
Everything of victory sweet.
Something you may dimly see
Better than what's past may be.
Hold your dreams and struggle on
Till the last good day be gone.

Stalin Adds to Officers' Privileges

Since Uncle Joe Stalin got promoted to generalissimo he seems to have swung over definitely to the side of the boss or officer class, especially upper-bracket officers, B. M. writes in The Winnipeg Free Press. We view this development with deep disappointment, because we always figured that at least here was one guy who wasn't promotion-happy, and was satisfied to hold with ourself that the common private was just as good a man as the common general.

Our opinion of the Red Army set-up used to be very high, for we vaguely understood that all ranks lived and fought under more or less the same conditions, with no special privileges being accorded to anybody — a situation which pretty well prevailed in the Canadian army after it went into action, and which pleased everybody as we figured it was one of the things we were fighting for.

Best of Everything.

Now the Soviet government, of which body Generalissimo Stalin is an influential member, announces that henceforth officers of the Red Army are to have the best of everything as far as possible (we hasten to say that so far we agree this would be a good thing) but nothing is said about the privates and N.C.O.'s who, in any man's army, do a pretty fair proportion of the fighting.

That's where the rub comes in, and frankly we think the Red Army could have given a fine lead and made a splendid gesture by announcing a lot of extra privileges for members of the sergeants' mess, but nothing for the officers, especially generals. Let them try to rub along with the privileges they already enjoy.

Increased Rations.

Among the things Red Army officers are going to get, according to an announcement in Red Star, the army newspaper, are free food rations in Category 2, in addition to their regular officers' rations, which will give them considerably more food in greater variety, than the average Russian worker. In addition, generals and colonels will have permanent orderlies to relieve them from "tedious private duties." The announcement does not specify what these tedious private duties are — taking the wife's pooch out for a walk would be one of them, is our guess.

Also, and this is the unkindest cut of all, Red Army clubs would be for the exclusive use of officers, where formerly all personnel of the Red Army were entitled to club privileges.

Unknown Elsewhere.

We know of no Allied army, certainly not the Canadian or British armies, where the official scale of rations has been higher for officers than for other ranks. But it has been true officially, that officers' clubs were exclusively for officers, and men's clubs for the men— which may be why Canadian officers so often preferred to drink in pubs, where they could have the congenial company of the boys, rather than in officers' messes.

Well, it just goes to show what human nature is. There used to be a lot of guys who would go around muttering darkly about sergeants or officers and their privileges. But as soon as they got three hooks or a couple of pips themselves they, who had complained loudest, would become the most jealous guardians of these privileges, and would seek to extend them. We would not be surprised but what that's what's happened to Uncle Joe. When he was a mere marshal, he didn't seem to care a hoot about special privileges. Now that he's been promoted, like so many other guys we know, he does. It just goes to show.

Wing Cmdr. Birchall En Route to His Home

Washington, Oct. 10 — (CP) — Wing Cmdr. Len Birchall of St. Catharines, Ont., the "saviour of Ceylon," is en route home after his deliverance from a Japanese prison camp, and is expected to reach Chicago by train soon, Canadian Embassy officials said Monday night.

It originally had been expected that Birchall would arrive by air Monday night on his way from San Francisco, and would fly to Ottawa Tuesday. Embassy officials could not explain the change in plans.

Birchall, while flying reconnaissance over the Indian Ocean, in 1942, sighted a Japanese fleet converging on Ceylon and wirelessed a warning which thwarted the attack.

He was not heard from again until his recent delivery from a Japanese prison camp in Burma.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Domestic cats frequently arch their backs and claw at the bark of a tree or the leg of a table. It is commonly supposed that the animals do this "to sharpen their claws."

How merely scratching wood or bark would sharpen the claws is hard to understand.

According to another popular notion, the cat goes through these motions to stretch and to exercise the small toe muscles on which it largely depends for a livelihood.

Scientists, however, believe that members of the feline family scratch trees and other objects to rid themselves of loose pieces of toenail.

Often bits of broken claws are found sticking in the bark of trees where cats make a practice of clawing.

In the forests of southeastern Asia trees are worn smooth by cheetahs or "hunting leopards" that regularly go there "to sharpen their claws."

Charles Darwin observed the same thing in South America and wrote in "The Voyage of the Beagle":

"One day, when hunting on the banks of the Uraguay, I was shown certain trees, to which these animals (jaguars) constantly recur for the purpose, as it is said, of sharpening their claws. I saw three well known trees; in front, the bark was worn smooth, as if to the breast of the animal, and on each side there were deep scratches, or rather grooves, extending in an oblique line, nearly a yard in length. The scars were of different ages. A common method of ascertaining whether a jaguar is in the neighborhood is to examine these trees. I imagine this habit of the jaguar is exactly similar to one which may any day be seen in the common cat, as with outstretched legs and exserted claws it scrapes the leg of a chair; and I have heard of young fruit trees in an orchard in England having been thus much injured. Some such habit must also be common to the puma, for on the bare hard soil of Patagonia I have frequently seen scars so deep that no other animal could have made them. The object of this practice is, I believe, to tear off the ragged points of their claws, and not, as the Gauchos think, to sharpen them."

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

Signed Letters, Not More Than One Page or 100 Words Long, Pertaining to Personal Health and Hygiene, Not to Disease, Diagnosis or Treatment, will be Answered by Dr. Brady if a Stamped Self-Addressed Envelope is Enclosed.

HI, GRUMPY, HOW'S YOUR CALCIUM METABILISM?

Before the war I began preparing a Little Lesson especially for the old folks. By consent of Dr. Frederick Filsinger of Buffalo, whose contributions to medical literature on the neglected subject of the care of elderly patients inspired me, I intended to issue the booklet under the title "The Forgotten People," which Dr. Filsinger had used for one of his articles. I had made considerable headway on it, in fact I announced here that it was on the fire, but I was frightened off by the response of the old folks.

You see, I had always contrived to be hard boiled enough to discourage them from telling me their symptoms. It is not that I have no concern for the health and happiness of the old folks. Nothing would please me more than to give the old folks a long distance diagnosis and the right treatment for their ailments. As a pastime that would be nearly as enjoyable as doing a crossword puzzle or reading a good mystery story. But I can't do that. It would not be fair even to the correspondent who believes I could do as well as the doctor who examines and knows him or her. I'm a quack—there's no denying that, but withal I'm a conscientious geek and I like to sleep nights.

At first blush the project seemed alluring. Except such occassional discussions of the health problems of the aged as those of Dr. Filsinger which excited my interest, there had been little or nothing done about the matter in recent years. But since Dr. Filsinger published his first papers we have had a sudden, and apparently hasty output of textbooks on geriatrics (old age and its diseases), none of which is worth the trouble of reading, and a crop of popular books for the old folks, which are a good deal better, I think.

Still and all, Cicero, Dr. Osler Dr. Ernst P. Boas, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Lungi Cornaro and George Cheyne said practically all there was to say about old age long ago. Some of the things they said were not entirely right in the light of our present knowledge, but if you undertake to write about senility you must quote those old boys with due credit or else twist their ideas into different words and pretend you have never heard of them.

Books for the old folks which I can recommend are "Treatment of the Patient Past Fifty," by Ernst P. Boas, M.D., The Year Book Publishers, Inc., Chicago, and "You Are Younger Than You Think," by Martin Gumpert, M.D., Duell, Soan and Pearce, New York. The former is perhaps intended for medical readers, although there is much in it that any layman may read with profit. The latter is for popular reading. Any book dealer can get these for you if they are not in your public library.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Doctor Duck

My wife had an operation which included among other things "repair of one ovary." Does that mean removal of the ovary? I have repeatedly asked the physician in charge but he always manages to send me away without an answer. (W. E. M.)

Answer—Repair hardly means removal. In any case the patient has a right to know exactly what was done at operation. If the doctor is on the level he will explain, in plain words the patient can understand, what was done. Perhaps the doctor prefers to inform the patient herself.

Wash the Wheat

We have whole wheat here to feed our rabbits, but it is very dusty and dirty. If I boil it will the boiling water destroy some of the vitamin B? (R.R.)

Answer—Wash the wheat by running water through it in colander or sieve. Cooking heat destroys some of the B1. How to use plain wheat in the everyday dietary is described in pamphlet "Wheat to Eat"—copy on written request (no clipping) if you providej stamped self addressed envelope. Do not confuse the wheat pamphlet with the red book "What to Eat and Why," which deals with foods, beverages, minerals, vitamins, calories, acid and alkaline foods, etc—for copy send twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope.

Difficulty Expected in Placing Many Skilled and Semi-Skilled Laborers in Reconversion Era

By FRED KERNER
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Private industry and municipal governments in Ontario, keeping pace with Provincial government reconversion plans, already have started projects aimed at providing employments for returning service personnel and men and women released from wartime employment.

Plans calling for many millions of dollars outlay and employment of thousands of persons are being formulated on the contention that difficult times for the job-seeker are bound to come. Most employers, realizing that heavy demand and short supply will not last long in the post-war period, are rapidly completing reconstruction, reconversion, enlargement modernization and rehabilitation plans on a scale that brightens the employment picture in Ontario.

During the period between VJ-day and the completion of demobilization, full employment is not expected to present a serious problem, though difficulty is expected in placing many semi-skilled and skilled laborers. There still is a scarcity of manpower, shown for example in recent figures released by Selective Service officials for Toronto.

23,100 Vacancies

N. S. S. regional officers disclosed that while there were 14,300 unplaced workers in Toronto, their records showed 23,100 vacancies. Forecasts show only about 2,000 more workers due to be laid off in the immediate future bringing the total number of layoffs since VJ-day in Toronto to less than 15,000.

Municipal governments throughout the Province have started making appropriations for public works and partially completed plans in many large municipalities will total tens of millions of dollars in construction and maintenance work when adopted.

Private enterprise, adopting the techniques and processes developed under the stimulus of the urgency of war supplies, is creating new industries and related services. A number of new enterprises also are being set up and are counted upon to create almost 20 per cent of the jobs required to provide full post-war employment.

Five Classifications

A report made recently by the Toronto Reconstruction Council showed that close to 15 per cent of persons employed at present fall into five classifications which would cease to seek employment.

In the immediate peacetime reconversion period. These are workers leaving cities to return to rural areas; youths under 20 returning to school; employees over 55 wishing to retire; married women withdrawing and single women withdrawing.

Aside from huge expenditures planned by the Toronto city council. Industry in Toronto is seeking to expand prewar activities and continue a number of wartime enterprises developed by the radar, aircraft and optical instrument industries.

Toronto city council has adopted projects totalling close to $10,000,000 to date and future plans call for a total expenditure of between $30,000,000 and $50,000,000. Already approved are plans for a new sports stadium, swimming pools, public buildings, parks, a hospital and other public health facilities.

Few Plants Closed

Few wartime plants have been closed in the Province and the percentage of layoffs has been small. Extended unemployment in the industrial areas of Western Ontario is considered unlikely and most war-job layoffs have been absorbed in other industries.

In Woodstock, recent figures show that all men laid off since the war's end have found new jobs. Selective Service officials there list 30 vacancies and many other jobs will be created with construction of a new plywood industry plant, a Canadian Legion clubhouse and more than 200 new homes as well as several municipal projects.

Chatham anticipates better opportunities in 1946 than at any other time in the city's history. Some $2,000,000 in public works has been planned and the switch-over to peacetime production will result in few layoffs. Board of Trade officers said.

Few Layoffs Experienced

Essentially a railroading city, St. Thomas has experienced few layoffs since VJ-Day. These have been primarily in American-owned railroads and were due to extensive strikes in the United States. Two new industries are being opened in the district and civic plans call for a municipal arena, new schools and additions to the hospital.

Labor difficulties in Canada and the United States may affect industry in St. Catharines to a large extent, but despite heavy layoffs, new employment opportunities are being provided daily as extensive peacetime plans are going into operation. Decision to give the green light to public works in St. Catharines has been delayed by a lack of help.

With metal industries still employing additional help, Selective Service officials in Galt are optimistic regarding peacetime employment. The city's textile industry has completed its plans for expansion and it is expected that a large number of workers, mostly female, will have to be imported to meet employment requirements. Men returning from service are being quickly absorbed into industry and municipal projects will be started as soon as materials are available.

Four New Industries

A post-war program locating four new industries in Guelph and planning an extensive program of public works will provide employment for upwards of 1,000 men, thus absorbing men laid off due to decreasing war employment and returning service personnel.

With just over 300 men and women laid off from war jobs in Kitchener, employment service figures list 1,500 vacancies at present and impending public works will create more jobs within a few months. One of Ontario's largest manufacturing cities, Kitchener has most of its plants well on their way to peacetime production.

Eastern Ontario manufacturers are adding to staff as peacetime production is increasing. Reconversion problems were few since war material was not produced in great quantity.

A report from Simcoe shows no layoffs since the war end, all manufacturing there being of a peacetime nature. Expansion plans in local plants and maintenance and construction plans by the municipality are expected to absorb all returning servicemen and provide other jobs.

Mining Industry Booming

The mining industry in the province's northern communities is reconverting at a rate equivalent to the return of skilled miners from war factories in other regions and from armed forces. More than 8,000 persons now are employed within the industry in the Porcupine area alone and another 4,000 are needed to bring mining back to its prewar level.

The Sault Ste. Marie steel industry looks to a steady level of employment within the next few months, although cancellation of war contracts resulted in about 1,000 layoffs.

In North Bay there have been no layoffs since there were no war industries in the city and district. Returning men are being absorbed steadily and municipal plans for public works are soon to be completed.

Bridge St. S.S. Honors Mr. and Mrs. Trusdale Prior to Departure

A very enjoyable evening was spent on Friday evening in Bridge Street Sunday School rooms when the teachers and officers of the Sunday School held a farewell party in honor of the superintendent, Mr. H. Trusdale, and Mrs. Trusdale, who are in the near future leaving Belleville to reside in Hamilton where he has purchased a business.

Mr. Charles Hyde who has been secretary treasurer of the school for many years acted as chairman, who with the assistance of Mr. F. R. Wotten, for a long time pianist of the school, arranged a short program, the first number being a sing song led by Mr. Wotten with Miss Leona Riggs at the piano, a solo by Mrs. Ken Bird, readings by Miss Eliza Bell and a picture drawing contest, in the dark, which caused much merriment, with Mrs. Eva Wotten and Mr. A. D. Harris being winners in the contest. Mr. C. W. Burr was then called upon to make a few remarks and after expressing the regret of all those present at the removal of Mr. and Mrs. Trusdale he and Mr. H. Cameron presented them with a beautiful table lamp and wished them many years of success and happiness in their new home.

Mr. Trusdale, although completely surprised, replied very suitably and wished the school continued success.

A number of the members of the Womans Association were also present and they presented a lovely gift to Mrs. Trusdale in recognition of her valued services to that society.

The ladies of the school and the W. A. then served delicious refreshments.

FOXBORO W. M. S.

The October meeting of the W. M. S. was held in the S.S. rooms on Thursday afternoon. The president Mrs. G. Priest was in charge and conducted the Worship Service as outlined in the "Study of Africa." Business was discussed to have the thank offering presented at the meeting held in November following a dinner in the S. S. rooms and report of the Nominating Committee will also be brought in. Mrs. W. Simmons, Mrs. W. Prentice and Mrs. J. W. Daniels were appointed to be in charge of the menu for the dinner and important thoughts are to be brought back by those attending the Sectional Rally. Cards sent to sick ones were reported by the corresponding secretary and Mrs. E. Tummon gave a lovely reading on Christian Stewardship. This was followed by a beautiful solo given by Mrs. Wm. Rombough to her own accompaniment. A complete introduction to the new Study Book was then most interestingly given by Mrs. S. C. Gay in which was shown the work accomplished by the Missionaries. Do the Africans see Jesus in us? The remainder of the Worship Service was led and a beautiful African prayer given by the president.
